PROOF, ETC., UPON FINAL ENTRY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LAMAR of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8435) to amend [illegible] relating to homestead lands.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

[illegible] act to amend section 2291 of the [illegible] 1, 1902, be, and the [illegible] United States be, and the [illegible] kind [illegible] of [illegible] in the law to which the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SPALDING] has referred. A [illegible] county was divided, [illegible] and rejected at the General Land Office. [illegible] to be made at the county seat, [illegible] is located in two districts.

Mr. SPALDING. We passed an act two or three days ago [illegible]

Mr. LACEY. This will cover cases in North Dakota as well as in Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this bill covers proof taken under the timber-culture law, under similar circumstances?

Mr. LACEY. The bill says "homestead, preemption, timber-culture, desert-land, and timber and stone act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LAMAR of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR PIPE LINES THROUGH INDIAN LAND.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3317) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant right of way for pipe lines through Indian land.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

[illegible]

[illegible] amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The following amendments recommended by the committee were [illegible]

[illegible] the word "Interior," on page 2, line 4, add:

[illegible]

[illegible] pipe-line company shall be permitted to lay its [illegible] word "lines" add the word "are," and same line [illegible]

The Clerk read the amendment recommended by the committee, as follows:

Amend by adding after line 16, page 2, "or which may have heretofore been so [illegible] subscribed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPALDING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this [illegible]

Mr. LAMAR of Missouri. The only change is by the addition of the words "county" and "parish." As the law now is, proof can only be made in the land district. It frequently happens that the land [illegible] between the county seat and the place where the land is situated, so that a man may have to go 40 or 50 miles, whereas under this law it would only be a short distance.

Mr. SPALDING. Then this changes the law back to the way it was a [illegible]

Mr. LAMAR of Missouri. I [illegible] the law back. The bill has been approved by the Land Office and by the Secretary of the Interior. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that while the bill appears comprehensive on its face, because it covers the entire section, yet the changes are very slight, and in fact gentlemen on the committee thought [illegible] in the law to which the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SPALDING] has referred. A [illegible] county was divided, [illegible] and rejected at the General Land Office. [illegible] to be made at the county seat, [illegible] is located in two districts.

Mr. SPALDING. We passed an act two or three days ago [illegible]

Mr. LACEY. This will cover cases in North Dakota as well as in Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this bill covers proof taken under the timber-culture law, under similar circumstances?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas for some explanation. Was this bill reported from a committee of the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS. The bill was considered by a subcommittee of five consisting of three from the majority side and two from the minority side. The report of the subcommittee was unanimous and was unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Was it reported in the Senate by a [illegible]?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir, and passed [illegible]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. [illegible] oil and gas [illegible]?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What does it provide as to payment of damages [illegible]

Mr. CURTIS. The damages are paid to the allottees or the Secretary for use of the tribe in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. I [illegible] the gentleman from Indiana that the Secretary of the Interior has made a number of leases to oil and gas companies in the Indian Territory; but when application was made for the right to build pipe lines, he held that under the existing law he had no right to grant any such right of way. There are a hundred wells of gas and oil near Bartlesville, Ind. T., only about [illegible] of which are being operated, and there are forty-six near Chelsea, Ind. T., of which only twenty-five are being worked, because they have no pipe-line facilities. The Government has made leases requiring them to develop the wells, and yet no way has been provided for the operators to get their oil to the refineries, and this bill simply gives the Secretary the right to grant the right of way so their products may be taken to the market.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in the way of an amendment to the bill. We are, at least I hope we are, on the eve of admitting Indian Territory and Oklahoma into the Union as States. It does not seem to me wise to bring them in manacled with corporation grants. I would have no objection to this bill, if the [illegible] operation. I do not much care how long, but it seems to me that there ought to be a provision in the bill limiting its operation to twenty years, let us say.

Mr. CURTIS. I would state to the gentleman that such a provision would not be necessary, for the reason that if Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are admitted—and I hope they will be—the reservations will still be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. There is nothing in this bill which will in any way interfere with the rights of the States, the Territories, the townships, the counties, or the cities [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I [illegible]

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman insists, to make it ten years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; or even twenty years.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will offer that amendment, limiting it to twenty years.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please indicate his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. At the end of section 1 add the following:

Provided, The rights granted herein shall not extend beyond the period of twenty years.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Insert after line 14, page 3: "Provided, That the rights herein granted shall [illegible]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to call to the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] what [illegible] effect of this amendment in assessing the damages for the [illegible] of way. Of course the temporary character of the [illegible] will be taken into consideration and the [illegible] reduced accordingly; while, as a matter of fact, the oil or gas is liable to be exhausted in ten or fourteen years; and the result would be that [illegible] this change you would simply reduce [illegible] the Indian allottee would get with [illegible] or anybody else [illegible] in its nature [illegible] only, and my friend will accomplish what he does [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I consider the question of the amount of compensation to be paid as a secondary matter.

Mr. LACEY. The point to which I want to call my friend's attention is this: [illegible] whilst [illegible] it is in fact temporary, be [illegible] temporary; consequently there is no [illegible] of the grant interfering with anybody.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That may or may not be.

Mr. LACEY. It is always so as to gas or oil.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It may be true or it may not be. I do not know as a matter of the science of oil whether it is true in this case or not. But this is true—that you ought not to start this precedent; you ought not to give anybody a perpetual easement of any sort. In all cases of this kind there ought to be a limitation [illegible] Law.

It is true that you always reserve in these grants the right to amend or repeal; but it is also true that the right is never exercised. And when you attempt to exercise it people immediately begin to cry out about "vested rights," the violation of the obligation of contracts, and all that.

Now, if the point of the gentleman be correct as a matter of fact, nobody is going to be damaged by limiting the period, because by the end of the period nobody will have [illegible] the right granted by the easement. So I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MUTUAL CLAIMS—UNITED STATES AND VERMONT.

Mr. HASKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 113) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the State of Vermont money appropriated by the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, and to adjust mutual claims between the United States and the State of Vermont.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] the proper State authorities [illegible] from [illegible]

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HASKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR ST. JOSEPH.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3720) now on the Speaker's table be taken up for present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

LAND [illegible] PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. [illegible]) [illegible] of Port Angeles, State of Washington, for park purposes certain portions of the Government [illegible]

The bill was read, as follows:

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands were read, as follows:

[illegible] word "eighteen," in line 10, on page 1, down to and including [illegible] line 5, page 2, to the end of line [illegible] out the word "three" and insert "one," and also strike [illegible] and insert the words "town [illegible] in line 14, add the following: "and in the [illegible] for public [illegible] a period of five [illegible]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Washington how much land is proposed here to be granted?

Mr. JONES of Washington. About 100 acres.

Mr. PAYNE. How much of a place is Port Angeles?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are about fifteen hundred or two thousand inhabitants. This land was an original town site laid out by the Government, consisting of three or four thousand lots; and no provision was made at that time for the dedication of any part of the land to park purposes. A part of this land was laid out in 1863. These are suburban lots, outside of the business part of the city and outside of the land which was platted into small business and residence lots. Those lots have been on the market since 1895, and only one of the blocks has been sold since that time. The land is of very little value for any other purpose than as a park. A portion of it has been reserved for military purposes; but the remainder, as I have just stated, has been on the market for sale since 1895, and only one block has been sold.

Mr. PAYNE. In other words, town lots are not in great demand there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; not at that point. The present grant comprises only about 100 acres, and the use of the land is restricted to park purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. It is my understanding that the Government has already received from the sale of lands in this town site something like $[illegible]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Something over $100,000—the original town site.

Mr. MONDELL. So that the Government is in to the extent of about [illegible] on this town site.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; to the good.

Mr. MONDELL. And this is simply transferring some of the proceeds of the lots to the town for a park?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. The property, I suppose, that the Government should [illegible] be allowed to make a dollar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Government has already made a handsome profit out of it and can not make anything more, and this is simply to let the people have a little benefit in the way of a park [illegible] purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there a quorum?

Mr. POWERS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill read as amended?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill and amendment will be again reported.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read.

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION AND APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is notified by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] that he will be unable to attend for several days to come, and he asks to be excused from attendance upon conference committees on military pension bills. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. SULZER] in place of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD], excused.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the report on the naval appropriation bill, with permission to correct a few clerical errors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the report on the naval appropriation bill, with permission to correct certain clerical errors. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks on that subject, and I ask how much time will be allowed on this side for general debate.

Mr. FOSS. I think, Mr. Speaker, I ask that general debate be agreed upon for two hours on each side, making ten hours in all, one half to be controlled by my colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], and the other half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate on the naval appropriation bill be closed after ten hours, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] and one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. FOSS was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12220) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state for the information of the committee that I have prepared, or tried to prepare, a very careful report, giving, as far as I could, an explanation for the increases in this bill.

The bill as now before the committee carries an appropriation of $[illegible]. The estimates submitted to the committee, there go in the Navy Department, amounted in all, original and supplemental estimates, to the sum of $105,962,844.34. This bill shows a reduction from those estimates of $9,624,895.40.

I recall the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HEMENWAY], in the earlier days of this session of Congress, said that if we appropriated for all the estimates asked for by the different departments of the Government there would be a deficiency of nearly $40,000,000.

Up to the time that this bill was reported from the committee [illegible] bills—the sundry civil, the legislative, executive and judicial, the army, the urgent deficiency, the diplomatic and consular, and the agricultural appropriation bills. The reduction from the estimates in these bills amounted in round numbers to about $5,000,000. The reduction [illegible] So I think this bill will afford some comfort to the Committee on Appropriations—that school of economists who exercise a watchful care over the appropriation bills of other committees as well, of course, as their own. And while it will afford comfort to the [illegible] attention to those who [illegible] the Navy, because, while this bill reduces the estimates by an amount of nearly $10,000,000, it is also an increase over the appropriation bill of last year of more than $14,000,000.

That is made necessary by the fact that we are increasing the number of men and also providing for the continued construction of our ships already authorized. Take, for instance, the matter of the increase of men. We provide in this bill for an increase of 3,000 men. We ought really to provide for more men; but we [illegible] at the present time. The [illegible] pay of the Navy [illegible] fact, and from the increase in the number of officers and the increase in the number of apprentice men in the Naval Academy, amounts to more than a [illegible] and a half dollars.

There is another increase in this bill over that of last year which I desire to call your attention to, and that is the fact that we are rebuilding the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Last year we made no appropriation, because no appropriation was required. There was [illegible] the present fiscal year, but in this bill we make an appropriation [illegible] Then, too, we provide for an increase of nearly [illegible] construction and repair. That applies to the construction of ships which have already been authorized. We also provide an increase over that of last year of $2,000,000 for armor. In this bill we are making an appropriation for our naval station down at Guantanamo of $[illegible]; then we are making an appropriation for our naval station over in Subig Bay, in the Philippine Islands, to the amount of $[illegible].

These are the large increases in this bill, and go to make up the [illegible] over last year in the appropriation bill of more than $[illegible].

Now, there are some other matters to which I desire to call the attention of the committee. The [illegible] for a naval programme for this year the authorization of one first-class battleship, carrying the heaviest armor and the most powerful ordnance for a vessel of this class, on a trial displacement of not more than 16,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action. This battle ship will cost $6,775,000. The committee also recommend two first-class armored cruisers of not more than 14,500 tons trial displacement, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful armament for vessels of their class, to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action.

Each one of these armored cruisers will cost $6,500,000. The committee also recommends the authorization of three scout cruisers of not more than 3,750 tons of trial displacement, carrying the most powerful armament for vessels of their class, to have the highest practicable speed compatible with good cruising qualities and great radius of action. Each one of these vessels or cruisers will cost $2,200,000. And in addition thereto two colliers, to be capable of accompanying the battle fleet, carrying 5,000 tons of cargo coal loaded, and having a trial speed of not less than 16 knots, each costing $1,250,000. The total cost of the battle ship, two armored cruisers, three scout cruisers, and two colliers will be $29,885,000. In this appropriation bill we make no appropriation for this programme authorized this year, because it is not necessary to do so. The appropriation for the cost of these vessels will extend over a series of years, beginning next year, and covering possibly five or six years.

This naval programme which the committee recommends this year is, in its judgment, a modest and reasonable programme, when you come to take into consideration what other countries are doing, and I may say to the committee that I have prepared here in this report a statement showing the naval programme for this year of some of the leading countries of the world. England, for instance, is building three battle ships, four armored cruisers, three protected cruisers of the third class, four scouts, fifteen torpedo-boat destroyers, and ten submarines. Germany has authorized for it naval programme this year two battle ships of 16,500 tons each, one armored cruiser of 9,500 tons, three cruisers of 3,000 tons, one gunboat, six high-sea torpedo boats. Russia has a large naval programme this year of two battle ships of 16,500 tons, two battle ships also of 12,000 tons, two armored cruisers of 6,500 tons; and Italy has a large programme.

In view of that, I think that this programme which we recommend this year is nothing more than a fair and reasonable programme, and I believe that it will be heartily approved throughout the country. If the committee desires to know the strength of foreign navies as they stand to-day, they will find it upon the last pages of this report, in which, by the aid of the Bureau of Naval Intelligence, I have placed here an illustrative diagram, showing the war-ship tonnage of the principal naval powers. Great Britain has a tonnage of a little over a million and a half—I mean to-day in commission; France, nearly 600,000 tons; Russia, a little over 400,000 tons; Germany, a little less than 400,000 tons; the United States, a little less than 300,000 tons; Italy, a little less than ours; Japan, a little less than Italy, and Austria last. I am speaking of the Navy as it stands to-day, the Navy serviceable. This diagram also shows how much the foreign countries are building. As the Navy stands to-day, based upon the ships already built, we rank fifth. Great Britain ranks first, France second, Russia third, Germany fourth.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said in some quarters that we ought to stop building up the American Navy, that the Navy is large enough, that we have too many ships already. That voice has come to us, but I do not believe that it is the voice of the American people. It has been said that we ought to spend more money on internal improvements, that we ought to deepen our rivers and harbors, that we ought to erect post-office buildings, that we ought to promote expositions; that that was a wiser expenditure of public money; but, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with that position. There is no necessity for ever drawing the issue between building up the American Navy and providing proper and needful expenditures for internal improvements. I recall the fact that during the last six or seven years, as every Member of this House will recall the fact, that we have been building up the American Navy faster than ever before, but at the same time we have also been expending more money upon internal improvements [illegible] ever before.

Why, since the Government began we have expended $150,000,000 for the deepening of our rivers and harbors, and yet since the 4th of March, 1897—and I take that simply as a convenient time—we have appropriated $150,000,000 of that $450,000,000. Not only that, but we have made greater appropriations for building post-offices during that period than ever before, we have promoted more expositions than ever before, and yet I say during all this time we have been making greater progress in the construction of the American Navy than ever before. There is no necessity of drawing the line between the Navy and internal improvements. This country is rich enough and great enough to make proper appropriations for necessary needs at home and abroad, but, sir, if the issue shall be drawn between building up the American Navy as it stands to-day and putting our money into deepening rivers and harbors and building post-offices and promoting expositions—I say if that issue should ever be drawn, though there is no necessity for it, I have no question as to where the American people will stand. Foremost and above all must stand considerations of national defense, the maintenance of our foreign policy, and the protection of American citizens all over the globe.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Navy of ours is not costing so very much when you come to take into consideration our population, our wealth, and our expenditures of public money. Last year our appropriation amounted to about $82,000,000, about $1 per capita for every man, woman, and child in the country. On the basis of per capita it is not large. Take it, for instance, on the basis of our foreign trade. Our foreign trade last year, if I remember rightly, amounted to two and one-half billion dollars. On the basis, for instance, of appropriating one hundred millions for the Navy, it would mean only 4 per cent of our foreign trade.

Take it on the basis of expenditures. Our expenditures for all the different Departments of the Government will amount, in round numbers, to $700,000,000; perhaps, to be a little more accurate, $660,000,000. Placing it on the basis of spending $100,000,000 on the Navy, that would be about 14 per cent of our total expenditures. This is not as large a proportion as we expended on the Navy in 1800. In that year the naval expenditures were 29 per cent of the total expenditures, according to a statement prepared for me. In 1820 we expended 20 per cent of the total expenditures on the Navy. In 1840, 21 per cent. In 1870 only 7 per cent. That was when our Navy had been allowed to go to pieces after the civil war. In 1880 we expended, I believe, even less than that, because then we had for a Navy only thirty-two old hulks left over from the civil war.

Then we stood twentieth among the navies of the world. We had a smaller navy even than little Chile, in South America. But it was then that the country awoke to the fact that it was necessary to build up the American Navy, and then started the onward march of its growth and development. It began under the Administration of President Arthur and has continued to the present day. Our naval expenditures in 1900 amounted to about 8 per cent of our total expenditures.

To-day, even if we should increase this bill to one hundred millions, the percentage would be about 14 per cent of our total expenditures, less than our forefathers appropriated, in percentage, one hundred years ago.

Now, take it, for instance, on a larger and broader scale—on the wealth of the country. Treat, if you please, the American Navy as the insurer of American wealth, and where do we stand? It has been estimated that the total wealth of this country is more than $100,000,000,000. If we should appropriate in this bill $100,000,000 for the American Navy, what percentage would that be of the total wealth of our country? One-tenth of 1 per cent. The Secretary of the Navy in a very able report has set forth how cheaply we have insured ourselves during the past century with the American Navy.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Would the gentleman from Illinois object to an interruption?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It would be interesting to know why the Committee on Naval Affairs recommended the construction of but one battle ship and two armored cruisers. Is that in accord with the recommendation of the Navy Department?

Mr. FOSS. The recommendation of the general board was along that line, of more cruisers this year than battle ships. The gentleman will recollect that last year we authorized five large battle ships and no cruisers, but the sentiment of the naval authorities seemed to be that this year we should authorize a larger number of cruisers.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is it the opinion of the Navy Department that there should be a certain proportion existing between the number of battle ships and the number of armored cruisers?

Mr. FOSS. There is an opinion, and the opinion is this: That we ought to have about half as many armored cruisers as battle ships. To-day we have twenty-four battle ships built or under construction, and we have to-day ten armored cruisers. With the two armored cruisers authorized in this bill, it will give us twelve, and we will have just about one-half as many armored cruisers as we have battle ships.

Mr. RIXEY. Will my colleague allow me to make a statement in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will address the Chair.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. FOSS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. RIXEY. I only wanted to suggest the fact brought out in the question by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which was as to the recommendation of the Navy Department. As I understand it, it was for one battle ship, one armored cruiser, and three protected cruisers. The bill carries one battle ship, two armored cruisers, and no protected cruisers.

Mr. FOSS. We left off the protected cruisers, and in their place put one armored cruiser. Admiral Dewey was of the opinion that we ought to build more fighting ships than the general board recommended, and for that reason the committee made that change and substituted in place of the three protected cruisers one armored cruiser.

There is one thing that we ought always to keep in mind—you cannot build a navy in time of war. When war comes you must fight. Where would Russia be to-day if she could have her [illegible] ships? But it is [illegible] for her to build navies. The war is on. In time of peace you must build [illegible] and [illegible]. It has been said that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." It has also been said, and I think I have read it somewhere, that eternal preparation for war is the price of peace.

There is another thing that we ought to take into consideration, that is, the great difference between the Army and the Navy. The Army [illegible] personnel. You can take [illegible] a great army in comparatively a short time. Men will come in [illegible] the ranks and take office, and in a few months, with proper training and discipline, you will have a well-organized army ready for the enemy's [illegible]. That is because an army is made up largely of personnel. And after the war is over these men will go back and be lost in the citizenship of the land.

But with a navy it is different. You never find on land there are two things which go to make up a navy—not only personnel, but also material. It [illegible] years to build these great battle ships. They can be used only in time of peace. It takes long years to train officers and seamen. Someone has said, and there is a good [illegible] of truth in the remark, that you can make a soldier [illegible] in the course of four years, but it takes forty years to make a sailor.

The reason of this difference between an army and a navy it behooves the American people to continue this splendid policy of building up the Navy, so that we may be prepared for war whenever that war shall come. God grant that it never shall come, but it will come—until we reach that stage of civilization when—

> Anchor and cannon be furled
> In the parliament [illegible]

[illegible] that time has not come [illegible]

There is another thing to which I want to call your attention, and that is the fact that we are [illegible] the men for the Navy and the Marine Corps of the Navy from all the States of the Union. [illegible] they are coming in larger numbers [illegible] West. For instance, last year [illegible] 390 men: from Illinois [illegible]; from Iowa [illegible]; from Kansas, [illegible]; from Kentucky, [illegible]; from Minnesota, [illegible]; from Missouri, [illegible]; from Nebraska, 101; from Ohio, 573; from [illegible]. And the farther West they come. That is where we are getting the men for the Navy to-day. And they are [illegible]. We have a training station in the East, on the Atlantic coast, and one in the West, on the Pacific, but we need a training station [illegible] for the training of the [illegible] men and gunners and machinists on land [illegible].

I [illegible] that it is necessary for me to say much to this [illegible] the policy of preparation for war [illegible] Navy. We have [illegible] time to prepare. You may say that we are isolated [illegible] years ago, but it is not so at present [illegible]. It is an important factor, because [illegible] every day. The opening of the Atlantic and the Pacific has brought a great [illegible], but is a question of days. The [illegible] and Panama [illegible] the opening of the canal. Nobody knows [illegible] nations have established [illegible] are and the [illegible] to build many a battleship [illegible].

Now, there is another thing. There are some [illegible] here [illegible]. We had a [illegible] recently down here in Santo Domingo. An American [illegible] one of our ships was shot by the [illegible] without provocation. I do not know how soon, but the time may come when we shall have to stop in and say to Santo Domingo and Haiti, "If you can not preserve law and order within your own territorial confines, then the United States will step in and do it for you."

And then, too, we are running here upon this Isthmus the Panama Canal—a project which will bring two great oceans into everlasting [illegible]—and we will need a defense for the canal. We have provided here in this bill for appropriations to the extent of $[illegible] for a naval base down at Guantanamo, right on the road to Panama. So we have that interest to look after. And then we have the larger interest of the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine. I desire to call your attention to a speech which the President made, I think, in my city, relative to the necessity of building up a strong navy for the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine. Says he:

> [illegible] of excellence in handling [illegible]

And I [illegible] upon this point [illegible] the American Navy [illegible]. We have at the head of the Bureau of Navigation Admiral Taylor, who has given a great deal of time and [illegible] toward the training of our men. Our [illegible] favor of good [illegible]. On previous naval appropriation bills he has called [illegible] ing [illegible].

Now, Mr. Chairman, I [illegible] sity for continuing this policy of building up our Navy [illegible] the great necessities which we have here at home on this hemisphere, where we are supreme.

But we have also interests in the Far East. This country is no longer an isolated country. We have the Philippines over there in [illegible] which we must protect. We are charged with them. I care not whether gentlemen upon the other side [illegible] it, and [illegible] ours, ours to protect.

We appropriated in this bill $[illegible] for a naval base over in [illegible] in that in view, to protect [illegible] same time to protect our [illegible] here.

Our [illegible] ay is growing with every hour. We are [illegible] than we have ever sold her before. [illegible] the markets for our South, the markets for our North, the markets for our East, and the markets for our West. We need a navy over [illegible] and our trade.

Not only [illegible] to-day under John Hay. [illegible] on the [illegible]. There is no nation in all the world whose influence and power are felt so much in that [illegible].

Why, you recall the trouble in China two or three years ago [illegible] would have dismembered the Chinese Empire [illegible] have done so. It was a note from this [illegible] its integrity. And only [illegible] in the war which is now [illegible] of China; and though to-day we are [illegible] miles away from China, yet we are nearer to the heart of China than any country in the world.

Gentlemen, I am not in favor of building up the Navy spasmodically, with a great naval programme this year and none next. I am not in favor of a policy that will waft as one way to-day and to-morrow another. I am in favor of a [illegible] to leave it with.

I do not want a navy for any of these purposes, but I want to see our country [illegible] that [illegible] and a great [illegible] mercy, but when she strikes may she ever have the power to strike as Dewey struck at Manila—for the flag and country! [Loud applause.]

APPENDIX.

[House Report No. 805, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.]

[illegible]

We all know that a great [illegible] going on all the time. We [illegible] copper, and [illegible] We [illegible] and we are [illegible] that for a [illegible] very active now [illegible] Navy's expenditure [illegible] already so vast, the necessity of a strong navy can not be [illegible]

SEA POWER IMPORTANT.

[illegible] and history, Captain Mahan, [illegible] sea power [illegible] Navy in itself [illegible] men, instead, [illegible] y.

[illegible] sea power [illegible] the world in the late war. Sea power passed Cuba [illegible] our naval [illegible] war. The Spanish [illegible] she could not reen[illegible] a port or a [illegible] the sea for United States [illegible] any number of men to Cuba that might become necessary in order to surround and capture the Spanish forces. It was no longer an equal combat. This proud and gallant nation was forced to yield. And so it has been always. Sea power is the glory and security of a people. The nation that possesses it starts in a [illegible]

I should much regret if anyone were to infer from what I have [illegible] I favor a policy of war and conquest. I [illegible] under any circumstances. War is a calamity, however just and necessary. The late Spanish war carried evils in its train which many are beginning to believe will far outweigh any possible [illegible] n. We [illegible] our population or a team part of our [illegible] an army brave enough, but badly [illegible] all that is ne[illegible] l. We did not have a large navy, but [illegible] way.

It was [illegible] r to that of Spain. Spain has not [illegible] l, and de[illegible] as a naval power. I do not mean to [illegible] r or character, but as a nation she has [illegible] de like that of the north[illegible] heroes like [illegible] his [illegible] ns, but it was no match for our [illegible]

[illegible] Santiago were very easy victories. [illegible] on the other. Compare these suggestive figures with the naval [illegible] and [illegible] tory, including that battle which is painted on our walls, when Perry had to quit his sinking ship to fight in another, or when John Paul Jones, by sheer endeavor and with his decks [illegible] with blood, upheld the glory of our young [illegible] valor and suffering.

SPAIN A WEAK MARITIME POWER.

Over this easy victory against Spain folly has gone wild and many interpret it as a proof that we are [illegible] of us. For one I [illegible] with a great mar[illegible] weak one, and we have no right to assume [illegible] a French, or a German ship is like a Spanish ship [illegible] to our own. The [illegible] if [illegible] have to meet one of them it will be a very different [illegible] from that at Santiago or Manila. Our officers and men will do all that we have a right to ask, but it will be no holiday task.

CONSIDER OUR NAVAL STRENGTH.

Mr. [illegible] man, it is important for us to consider, first, what is [illegible] what are the [illegible] what are they [illegible] and what are we [illegible] and with this House [illegible] this point with a [illegible] I shall not do so. [illegible] of a [illegible] is not a [illegible] of publicity and [illegible] England, Russia, [illegible] and Germany. All these p[illegible] to the legislative bodies to [illegible] authority [illegible] to [illegible] for the necessary [illegible] and [illegible] ty. I venture the [illegible] that there is not a government in Europe that does not know exactly our strength and our weakness, how many fighting battle ships we have, how many we are building, and how long we will have to wait for their completion. Let us, therefore, look the truth fairly in the face.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to speak, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. [illegible] I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is popular to be a big navy. Its achievements are [illegible] the [illegible] of people and [illegible] for the American people. The tr[illegible] and policy of the [illegible] a sea force for defense rather than [illegible] a large [illegible] army, as well as the [illegible] powerful navies, have [illegible] to develop a sentiment favora[illegible] an increase of our navy. [illegible]

The policy [illegible] In a time of peace [illegible] the naval service [illegible] Navy and for the Marine Corps there is provided [illegible] new construction, armor, and armament [illegible] and the balance is for repairs, the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, supplies and accounts, equipment, yards and docks, and public works at various naval stations, and for the Naval Academy.

This bill carries $14,461,347.51 more than the bill for the current fiscal year.

Since 1890 the naval expenditures have amounted to the sum of $644,526,793.98. With the amount appropriated by the pending bill the expenditures will have aggregated at the end of the coming fiscal year $740,861,867.82. To complete vessels already authorized will require $50,891,699, and for the increase authorized by this bill $29,885,000 more; in all, $80,776,699.

These figures give some idea of the enormous expenditures required for the Navy. From June 30, 1898, to June 30, 1905, provided that the amount carried by this bill is expended, the expenditures for the Navy will aggregate $[illegible]. I have [illegible] statement showing the annual appropriations for the Navy for each year ending June 30, from 1890. This statement is prepared by the Treasury Department. In 1890 the appropriation was $[illegible]. Increases have been made from year to year until the present appropriation of $[illegible] is submitted for consideration.

It is legitimate to inquire at this time, What is meant by a big navy? To what extent is our naval force to be increased? What object is in view and what is to be accomplished by the addition contemplated? I profess, Mr. Chairman, that there may be some who will take this as an opportunity to charge me with that new form of disloyalty [illegible] in this country. To suggest that there can be something better, to suggest that the administration of public affairs may possibly be improved, or to inquire for reasons that may be [illegible] to the Executive, or to the dominant party, is [illegible] upon some partisans as disloyalty [illegible] to the country, or, at all events, to the Administration. At the risk of having this charge made, I shall [illegible] the inquiry already suggested.

It was [illegible] to intimate that the new contract [illegible] for the Navy should be sufficient [illegible] country busy. The unfortunate disagreement [illegible] of the shipbuilding trust [illegible] Congress has not made a definite [illegible] of what would constitute an adequate naval force. I have been unable to find in the reports from the Navy Department any recommendation as to what the naval force should ultimately be. Should not some consideration be given to that question now that the annual appropriation has reached the [illegible] mark?

To whoever can read the signs of the times the programme of the Government is plain. I am aware that official denial will be made of [illegible] but the action of this Government [illegible] unmistakably [illegible] a naval force that shall [illegible] Chief of Germany. At present this country has eleven first-class battle ships of 135,120 tons, and is building three more of 166,700 tons; twelve other battle ships and coast defense vessels of 47,945 tons; two armored cruisers of 17,[illegible] tons, and in the course of construction eight of 111,[illegible] tons; two protected cruisers, [illegible] of 14,[illegible]; three building of 23,[illegible]; [illegible] protected cruisers, second class, [illegible] tons; four building, 12,400 tons; twenty-three other cruisers and scouts (above 1,000), 32,773; two building, 3,[illegible]; or, when all the vessels now under construction are completed, the United States will have a navy consisting of [illegible] tons.

Germany has fourteen first-class battle ships of 214,[illegible] tons, six building, 77,[illegible] tons, sixteen other battle ships and coast defense vessels of 56,[illegible] tons; three armored cruisers, 15,[illegible]; three building, 24,[illegible]; [illegible] protected cruisers, second class, [illegible] tons; four building, 12,000 tons; thirty-one other cruisers and scouts (above 1,000), 32,[illegible]; four building of 14,715 tons; in all, when completed, [illegible] tons.

The celebrated [illegible] programme of Germany calls for thirty-[illegible] battle ships, fourteen armored cruisers, and twenty-[illegible] small cruisers. At the time [illegible] was adopted she had twenty-seven battle ships, twelve large cruisers, twenty-seven small cruisers. The law then enacted provided for the gradual replacement by new construction of [illegible] battle ships, ten large cruisers, and twenty-seven small cruisers. It is the opinion of many experts who have analyzed this programme, however, that by the year 1917, up to which time the programme extends, Germany will then have a greater fleet than that laid down on paper. This will come to pass from the fact that the ships mentioned will not be all scrapped simultaneously, and further that additional auxiliaries are created from time to time, it now being understood that no more second and third battle ships will this year be authorized for foreign service.

In a hearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs on the 6th of the present month Admiral Dewey, speaking of the proper size of our sea forces, says that it should consist of forty-eight battle ships and half as many armored cruisers. This is the opinion of the general board which has been considering the scheme for three years. The Admiral in his statement uses this significant language:

> If it was we ought to be [illegible] that it looks to attack us. I think if we were to have forty-eight battle ships in twenty years they would be needed.

This statement, Mr. Chairman, confirms my assertion that our naval programme, so far as it has been formulated at all, is based upon the theory that our naval force should be greater than that of Germany. And that apparently is the only consideration given any serious thought, for this programme will leave us still slightly behind France and somewhat ahead of Germany.

If this country is to aim at such a navy as the Admiral has in mind, should it not be given careful consideration at this time? Who is prepared to say that the policies of our Government, or even its necessities, require that at the end of twenty years this country shall have a navy practically equal in power to that now possessed by Great Britain? It means the expenditure of at least $[illegible] additional for construction outside of the $80,776,699 required for the vessels under construction and authorized by this bill, and an enlisted force of at least 100,000 men.

Great Britain has to-day fifty first-class battle ships and nine in the course of construction, with a total tonnage of 811,600 tons. She has twenty-seven armored cruisers and fourteen building, with a total tonnage of [illegible]. Her policy is easily understood, for it has been definitely admitted and pursued for many years. It is her policy to have a navy equal to that of the combined navies of any other two powers that can possibly be arrayed against her. Yet last spring a protest was made in the House of Commons against the tremendous burdens that were being imposed upon the people by reason of her enormous naval programme. From the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs it appears that France has reached the limit of her expenditures, yet there can be no decrease, but there must be, for various reasons, a continued increase in her naval expenditures.

This country has undertaken a naval programme which, although never formulated by authority, yet is as definite as that of any other power. Is it fear that prompts a declaration by the naval authorities or by Congress that our Navy must be made to be as great as that which Great Britain now has, with the consequent burdens upon the people? Is it fear that such a declaration would meet with instant disapproval by the country? What would be done with such a [illegible]? I have searched [illegible] for information on the subject. The information obtainable is of the most meager character. On January 25, 1904, the only statement on the subject which I have been able to find was made by Captain Pillsbury to the Naval Committee. In reply to a question as to what he thought we should have, Captain Pillsbury, and bear in mind that he was discussing, he said:

> That is a great question. We are [illegible] have a [illegible] in the Pacific [illegible] I thought we should have [illegible] we have [illegible] I thought we should have [illegible] we have [illegible] I thought we should have [illegible] we have of our Government for opening up the isthmian canal. This will unite the two great oceans, opening up a waterway which will so develop our resources that we will rank first in commercial importance among the nations of the world. This gigantic scheme is estimated to cost $[illegible] money to be spent in a tropical country, which will benefit us but little except in the commercial results obtained. This canal, when completed, will open up a tidal wave of trade in the South that will, in my judgment, change the business center of this nation.

Admitting the great necessity of this canal and the expediency of its early completion still an equal sum of money if spent upon the public roads of this country would give to each county or parish in the United States at least 50 miles of macadam road, and this money so expended would pass through the channels of trade, benefiting the class who have paid more money and received less in return than any other class of our citizenship, and would ultimately return to our Treasury. If the wish of the substantial farmer could be realized and a first-class macadam road could be built from each county seat in four different directions—east, west, north, and south—the effect would be magical and a new world of industry, energy, and internal development would be opened up to the tiller of the soil.

The total sum for transportation of farm products, lumber, etc., to the railroads is $1,000,000,000 annually. A careful investigation discloses the fact that the average cost of transporting a ton over a mile of ordinary country road is 25 cents, while a conservative estimate shows that over a good macadam road the cost is but 10 cents per ton, thus saving to the farmer $600,000,000 annually! This enormous saving would amply repay the appropriations made by the Government. This estimate is based upon the idea of a complete system of roadways all over the United States. Congress has recently appropriated to the St. Louis exposition nearly $10,000,000; for rivers and harbors there has been expended more than $500,000,000, and the appropriation at this session of Congress will in all probability be something like $60,000,000. While these appropriations are greatly needed and have combined to make this country the leading commercial nation of the world, it is now an opportune time to begin a system of road building by national aid that will make us the greatest agricultural nation of the world.

The surplus in the National Treasury is more than $225,000,000, money which has been collected from the people of the United States, and which should be turned back into the channels of trade by making needed improvements rather than have this enormous sum of money idle in the Treasury or used by rich banking corporations without their paying any interest to the Government. The banks now have of this surplus sum $140,000,000.

No farmer ever objects to the payment of taxes when he gets value received; but conditions are such that it matters not who much tax he pays he can not build these roads without assistance from the National Government. This building of highways is no fanciful scheme, it is no speculation, it is no dream, but it is a substantial necessity. It is impossible to estimate the advantages of good roads; it makes distances unimportant; it enables the farmers to market their products at a minimum cost, thus doing for them what we have done for every other class of our citizenship, and preventing the exodus of our best young men from the farms to seek a livelihood in a city and dwarf the greatest vocation open to development, for we should remember "that the farmer is the man that feeds them all." Good roads are an educational as well as a commercial necessity. Count the weary miles of muddy roads that the farm boy and girl may walk to reach the rural schoolhouse and compare this with the few blocks of paved streets that the city boy and girl walk to reach the magnificent graded school system, and remember that a mile of macadam road in the country will make this trip to the schoolhouse a pleasure; it will make the farmer's load to market lighter; it will lift him out of the mud and mire. It will do for him what the great Jefferson inaugurated in the beginning of our country's history.

The public highways do not belong to the farmer; they are the property of the public and are used by the pleasure seeker, the rich, the poor, the producer and the nonproducer alike, and yet the farmer has had and still has the burden of building and keeping them in repair. This is wrong, and there should be no discrimination, but every citizen, through the Government, should aid in building the public roads, and the burden should not longer be borne by the farmer alone.

It is useless to contend that actual progress will ever be made in the building and maintenance of a permanent extended system of macadam roads without the aid of the National Government. True, it may in some States be done, but in others it can not. The farmers of this country, with their present burden of direct and indirect taxation, are unable to bear this expense, and I am forced to believe that if a great national system is organized by which from fifty to one hundred and fifty millions of dollars would annually be available for road purposes for ten years the construction of good roads will have reached that point where the income from the increased price in farm lands and the saving expense in marketing farm products will enable the farmer to carry this work to completion.

The city resident has his mails delivered at his door many times a day, but the farmer in most cases must travel miles to get his mail even once a day and in some cases thrice a week. This unequal advantage is caused by the inability to have a network of rural mail routes as the direct result of bad roads.

We have entered the threshold of a new century and should create not only for ourselves but millions yet unborn a system of public highways to be left as a heritage for the whole people. We now have an opportunity to assist the producer, the man who lives by the sweat of his brow, by giving him a well-regulated system of good roads, and this can only be done by national aid. This proposition is a practical and not a theoretical one. Money spent to improve the public roads of this country will benefit more people and promote internal development in a greater measure than for any other purpose. Education, civilization, and progress go hand in hand with good roads, and it is our plain duty to build them.

We have reached a point in our national history when under the present system of taxation millions of dollars will lie idle in the Treasury or be used free of charge by gigantic banking corporations or be expended for the benefit of those who paid the major portion of the same into the Treasury. In reviewing the history of large appropriations of money for various purposes, aggregating millions, we find that more than 60 per cent of it is contributed by the farmers of the United States; yet less than 10 per cent of it goes back into improvements designed for their benefit.

Of our export trade of $1,400,000,000 the farmers of the country furnish nine hundred millions; in fact, the farmers form the bone and sinew of our country; they are the producers of the wealth of the nation and are entitled to recognition.

In all the bloody conflicts, both domestic and foreign, in which our people have engaged, the farmers have stood in the forefront of the firing line; they have responded at all times to their country's call, and have demonstrated their courage and patriotism on every battlefield, when to the battlefield was but to the grave; and it is the duty of this Congress to look upon this measure with favor and by the inauguration of this system mark this as an epoch in the history of this country unparalleled in the development of industrial resources.

Large sums of money are constantly being raised and used for public purposes, and I do not wish to be understood as opposed to appropriations for rivers and harbors and other beneficial improvements which will promote progress and prosperity, but I intend to agitate the principal aid for roads and the just recognition of the farmers of this land alongside of and four square with any other appropriation for a public purpose.

The amount asked for of $24,000,000, in my humble judgment, is insufficient as compared with the important work mapped out to be performed. Instead of $24,000,000 annually, as provided for in the various bills now pending before Congress, we ought to make it $100,000,000. This amount of money may seem extravagant, but when compared with appropriations of the last decade it sinks into insignificance.

The prime object of all legislation along this line and the reason for public appropriations are to aid the greatest number of people, thereby doing the most good, and it must be conceded that this proposition will give relief to more people than the same amount of money appropriated for any other public purpose. The building of hundreds of miles of first-class roads in each of the States of this Union would enhance the value of real estate, would enable the farmer to market his surplus with but little expense, and prove a blessing as well to the agricultural life. It would be a just recognition of those who have had so little in the past and yet have contributed their all to our nation's greatness, and I trust and believe that this all-important question will receive that consideration that its importance demands. We can have, we will have, we must have, better highways by national aid.

The intelligence, advancement, and prosperity of our country is demonstrated by the typical commodious country farmhouses, the rural school buildings, and the neat and magnificent churches found in every section of our land, evidences of a great Christian nation. It is left for this generation to inaugurate a system of road building by national aid that will ring around the world as the one essential work to make this the greatest country on the face of the globe—"man's paradise." [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on December 14

last I addressed the honorable Committee of the Whole House on my bill (H. R. 4482) entitled "An act for the relief of tobacco growers of the United States." I demonstrated then that our tobacco laws were so vexatious in their operation on the tobacco grower and those who purchased his leaf tobacco, and the right of a tobacco grower to stem and twist his own growth for sale or gift and to sell his growing crop, that the grower was abandoning this industry to avoid bankruptcy, which means that if the present laws remain intact millions of revenue will be lost to the Government.

If the relief which we ask is given to the tobacco growers and any person who deals or wants to deal in leaf tobacco, the tobacco growers' property will be restored and the revenues [illegible] in [illegible] or practically [illegible].

I have read some history and law, and studied both, but I say to you candidly that of all the laws regulating the agriculturist and the products of the farm none are so oppressive, obnoxious, and vexatious to the farmer as those which control the tobacco [illegible] and his tobacco crop, both in his hands and the hands of his purchaser. Indeed, gentlemen, they are brutal. This word appears inapt, but I use that word because it gives you the practical operation and effect of these laws in a word.

I shall discuss these laws. The bankrupt condition of the tobacco grower being confessed and undisputed, I shall show the laws and people lurking behind them are destroying this great interest. I shall shock you gentlemen, I am sure, when I read these laws to you and demonstrate [illegible] practical operation, unless you have done as I have, dug down through forty years of internal-revenue legislation and familiarized yourselves with this, the most complex portion of our jurisprudence.

From 1816 to July 1, 1862, we had no internal-revenue laws, the revenue report of 1897 informs us. Our present system of tobacco laws is based upon the parent act, July 1, 1862, which was [illegible] by the act of June 20, 1868, but portions of the latter act [illegible] the law. All these acts were war measures of forty years ago. They were intended to be "temporary." They have become permanent, while recent amendatory enactments are destroying our tobacco-growing industry.

On March 28, 1862, the committee reported to the House a bill proposing a tax of 3 cents per pound, as follows:

[illegible] leaf or stem, unmanuf[illegible]
That the [illegible]
when ma[illegible]

This clause was stricken out by order of the committee which reported it.

Both the Committee of Ways and Means reporting this clause and the House refused to tax the farmer's leaf. They refused to tax his leaf and stemmed tobacco, and they called, as this clause reads, both leaf and stem "unmanufactured" tobacco and as exempt from additional tax until "manufactured." The present law declares stemmed tobacco "manufactured" in the hands of the grower if he sells or gives it away. It is "manufactured" in the hands of all other parties when they sell to consumers. Leaf tobacco is "manufactured" when thus sold under the present law if sold by anyone except the man who grows it. I will explain this more fully later.

Mr. Horton, in reporting the "clause," March 28, 1862, just alluded to, explained why Congress should not tax the leaf or stem. He said:

[illegible] ple of that paragraph, and I wish to state the [illegible] Chairman [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] are directed me to move to strike out this clause, think-[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] tary not excepting my colleague from the M[illegible]

This cl[illegible] out and the tax increased from 5 to 10 [illegible] tobacco, treated in the next clause of the bill.

I will read that clause:

On tobacco, cav[illegible] ping, twist, fine cut, and ma[illegible]
[illegible]

The debate continued as follows:

Mr. HORTON. I move to amend that clause by inserting "ten" in place of "five."

The amendment was adopted.

When Congress, to prosecute a war, was framing a tariff bill, it refused to tax the farmer's leaf or his stemmed tobacco. Forty years thereafter, in time of peace, the farmer's own raising in the leaf he can sell free of tax, but his purchaser, selling to a consumer, must pay a tax on that natural leaf, and the grower must pay a tax if he twists or stems his tobacco for sale or gift.

TAX ON HAND TWIST.

Congress levied a tax of 30 cents per pound on "hand-twisted" tobacco on March 3, 1865, to July 3, 1866 (but repealed the law within sixteen months). During this time, a year and four months, the revenue this law produced amounted to—

Aggregate number of pounds taxed were 46,850. (See Internal Revenue Report, 1897, Table G, p. 395 Appendix, and Ex. Docs. Nos. 55 and 56, 2d sess. 39th Cong., p. 330, and Ex. Docs. Nos. 5 and 6, 2d sess. 40th Cong., pp. 86 to 97 and 337.)

TAX ON HAND TWIST, ETC., AND FINE CUT.

From July 13, 1866, to July 20, 1868 (twenty months), Congress levied a tax of 24 cents per pound on "hand twist, etc., and fine cut." The whole tax for the twenty months amounted to $520,451.69. For the year 1867 it was only $231,730.38. Aggregate number of pounds (taxed, of course), 1,734,839. This is verified by the authorities just cited.

When "hand twist" was taxed separate and alone, as in 1865 and 1866, the revenue therefrom was a mere song—$14,055—and even when "hand twist, etc., and fine cut" (combined) are taxed for twenty months at 24 cents per pound the tax is only $520,451.

These rates were 30 cents and 24 cents per pound. The rate under the present law, if the farmer stems or twists his tobacco for sale, is 6 cents, or one-fifth and one-fourth, respectively, of the rates of 1865 and 1866 and 1866 to 1868.

The tax on manufactured tobacco, whether done by hand or machine, is 6 cents per pound. We want the farmer given the right to "hand" twist, free of tax license and limitations, his own growth of leaf tobacco.

If when Congress in 1865 taxed "hand twist" at 30 cents per pound and received only $7,892 tax, surely but little revenue will be diverted from the Treasury if the grower is allowed to hand twist his own growth for gift or sale when the tax is 6 cents. In 1865 at 6 cents tax per pound the revenues would have amounted to a little over $1,300.

We want the grower to be allowed to "hand" stem his own growth free of tax or limitation. He is required now to pay a tax of 6 cents per pound if he stems to sell or give away. The grower can stem or twist his own growth free of tax for his own personal use. He can not give it away to his son, his wife, his daughter, his son-in-law, to the church, or charity without paying a tax of 6 cents.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

In Tennessee and Kentucky dark-tobacco districts it cost last year 6 cents per pound to raise tobacco, and it is [illegible] sold at all, to-day in Robertson County, Tenn., at 3½ cents per pound on an average.

MANUFACTURING—WHAT IS.

Under the present law, if the grower changes the "natural condition" of his own growth and raising of tobacco, by hand or machine, [illegible] he must pay a tax of 6 cents per pound. (The change wrought by curing, of course, is not manufacturing.) This, mind you, is the law, if the grower manufactures even his own growth. He is not allowed to buy other growers' tobacco without qualifying as a dealer or manufacturer.

There is no such thing as free trade in leaf tobacco. There is free trade in corn, wheat, and other agricultural products. We want leaf tobacco in any and all persons' hands untaxed, unrestricted—free trade, in other words, in leaf tobacco in the hands of anyone. As it is, all persons except the grower with his own crop must pay a tax of 6 cents per pound to sell to consumers. But little, if any, leaf tobacco is thus sold. Leaf tobacco is consumed mostly by the manufacturer and in exporting.

As there is little or no leaf tobacco sold to consumers by nonproducers, but little revenue, if any, would be diverted from the Treasury if the nonproducer were allowed to sell the leaf to consumers. This is one limitation we want removed. The other limitation is, we want the grower and all other persons to be allowed to sell and deal in leaf tobacco, the tax to be placed entirely on the manufactured product.

GROWER MUST DELIVER IN PERSON.

The grower can sell to anybody his own growth and raising without any limitations whatever, except he is required to deliver his own growth and raising to his purchaser. He can not delegate this a "privilege." His son, his wife, his daughter, or [illegible] law can not deliver for him. His agent can only "solicit" [illegible] the grower. If the grower employs a "registered [illegible] he can [illegible] only and he [illegible] to [illegible] what the grower can do. Think of [illegible] Yes; leaf tobacco of his own [illegible] in construing these [illegible]

The ordinary agent can solicit "sales" for the grower. He [illegible] to the three [illegible] I have named—dealer, manufacturer, and exporter.

GROWING CROP TAXED IF RESOLD.

[illegible] to consumers! That is the law laid down by Commissioner Yerkes. Six cents [illegible] tax on the growing stalk, the growing leaf! The tax itself is prohibitory. The law is [illegible] growing stalks of tobacco by the pound. What [illegible] of such a proposition? But it is the law. Here is what Commissioner Yerkes wrote April 7, 1902, to C. F. Werndon, Winnsboro, Ky. (Treasury Decision 49[illegible]):

The office has decided that where a grower of tobacco sells his crop [illegible] it is [illegible] privileged to resell the tobacco to consumers without payment of a tax.

Reading these laws, gentlemen, clearly convinces me that it was the intention of somebody somewhere to hobble the tobacco grower and turn him over to the manufacturer, the dealer, and the exporter. The American tobacco trust and the Regie combine people have [illegible] within the [illegible] States. Under these laws they are able to control and [illegible] the personal liberty of the grower and the price of his tobacco. They dictate to the price. The law dictates the way the leaf shall be sold and to whom sold. It [illegible] forces the grower to submit at any price [illegible] The grower's freedom of action is destroyed. The purchaser of his leaf is practically dictated by the law, and that purchaser is the tobacco trust lurking behind the wall these laws have built.

Did you ever hear of a law that was calculated to hobble any class of workmen or laborers that more completely succeeds than this? The grower and his agent or both kind are restricted. Under no circumstances can the ordinary agent deliver. He simply solicits. The "grower" as agent can sell [illegible] The grower can deliver [illegible] he is. The son, however filial, is denied the privilege of [illegible] ing or wanting to help his aged father or crippled mother or [illegible] infant sister or brother, growers of tobacco.

A few days ago, in reply to my letter, the Acting Commissioner, William, wrote me as follows:

The farmer and grower is unrestricted in the sale or other disposition of to[illegible] a manufacturer, which was furnished you in a letter addressed to you on the 24 in[illegible]

I will here stop to read the opinion, No. 497, of Commissioner Yerkes to Mr. Herndon, already alluded to, and make my comment general as I proceed.

Here is the law:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, [illegible]

SIR: In your letter dated the 24 instant [illegible] concerning the sale of leaf tobacco by and for farmers who raise the tobacco or who receive the same from tenants or who buy the same while it is growing in the fields, and also whether a number of farmers may employ an agent to [illegible] and sell the tobacco for them.

[illegible] as rent for land, without [illegible] of the person to whom the tobacco is sold and delivered. This delivery is one which the farmer or grower can not delegate to another person.

[illegible]

Blind, deaf, dumb, without any arms or legs, overcome with old age or misfortune, he must make his own trade and deliver his own goods.

HIS AGENT IS LIMITED IN POWERS.

His right to employ an agent, his power under the common law and every other law short of savagery—the principal has the right to employ an agent and give that agent with the power [illegible] pay him a fixed "salary." [illegible] by Mr. Yerkes in this opinion.

REGISTERED DEALER AS AGENT IS ALSO LIMITED IN POWER.

Now, he can employ a registered dealer to sell for him, but [illegible] States the registered dealer can not do any such thing [illegible] he is the agent of the grower. He can only sell to registered dealers in leaf, to manufacturers of tobacco or cigars, or to exp[illegible]

I [illegible] 497 again:

A farmer or grower of tobacco may place his tobacco in the hands of a [illegible]

This is the law, gentlemen, although the principal of this agent—that is, the tobacco grower—can sell to anybody anywhere his [illegible] he raises. Thus the law limits even a legalized [illegible] as agent, while any other agent can only "solicit" sales. Thus the freedom of the grower and the law of agency are destroyed or so minimized as to practically imprison the grower and force the sale of his tobacco into the hands of purchasers whom the law [illegible]

Is not your sense of justice shocked at such a law, and does not this petition of the tobacco grower appeal to you, gentlemen? Can you deny his petition that the liberty of the tobacco grower be [illegible] his. The farmer can sell his corn in the stalk, as we [illegible] sold, you know, without [illegible] tion. You have done so; so have I. But the purchaser of the tobacco crop in the field growing must sell it by the pound at 6 cents while it is yet in the stalk, if he sells to consumers. How does that strike you, gentlemen, for a just law? For a law that is calculated to [illegible] thing else on top of the earth except the tobacco trust. The Government should blush if it has a [illegible]ence, with a face made of steel, at imposing such a law, or [illegible] revenues in such a manner.

The internal-revenue system has always been to our people obnoxious, vexatious, vicious, tyrannical, and exacting to the very last pound of flesh. But the people have borne it with a struggle, but murmuring all the time. They have lived along, kept out of the poorhouse, off the vagrant force, paid [illegible] give up one liberty after another, [illegible] have been compelled to surrender. Labor, black and white, is leaving the tobacco fields, going to the cities, the railroads, and mining camps, while the tobacco grower, broken in spirit, bankrupt in money, [illegible] has turned from tobacco growing, a remunerative business previous to a few years ago, and is now embarking in "truck" crops—gardening.

RECENT LAWS THAT ARE OBJECTIONABLE.

Several letters that I have here of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue show that section 69 of the act of August 28, 1894, and section 3 of the act approved April 12, 1902, are the objectionable laws, at least in part. I have here letters which the Commissioner sent me March 12, 1903, being copies of letters he had written to other parties. I will read them in full. They are short and plain:

J. P. DUNLAP, Esq.,
Dwight, Butler County, Nebr.

MARCH 6, 1903.

SIR: In your letter dated 28th ultimo, addressed to Mr. Hyde, you ask whether a person has the right to case tobacco for his own use only when none is sold or offered for sale.

[illegible] snuff, whether [illegible] ing, or otherwise [illegible] Section 3 of [illegible] April 12, 1902, [illegible] a tax of 6 cents per pound on all [illegible] law are not construed as preventing a person [illegible] when none is sold [illegible] your [illegible] mation.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, August 7, 1903.

C. E. MERIWETHER, Esq.,

SIR: In reply to your [illegible] 4th instant, you are advised that a farmer or grower [illegible] a farmer or grower to sell and deliver his [illegible] a farmer to con[illegible] ject to tax under [illegible] section, and is [illegible] tobacco, will be [illegible] section 3 of the act of [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] of [illegible] ns Nos. [illegible] 36, a copy of which has been forwarded to your address [illegible] a separate cover.

J. C. WHEELER, Deputy Commissioner.

You will see from these letters how the grower of tobacco is restricted; that when he sells stems or twists the tobacco he is a manufacturer of tobacco, and that he must box it up in a certain way, labeled and stamped. If he changes the natural condition of the tobacco except to cure, except for his own use, he is a manufacturer, and if he sells it changed from its natural condition it is manufactured, and he must box it up. The act of April 12, 1902, the latest law on the subject, I believe, requires him to box it up, etc., which is a burden—indeed, a prohibition. Mind you, now, this is the farmer's own growth that he must thus manipulate.

I addressed a letter to Commissioner Yerkes March 12, 1903, and his reply covers this question very thoroughly. The whole letter is printed in my [illegible], and I hope you will all read it. I asked him seven questions categorically. Before I finish my speech I will give you all seven of the answers. I will now read five of them. Mr. Yerkes said:

From the [illegible] premises I am constrained to answer your questions cate[illegible] never impose [illegible] the [illegible] only upon [illegible] per pound is imposed upon all to[illegible] intended for his own personal use [illegible] twist tobacco for his own use without incurring liab[illegible] is regarded as manufacturing, and a [illegible] tax. If [illegible] turer of [illegible] and stamp his product, as pro[illegible] for sale manufactured tobacco, snuff, or [illegible] as a dealer in tobacco."

The grower can stem and twist his growth for his own personal use, but he can not do so to sell. He can not give it to his servant, if he smokes or chews tobacco. He can not give it to his son or to his neighbor as a Christmas gift. He can not give it to the church or charity, unless he pays a 6-cent tax thereon per pound.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. You ought to state also in that connection that every one of these separate twists he fixes up is a separate crime. Down in my neighborhood once there was a deputy United States marshal concluded he would make some money out of this business; and he had one fellow harnessed up with 250 counts in an indictment because he had twisted 250 twists. The whole thing ought to be broken up. It is an outrage.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I presume that was on the ground that one twist was a separate package and a violation of the law in each instance.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman; I am only too glad to get Members interested in this reform. I know my friend from Missouri, as United States district attorney, informed me not long ago that, under oath, he had to prosecute many a farmer for unintentionally violating the law by twisting his tobacco; that he had to prosecute them although he was opposed to the law. My friend from North Carolina knows more about tobacco than I ever knew. I have raised everything on a farm except tobacco.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I want to say that I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee in this matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know that. I have never seen a time when I was right that the gentleman from North Carolina was not delighted to agree with me; and I always agree with him, because he is always right.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Thank you, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not raise tobacco, and I would not raise any if I could. This reform is with me not only a matter of official duty, but personal pleasure. I have at heart the condition of the farmers in my country and of others in the tobacco-growing region.

Take up the Tobacco Leaf, a copy of which I have before me, edited in New York. Read its review this week of the condition of the tobacco growers in the United States. There are but few, if a single State, that the growers are not complaining about the price of leaf tobacco, being from 20 to 30 per cent lower today than it was a year ago. Think of those people down in Robertson County, in my district, where in part the illustrious "First Tennessee Regiment" came from—a body of men that President McKinley thought so well of because of their heroism and devotion to duty that he spoke of them praisingly time and time again; and he took nearly all of its officers and appointed them to positions in the United States Army, where they are to-day. Those men acquitted themselves with credit. Yet if they were back there today in Robertson County on their farms they could not make a living.

I was told a few days ago by Mr. Hall, the secretary of my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], that he had to go home to take care of the tobacco tenants on his farm, of whom he said, "Not one could pay his tobacco rent this year." Think of that!

Mr. Chairman, I have read to you to show that even hand-stemming or hand-twisting tobacco is, under the law and as construed at the Internal-Revenue Bureau, manufacturing. If, to sell or give away, you stem or twist your own growth of tobacco by the use of your own hands—by the ten fingers that God gave you that you might make a living—without paying a tax, you are violating the law.

Under the law and the decisions of Commissioner Yerkes and his predecessors, changing the tobacco at all from its natural state, except to cure it, is manufacturing. That is the law under the acts of 1894, 1897, and the McKinley tariff, and even before that. Both Democrats and Republicans are responsible for it. We are all responsible for it. We are responsible for it today, and will be until we give these people the measure of relief to which they are entitled.

Representatives from twenty-six States of this Union have constituents who grow tobacco.

In 1902 these States raised 821,823,963 pounds; price, 7 cents per pound, or $57,563,510.

In 1903 they raised 815,972,425 pounds; price, 6.8 cents per pound; value, $55,514,627, or nearly 6,000,000 pounds less than in 1902, or a loss of about $2,000,000 to the growers.

The New York Tobacco Leaf of January, 1904, states these facts and prints the following valuable table.

Now, here is another letter of a different nature. I will ask the Clerk to read it aloud, because it is one of the most sensible letters I have received on the subject. It is from Cheatham County, the place where the man went down and bought one barn of tobacco on one side of the road and would not go across and buy the other barn belonging to the same man on the other side of the road because he was limited by the road to a certain district.

HARPER, CHEATHAM COUNTY, TENN., Feb. 10, 1904.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We farmers down here are having a hard time. We can not sell our tobacco for anything. We haven't got but two or three buyers to [illegible] limit. [illegible] We haven't [illegible] to us or keep your [illegible] W[illegible] over the situation that they [illegible]

RICHARD F. HERRON.

Mr. [illegible] N[illegible] blunt, to[illegible] ts as [illegible] y the law, forbids [illegible] and resell it, as one of the w[illegible] said the other day:

As the matter stands now, they can not barter. A m[illegible] ll his own tobacco and be [illegible] ased, but if he [illegible] ealer, and when he sells that tobacco he must pay a [illegible]

WHY TAX LEAF TOBACCO?

[illegible] Why do [illegible] use freely his ten fingers and put into the to[illegible] acco [illegible] all the value that he can? Why do you rob him [illegible] strict his liberty?

Why do you tax his produ[illegible] and make it possible [illegible] rer, the to[illegible] e they can no[illegible] grower? There is the "m[illegible] it." Why do you let the farmer change the form of [illegible] tax him? It [illegible] r; he is a man w[illegible] The man [illegible] rbs so[illegible] s. In [illegible] e laws are so arranged and [illegible] s that the manufacturer practically robs the to[illegible] a large part of his profit—the fruits of his [illegible] r the law. There is no [illegible] this way.

[illegible] and turning it into snuff is [illegible] ring, because in that case you make a new article. [illegible] tobacco is still tobacco, though the stems be pulled out or twisted. In addition to that, tobacco thus raised and then [illegible] d and twisted by the farmer is pure tobacco. The to[illegible] er it is m[illegible] ured is, 40 per cent of it, "doctored." [illegible] th, the negroes who may work in the cot[illegible] where they do not raise tobacco), or the laborers in the [illegible] r in the fields, whether white or black, prefer the pure [illegible] the country twist, to the manufactured "doctored" [illegible] they have to pay 40 or 50 cents a pound, when [illegible] twist, for 20 cents or less.

[illegible] Mr. [illegible] [Mr. WILLIAMS], the leader of [illegible] y in this House, a[illegible] a meeting of the subcom[illegible] w days a[illegible] that in Mississippi, [illegible] they would be very glad to get [illegible] and do their own twisting—hang it in the [illegible] done in days gone by when I was a farmer boy in the country. I see that no more.

Now the farmer must deliver his tobacco in person. In many cases if he did that he could not be with his family. Some member of the fa[illegible] may be sick. Hence the farmer is unable to [illegible] his tobacco in person. He can not leave [illegible]

Now, why not give him the right to deliver that tobacco by his [illegible] to put his boy in the wagon, just as he would send him to mill with corn, as we have, many of us, done? Let him, as my friend from Mississippi suggested the other day, put his [illegible] in his wagon in the twist, so that it will not break all to pieces or crumble on the way. Let that tobacco be sent in a wagon to Mississippi or any of the nontobacco-producing parts of the country. Let the farmer send his tobacco by an agent to some agent, giving the agent authority to sell it, as if he were himself the grower. At present the agent has not that authority under the law. The solicitor can only solicit orders; he can not deliver. The registered dealer can sell, but can only sell to dealers, manufacturers [illegible]

Now, I [illegible] House to give the tobacco grower freedom of action. Restore his right of free agency; give him the [illegible] to do everything that the grower ought to be [illegible] f. Take the tax off the leaf tobacco when it [illegible] or by anybody. Let the grower stem and tw[illegible] and sell it free of tax. Under [illegible] as manufactured tobacco if any [illegible] it [illegible] to fasten the control of the tobacco market in the hands of the tobacco manipulator? [Loud applause.]

Mr. TOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman half an hour more if he desires it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank my friend very much.

Now, look at the brutality of [illegible] this thing. If changing tobacco from its natural condition is manufacturing it, how, in the name of Heaven, can Congress truthfully say that when it is not changed it is manufactured? It is a [illegible] ve lie. It is not manufactured unless it is changed. The [illegible] Last year it is [illegible] an a registered dealer or manufac[illegible] r or an [illegible] is taxed.

[illegible] of Texas. I should like to know whether the [illegible] ill pending before any committee of the House [illegible] and, if so, before what committee is it pending—to remove these [illegible]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have had a bill pending in the last Congress and [illegible] this Congress, and there are four others that propose to give this relief, and we have had a very considerate, fair hearing, so far, before the subcommittee, presided over by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and I am satisfied that we have convinced the committee very much, because they verified every statement I made, and this vexatious law was reviewed. The committee did not know what the law was, of course. We are finding out what the law is now. By the assistance of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, by the assistance of everybody that I can get to help me, by employing much of my time daily ever since Congress met, I have finally reached down to where I find that the law is exactly as I have stated it to-day.

We are going to have another hearing next week. We are going to have Mr. Commissioner Yerkes down to tell us how much revenue it will relieve the Treasury of. It may reduce it, [illegible] believe it will. But if you do not relieve the tobacco growers, I have already shown you that the tobacco growers of this country are going to quit growing it and are going to raise something else.

Mr. JAMES. That would curtail the revenue.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It certainly would reduce the amount of revenue now received, which was last year $48,000,000 from tobacco. What the growers want is free trade in leaf tobacco in the hands of any person and the right to stem and twist their own growth and sell it without tax. Let them sell it without agents and with agents. Let them send it by express, by telegraph, by telephone, by boat, wagon, automobile, or air ship, or any other way, anywhere. Liberty of action is what they want. Let these growers know once more at least, [illegible] you should do for them in this matter, that they are sons of freemen and are freemen.

A VEXATIOUS LIMITATION.

I hear it said that there is no tax on leaf tobacco in the hands of the grower. It is true the grower pays no tax on his leaf, but there is a tax on that same leaf if sold by any other person than the grower if sold to a consumer. Why this limitation? Leaf tobacco is leaf in anyone's hands, and a p[illegible] not to be required to pay a tax if he sells to a consumer. This forces him to sell directly or indirectly to the tobacco trust. Let everybody without any restriction trade in leaf.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. In other words, let everybody sell to the consumer.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, when any person except the grower sells to the consumer it becomes [illegible] and is subject to tax. I am satisfied that [illegible] revenue comes from the [illegible] on, but this limitation is such a restriction as to tax the leaf tobacco and prevent it from being [illegible] sold and consumed by the great masses of the people, and in effect taxes or burdens the grower [illegible] the price of his growth. I know of no one who is engaged in the business of selling leaf tobacco to consumers, but if there is such a person, the tobacco he sells is subject to a tax. To remove this limitation would not reduce the revenues very much, if any. Our revenues come mostly from the manufactured product. In fact, I have been unable to find in any report of [illegible] years where any tax was paid on leaf [illegible] by anyone. There is no one engaged in the business of "selling leaf to consumers" but the farmer who pays no tax. But this little kink in the law [illegible] sarily, limits the trade in leaf tobacco without producing any revenue, and should be repealed.

TOBACCO GROWERS ARE ASKED TO QUIT RAISING TOBACCO.

I will read here the report of a meeting of the Webster County, Ky., tobacco growers, wherein they are reported to have prepared a resolution calling on the farmers not to raise any tobacco next year:

TOBACCO GROWERS OF WEBSTER COUNTY, KY., MEET AND [illegible]

[illegible]

RESOLUTION.

[illegible] agree to abandon the [illegible]

[illegible] further details later.

A number of counties have done that.

Now, gentlemen, let us consider the question of revenue.

[illegible]

Mr. JAMES. The purpose of this law of yours would be to let the tobacco users of the United States become competitors of the trust in the purchase of the tobacco of the farmer?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly. If you will turn the farmers loose who grow the tobacco, they will wipe out the trust. Take all restrictions and taxes from the leaf.

Mr. JAMES. That would either force the trust to give them better prices or [illegible]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly. As it is, the trust "holds up" the grower and his product, too, because of these limitations on both.

Mr. ETTELSON. Why is it that these absurd, oppressive and [illegible] laws with respect to the growing and sale of tobacco are not repealed?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will say to my friend as seriously and candidly as he has asked the question that I think that some smart lawyer representing the tobacco trust, who could use language far-reaching in practical effect, wrote the law, and that Congress did not know what it was doing when it passed these severe laws, and so these limitations were fastened in the law, which hobble the grower in the sale of his product. I do not believe that any Congress with a conscience would have been knowingly guilty of passing such savage, tyrannical laws as these. The tax on tobacco, as I have already stated, begun in 1862,

Some of the act of July 20, 1868, is now the law. It has been added to, however, from time to time, down to 1892.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, so that there may not be any misapprehension, is the law which you wish to modify the original law which you referred to in the opening of your remarks, the statute of 1862?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The laws of which the growers most complain have been enacted in recent years. They are pointed out by Commissioner Yerkes as being the acts of August 28, 1894, sections 69, and section 3 of the act of April 12, 1902. These acts are all based on and are amendments to a string of internal revenue laws which run back to each and every year to the act of June 30, 1868, which repealed several acts passed between the original act of July 1, 1862, and June 30, 1868. It may be to give the desired relief that not only the recent enactments but the parent act must be amended. The farmers, however, have managed to live and let live until the enactments of April 12, 1902, and August 28, 1894. They complain of restrictions that both Commissioner Yerkes and myself find incorporated in these two acts. Conditions during that period of time have become intolerable to the grower of tobacco. These two acts, it seems, coupled with the rules and regulations made to enforce them, is the evil. I am advised by the correspondence that I have from the internal-revenue department and my investigation of the law. Indeed, the act of April 12, 1902, reenacts a part of the old act of 1868. Mr. Yerkes informs me in his letter of April 12, 1902.

Mr. BOUTELL. In order that we may have no misunderstanding [illegible] it is a matter of very great interest to a large number of people, is the law of which the gentleman from Tennessee now complains the original law of 1862, or is it some recent amendment of that law?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The act of July 1, 1862, established our internal-revenue system of that date. Twist tobacco was taxed under that law. I want now to intax it when the grower twists it of his own growth and desires to sell it or give it away. I do not know whether that act taxed hand twist or machine-twist tobacco. But the law of to-day taxes twisted tobacco whether twisted by machine or hand. And it seems that the act of April 12, 1902, and the act of August 28, 1894, has made [illegible] and many other objectionable changes by way of amending the former law. The law of June 30, 1868, is in part the law of to-day. It repealed all former conflicting laws. The act of April 12, 1902, Commissioner Yerkes says, restored a part of the old act of 1868, found in the Revised Statutes of 1873, section 3368. If you will read his letter of March 12, 1903, in my former speech, you will be thoroughly informed on this point. I will read that letter in part if I have time.

Mr. BOUTELL. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee would it not have placed this matter to better effect, if it is in fact a law of 1862, to state that with perfect frankness rather than that it is a law concocted by some clerk of attorney of the trust, the tobacco trust being of very modern origin.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But only in the last few years have these intolerable burdens and denials by operation of law been felt by the farmers, and Mr. Yerkes, in his letter to me March 12, 1903, states that section 3 of April 12, 1902, is only reenactment of section 3368 of the Revised Statutes of 1873, the act of July 20, 1868, section 61. It seems the farmers complain more of the Wilson clause of the McKinley Act, but that they complain more of the act of April 12, 1902, than of any [illegible].

Mr. STANLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, as I understand the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, it is that this law was passed for one purpose and that its operation has secured an entirely different result. That is especially true of the act of 1894, making an arbitrary definition of manufactured tobacco, namely, that any tobacco, whether in the natural leaf or otherwise, not processed by the producer of it was manufactured tobacco, with certain [illegible] provided it sold by anyone but the producer, who can only sell free of tax his own growth.

Mr. BOUTELL. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee I would like to ask the gentleman who has last spoken whether it is his belief that the tobacco trust could have anything to do with the control of the legislation of 1894?

Mr. STANLEY. I am not trying to go into politics. I am not saying that any particular trust did this. But if the gentleman will pardon me just a minute, it is very plain that the intent of the lawmakers in passing that law was to prevent the leaf, which was untwisted in the hands of the farmer, from being manufactured without the Government having an eye to it. That was plainly the purpose of the law. Now, the operation of the law has been to restrict the farmer in the sale of his leaf tobacco to nobody except a licensed dealer, because it can be sold only to a licensed dealer by the agent of the farmer. In that way it has placed the article where it can be controlled by great aggregations of capital, and is not producing a dime of revenue.

After examining this law and after having seen from my own personal experience that the operation of the law was to prevent the farmer from selling natural leaf tobacco in any way to anybody but the licensed dealer, I wrote to Commissioner Yerkes, asking him if prior to the enactment of the law of 1894 there was any effort on the part of the manufacturers of tobacco to evade the law—and it is only a 6-cent duty, nothing like the duty in the foreign countries from which this provision was copied—and he said there had been, to his knowledge, absolutely no fraud on the part of the farmers or persons purchasing from the farmers this leaf tobacco and [illegible] the necessity for the law, and the operation of the law was directly in the interest of the large consumers by putting all the leaf tobacco in the class of manufactured tobacco.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But Commissioner Yerkes shows, in his letter to me of March 12, 1903, that the laws of which the growers complain were passed in 1894 and 1902, which are amendatory. In answering my questions he cites the acts of April 12, 1902, section 3, and August 28, 1894, section 69. He says:

Without attempting to give you an immediate categorical answer to each question as propounded, I have the honor to inform you that at the first session of the Fifty-[illegible] April 12, 1902, section 3, the following was passed [illegible] for manufactured tobacco [illegible] tax now imposed by law [illegible] or any substitute for tobacco, ground, [illegible] and shall pay a special tax [illegible] and such manufactured tobacco [illegible] shall be prepared and put up by the manufacturer in such packages as may be prescribed by such regulations, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as may be prescribed for the purpose of preventing the removal of any such tobacco for sale or consumption, and for the protection of the revenue. That farmers and growers of tobacco who sell leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising shall not be regarded as manufacturers of tobacco; and section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and acts amendatory thereof, so far as in conflict with this act are hereby repealed."

The Commissioner, in construing this paragraph, says:

In the second paragraph every person is regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco who prepares and puts up his leaf tobacco in the natural condition by stemming or by preparing it for chewing or smoking, or who sells or delivers his leaf tobacco in its natural condition to consumers or to persons other than dealers, manufacturers, and exporters; and all leaf tobacco so sold by such persons is regarded as manufactured tobacco and subject to tax, but farmers who sell leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising are not to be regarded as manufacturers for selling leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising.

AN ABLE COMMISSIONER'S APOLOGY.

The difficulty in the way of a literal interpretation of the statutes relating to the taxation of leaf tobacco, as pointed out, is that such enactments have been coupled with special tax provisions and not contained in any separate statutes.

I have already read the first provision that appeared in this House, so far as I have been able to find, which undertook to tax leaf or stem tobacco. But the House struck out this clause entirely, because it was taxing unmanufactured tobacco, and transferred the tax to the next clause, taxing manufactured tobacco. This was March 28, 1862.

Mr. STANLEY. What year?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. March 28, 1862. I will read again the clause which was then stricken out of the bill:

On tobacco, leaf or stem, unmanufactured, 3 cents per pound, and a payment of this duty shall not exempt tobacco from a further duty when manufactured.

Thus Congress, indeed the committee that reported the bill to the House, not only refused to tax leaf or stem, but classified leaf and stem as unmanufactured tobacco and not subject to a tax unless manufactured. Now, in time of peace, unless the tobacco grower sells the leaf of his own raising, it is taxed, if sold to consumers. If any other person sells it to a consumer it is taxed as manufactured tobacco and the person selling is declared a manufacturer. Stemmed tobacco is manufactured, under the present law, and stemming is manufacturing; but the farmer can stem and twist for his personal use.

Commissioner Yerkes, in his very valuable opinion incorporated in his letter to me, found in my former speech, reviews many laws and parts of laws from June 20 down to the act of April 12, 1902.

We know that the McKinley Act changed the law; that the Wilson Act changed the McKinley Act; that the Dingley Act changed the Wilson Act, but left, I believe, the objectionable definition made by the Wilson Act of the words "manufacturer" and "manufacturing," whereby every person is made a manufacturer who sells leaf tobacco to a consumer, except the grower in the sale of his own growth and raising. We know that Commissioner Yerkes in his letter to me states that the act of April 12, 1902, section 3, reenacts section 3368 of the Revised Statutes of 1873, act of July 20, 1868, section 61. He also stated that it is very difficult to give "a lucid interpretation of the statutes relating to the sale of leaf tobacco by the farmer" because of restrictions in special statutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I regret I have not heard all the gentleman's speech, because this is a matter in which I am very much interested; that is of interest to my State. Will the gentleman kindly read what he characterizes as the objectionable section?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will refer my friend to the letter containing the objectionable laws, written me by Commissioner Yerkes, found in my speech of December 14, 1903. He will there see that the Commissioner reviews a great many statutes and amendments thereto and gives the history with particularities, and as I have already read the objectionable laws as set forth in his letter, I will ask my friend to be content with the construction placed upon those laws by Commissioner Yerkes. The construction is very plainly worded by the Commissioner, while the laws are very abstruse and hard for anyone to understand, even after hours and months of hard study. The Commissioner himself says they are hard to elucidate. As I understand his letter, he concludes that the act of August 28, 1894, section 69, amending former laws, and the later act of April 12, 1902, reenacting and possibly amending still older laws—the act of 1868—are the objectionable and oppressive laws of which the growers now complain.

Of the act of April 12, 1902, the Commissioner says:

You will not find in this section any exemption in favor of the farmer, who is not permitted to twist, stem, or otherwise change his tobacco and prepare it for consumption.

[illegible] section 3368 of the Revised Statutes of [illegible] which first imposed a stamp tax on tobacco.

This provision of law has been in force continuously, without change, except as to the rate of tax since 1868.

Immediately in this connection the Commissioner says:

Section 3368 of the Revised Statutes, and amendatory acts, require that all manufactured tobacco and snuff shall be prepared and put up by the manufacturer in certain specified packages and in no other manner before removal for sale or consumption, and provides that all cavendish, plug, and twist tobacco shall be put up in certain packages, and smoking tobacco and all cut and granulated tobacco in certain other packages; and this section makes no exemption in favor of the farmer or grower of tobacco.

ACT OF AUGUST 28, 1894.

The Commissioner says the definition of manufactured tobacco is found in subsection 9 of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 69, act of August 28, 1894. Said section 69 provides that—he then quotes this section, which I will insert a little later.

He then says the second paragraph of that section provides that—he inserts that, which I will do.

Now, then, here is the construction which the Commissioner gives of this section 69, which he quoted. He says:

In the first paragraph every person is regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco who in any manner prepares his leaf tobacco for consumption by stemming, twisting, stemming, grinding, or otherwise changing the tobacco from its natural condition.

In the second paragraph every person is regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco who sells and delivers his leaf tobacco in its natural condition to consumers, or to persons other than dealers, manufacturers, or exporters of tobacco in packages for exportation; and all leaf tobacco so sold by such persons is regarded as manufactured tobacco subject to tax. But farmers who sell leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising are not to be regarded as manufacturers for selling leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising.

If you talk to the growers of tobacco, they will tell you that the trouble of which they complain has arisen "in the last year or two." Others will say it was the "act of August 20, 1894, that caused the trouble." This corroborates the opinion of Commissioner Yerkes, who, as we see, says that the laws of to-day that are objectionable are the acts of 1894 and 1902. So that both Democrats and Republicans, gentlemen, are to blame for this obnoxious, vexatious, brutal legislation, and they both should unite at once and remove the evil. I have already explained the practical operation of the law as complained of by the tobacco growers, but as the gentleman from Wisconsin has asked for information I will briefly repeat what Mr. Yerkes says the trouble is.

Mr. Yerkes says to change the natural condition in any way, except to cure it, is manufacturing, and no one is allowed to do that, without paying a tax of 6 cents, except the grower; but if the grower changes the natural condition and gives it away or sells it he has to pay a tax of 6 cents a pound. It costs 6 cents now to raise it in Tennessee, and it is now selling on an average of 3½ cents. The grower can not give it to his family or give it to his church or to anybody. He can not give it to charity.

MANUFACTURED WHEN NOT CHANGED.

So if the farmer sells his own growth of leaf tobacco he is not a manufacturer of leaf tobacco, and the leaf tobacco is not manufactured. But if any other person sells this same tobacco to consumers or any person other than to dealers, manufacturers, and exporters, the leaf tobacco is manufactured, although it is not changed from its natural condition, except cured.

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose the farmer stems it, can he get more money from it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; because the grower puts more labor in his tobacco when he stems or twists it. But let me say that he can not do that for sale or gift unless he pays the 6-cent tax. The manufacturer puts all that value into it and sells it back to the farmer for from 20 to 40 cents a pound.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What makes it bring less is that the stems weigh something?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That may be one reason. Now stems are used, while formerly they were thrown away. But another reason is that you put more labor into the stemmed tobacco, and the more labor you put into a thing the more valuable it is—presumptuously, at least. Then another reason is that it is less bulky and is easier handled. The grower can handle it better in the twist. It won't shatter and lose away in that fix. It can be handled in a way in that way and not crumble.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Are the stems marketable?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, even exported——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. I would like to state to the gentleman that these stems are now manufactured into what is called "sheepwash," but that name is a delusion, and is only for the purpose of deceiving persons as to the real purpose of the product. It bears the same relation to the stems that attar of roses does to the roses. It takes tons to make a small quantity. The extract looks like thick molasses, and is exported to Germany, where our tobacco was formerly shipped.

There is a German tobacco that is grown there which has the qualities of a sponge. The leaf is very much like our mullein leaf in this country, with a bitter taste. It looks like tobacco, but has very little taste of tobacco. It has a spongy leaf and absorbs this extract. In that way they are doing away with the necessity of importing American tobacco and paying the duty on [illegible] These sellers are actually now buying the American product at 24 cents a pound, taking the American leaf with [illegible] making it into sheep-wash, [illegible] Germany, and [illegible] tobacco again.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now I [illegible] of a [illegible] Court of the [illegible] You will find that in [illegible] in my speech. [Laughter.]

Now, [illegible] I want to say to my good and capable and able friend from Wisconsin that the Supreme Court held way back in a Connecticut case [illegible] that the court, that [illegible] "[illegible]" were raw copper, not manufactured. Just this was the "policy" of Congress then. But now the law changes "in the natural condition of tobacco" [illegible] when not changed, if sold to consumers, except by the grower from his own raising.

Now, just think of that proposition!

I hold in my hand a letter from my old lawyer friend, John M. Foster, [illegible] County, Tenn. He has now gone to the country to engage in farming. He writes as follows:

Why is the tendency from the sea? Why do American boys have no call for sea life? Why do American men escape it when they can?

Sir, let me try to tell you.

Sea life, as compared with land life, is unworthy of Americans. It has always been a hard life, and it is not so hard to-day as formerly, perhaps; but land life, also a hard life for the poor, has never been so barren of joy, and during the last thirty or forty years has not been so niggardly of wealth and opportunity, as sea life. I am speaking, understand, of the foreign trade. Some glimmering of Americanism has come to our coastwise trade during recent years, though even in that trade conditions are unbefitting the dignity of American life, and therefore unattractive to Americans.

True, some Americans go to sea in our foreign-going bottoms, but so some Americans beg for bread. Necessity compels in these cases where an unconquerable love for the waves does not determine. Our ships are charnel places for dead hope.

Sir, suffer me to tell of the reply made not long ago by an American seaman to the question, "Would you send your son to sea in our foreign trade?"

"Would I send my son to sea!" he exclaimed. "Our ships in the foreign trade are filled with men who have failed and are sailed under laws that kill. Rather would I, with my own hands, crush out the life of my son than surrender him to the fate of the seamen whose lot is cast aboard ships of our country trading in foreign parts."

Why should a father, familiar with the sea, speak so?

Because, sir, in our foreign trade the forecastle is, as a rule, unfit for habitation, crimping suffered to exist, payment of wages not enough safeguarded, no standard of skill provided, undermanning permitted, Asiatics employed, involuntary servitude protected.

Because, in short, seamen in that trade are not free men, and are obliged to toil under conditions destructive of health, prosperity, self-respect.

If any Member of this body shall, after inspection of average forecastles in our foreign-going ships, pronounce them fit places for Americans to eat in and sleep in, I shall feel that I have found a man who is wanting in intelligence and humanity.

In our coastwise trade we have about abolished crimping; but we have left the over-sea trade subject to the crimp; and surely no gentleman who knows of the shameful pillage practices of the crimp can excuse neglect to do all in his power for [illegible] them wherever the authority of America can reach.

Again, while our statutes are strewn with provisions implying a standard of skill in seamanship and a standard for manning, no standards have been established. And so it comes to pass that skilled men are overworked and life and property exposed to needless hazard. The manning evil is of the gravest influence. Many and many an American ship in coastwise and in foreign trade goes to sea so badly undermanned that voyaging is one tense struggle for life, and many and many an American vessel is lost as a direct consequence of undermanning.

Moreover, sir, upon the Pacific our seamen are displaced by Asiatics. Every American steamship in our China trade is manned [illegible] hold. Think of it! The [illegible] given to Americans ashore against competition with the yellow race is denied their brothers who toil at sea. Can you expect Americans to serve side by side with Chinamen? Would [illegible] this Congress submit to have his son share a fore-[illegible] with them, compete for work with them? And the Pacific, remember, is the ocean on which the progress of trade is greatest.

My strength will not permit me to speak to-day of a multitude [illegible] but I will speak of a wrong not minor, whose character is seen as of itself to keep from the over-sea ships of our country the sort of boys, the sort of men, essential to great achievement amidst stern competition with the ships of alien nations. I refer, of course, to the [illegible] of involuntary servitude in our foreign-going mer-[illegible].

Under sections 4596 and 4600 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the American seaman in our over-sea service is placed outside the grace of the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution. He is the only person under our flag who may not decline his bargain to serve another in civil life without loss of liberty. He may be pursued as fugitive slaves were pursued in the dark days before the civil war if he leave his ship in violation of his civil contract, and may be imprisoned or delivered up to the master of his vessel as felons are delivered up manacled and [illegible]. He may have been lured into the service by the most outrageous frauds, but in practice the fact will avail him nothing. Let him quit the service under penalty of pursuit and irons!

There was recently brought to my attention a case arising before the repeal of these laws in so far as they related to the coastwise trade—happily they no longer affect that trade. An American seaman, engaged as a cook, left his ship while she was in an [illegible] port. He was apprehended, brought on board, and [illegible] remained in port was kept chained to the cabin [illegible] him to work there—[illegible] remember slaves were chained to [illegible].

[illegible] practice is yet [illegible]—nay, does obtain—as to [illegible] flag when [illegible] flies in foreign jurisdic-[illegible] of it! It is a blistering [illegible] we cherish as [illegible]. The [illegible] of the w[illegible] we may [illegible] it on penalty [illegible] not [illegible] his life, [illegible]—no, not the fraction of [illegible] is, before God, and should be [illegible].

[illegible] that the le[illegible] on the other side of this Cham-[illegible] from N[illegible] [Mr. PAYNE], has in other [illegible] a crusade to destroy this evil utterly. [illegible] it in the coastwise trade is [illegible] [illegible] d. the[illegible] [illegible] great ax fall." We may not [illegible] let us have heed for [illegible] and 4600 should be repealed. Until [illegible] us, sir, would wish to send a boy of [illegible] to. It should not be co[illegible] [illegible] chant marine discussion. If it is [illegible] other features shall be referred to a Con-[illegible] in that re-[illegible] [illegible] of the seamen sufficiently to [illegible] between ships and men, although such [illegible] d not be suffered to defer action by [illegible] whose value is beyond the need of debate. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the [illegible] bill, [illegible].

[illegible] I have not consumed the time so gen-[illegible] me, I shall have to conclude, for I am ill; but I [illegible] have printed in the RECORD, as an appendix to my [illegible] pertinent to the subject I have been discussing; [illegible] back to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. M[illegible]] of my time. I ask for unanimous consent permitting the privilege desired. [Loud applause.]

LABOR TROUBLES IN COLORADO.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, early in January the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] presented a statement by the mine operators of Colorado with reference to the troubles in that State, and by unanimous consent it was printed in the RECORD and also as a public document.

The Western Federation have prepared an answer to that statement. They desire and I desire that it shall receive the same treatment; that it may be printed in the RECORD and printed as a public document, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the paper which has been presented by the Senator from West Virginia relating to the troubles in Colorado be printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado what is the document which has been printed already?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is in the nature of a petition and is a reply —

Mr. HOAR. What is the document which has been already printed?

Mr. PATTERSON. A statement from the mine operators or owners in the State of Colorado relating to the troubles there, which necessarily referred—indeed, it referred almost wholly—to the Western Federation of Miners. By unanimous consent, that was printed as a Senate document and printed in the RECORD, and the Western Federation against whom it was directed, desire that the same treatment shall be accorded to their reminder.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted to make one observation, I do not see how the Senate in common justice, even in common decency, can deny the request the Senator from Colorado now makes. Certainly, I have no objection to offer to it.

But perhaps I may be allowed to call attention to the fact that the habit of permitting such documents as the one formerly printed—and I do not refer to this one at all—to be printed in the RECORD involves in it the obligation to allow replies to it to be printed, and that in its turn involves in it the [illegible] of every citizen on a subject of any consequence to come in here and take part himself in discussion in the Senate, of which the RECORD is the official chronicle.

I do not in the least rise to embarrass the Senator's request, which seems to me absolutely just and right, but only to call attention to the propriety of being pretty careful hereafter in making such requests as have been granted the other day in this matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I fully concur with the observations of the Senator from Massachusetts. I recognize the impropriety of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, and to have printed as a Senate document, the paper which he sends to the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made. The document will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The paper referred to is as follows:

It is evident that there is such a contrast in the document framed by the [illegible] to be considered by the United States Senate and the public [illegible] to the strike of [illegible] restoration of normal conditions in the district than the mine owners he did not consider it unreasonable for them to pay the expense of the militia.

"The mine owners do not relish having to pay the freight, he stated, but the state is required to maintain peace within its borders and protect the lives of the citizens and the property which belongs to them. He stated that he thought it would be better to pay the cost and resume production in their mines than to [illegible] and have their properties [illegible] damaged. [illegible] It is not likely to be less than $[illegible] and it may be much more than that."

In [illegible] the Governor of the State to the effect that if the mine owners wished to pay for the use of the militia the actual expense of the State would be [illegible]. The governor in his proclamation declared that the rights of the laboring classes, guaranteed and frequently adjudicated, had been violated at no place of persons who, during more honest days, had been prominent in the district upon the mine owners, he said, not consider it unreasonable for them to pay the expense of the militia.

The business activity of Cripple Creek held a meeting on September 6, and after [illegible] the action of the governor [illegible]

Whereas a large force of the Colorado State Militia have already been located in the Cripple Creek district, with orders to disarm and [illegible]

Whereas martial law has been proclaimed by Adjutant General Bell, martial law is practiced in every department of the Cripple Creek district; and

Whereas the greatest misrepresentation has been employed in the effort to have the camp invaded by the militia;

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the citizens of Cripple Creek and the entire Cripple Creek district, in mass meeting assembled, in Victor, Colorado, this 6th day of September, 1903, [illegible] by Governor Peabody in sending troops to Teller County and declaring the action as unwarranted by the facts and in direct violation of the Constitution and laws, and contrary to every principle of American citizenship, and we do hereby protest against the present occupation of martial law in the Cripple Creek district as a further invasion of our rights and liberties as American citizens.

We protest that these troops, whenever called the governor's advisory committee, which is to be composed of mine owners, [illegible] reason the people of Teller County are being made to pay for the support of a condition which has existed for months, and the people have not asked for them. In view of being a law-abiding community as a very important of any district within the civilized world to believe the Cripple Creek district as one of the quietest and most peaceable [illegible] any community in the country.

We protest against trifling instances of assault, such as have occurred in the whole camp since the strike was declared, but these, all, first-named instances are liable to happen at any time and at any place.

We deprecate the course that is now on, and upon this occasion do not wish to do anything that might embarrass our governor, but do wish to express our confidence in the security of our country, and our offerings to maintain law and order and to protect life and property.

In addition to the protests of the citizens of the county, the board of county commissioners, the city council of Victor, the citizens in mass meeting at Victor and Cripple Creek, a petition was circulated and signed by a [illegible] zens which was presented to the governor calling [illegible] the [illegible] in the county, but the petition was denied as the mine owners were paying for the use of the soldiers and the governor seemed to be under the influence of [illegible] interest. On September 9 two arrests were made without the [illegible] warrant, or process of law. From this time forth the reign of military rule in the State of Colorado, which has called forth the resolutions introduced by Senator Patterson.

Even the chairman of the board of county commissioners P. J. Lynch, who is a member of the Western Federation of Miners, was hauled from his office

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was ordered to be printed as a report. Does the Senator ask that an additional number be printed as a document?

Mr. HOAR. What number will be printed of the report, to be at the disposal of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixteen hundred and eighty-two copies of the report will be printed.

Mr. HOAR. That is enough.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA—PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Panama resolution, which was before the Senate on Thursday.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 11th ultimo, as modified by him on the 8th instant, as follows:

[illegible] That the Government be informed that the Senate [illegible] the action of the President in recognizing the independence of the Panama government [illegible] and also of securing the cooperation of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal of Panama.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. MORGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. MORGAN. I have risen to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, for a reason I have explained to him, the very great courtesy of allowing me to proceed at this time with some remarks which I want to submit to the Senate. I make the request because I am compelled to be absent from this body. The remarks are not long.

Mr. SPOONER. It gives me pleasure to comply with the request of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on Friday, in a colloquy between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself, a question arose as to the attitude of Mr. Morison, one of the Isthmian Canal Commission, in respect of a sea-level canal across the Isthmus. I will read a portion of it. This is what I said:

Now, as soon as I can have an opportunity I will furnish to the Senator for his own satisfaction a report written by Mr. Morison after he had [illegible] this report [illegible] of the Panama Canal in which he shows the utter [illegible] impossibility of digging a canal that would be permanent at Panama with any reasonable [illegible] and [illegible] to contract and appropriate. In the report in which he [illegible] for the consideration of his brethren, and the debate and discussion of it just before he died he demonstrates the impossibility or impracticability, within any reasonable cost at all, even of cutting the canal at or near Panama.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not seen the article of Mr. Morison.

I wish to read a brief extract from that article by Mr. Morison. He said:

The Isthmian Canal Commission in its report tried to place the two canals, Panama and Nicaragua, as nearly on the same basis as possible, eliminating from each [illegible] advantages and economies which might be applicable on [illegible] the other.

There were several points in which the writer differed from his colleagues, and [illegible] individual views [illegible] report.

[illegible] the great value of a tide-level canal and its unlimited capacity. [illegible] than real. [illegible] limiting factor. [illegible] floods are [illegible] than in the canal with locks, and the [illegible] tide-level canal would be the better canal [illegible] would attend, [illegible] involved, [illegible] given in some detail.

I will not read the estimates. He puts the cost of it at $260,000,000.

Mr. President, thanking the Senator from Wisconsin for his courtesy to me, I will now proceed to present the views that I entertain on this general subject, and this will be my final effort to explain my own attitude in regard to this matter, and also what I conceive to be the duty of the country at this moment of time.

I have heard of nothing in our history that seems to require more studious and careful consideration than the treaty now before the Senate. The situation it creates seems easy, because we are strong, but it is like the first attack of a fatal malady that no physical strength can resist. It is a moral delinquency that indicates a deep-rooted national sin that in the end "will find us out."

The parties to this treaty, the circumstances in which it originated, the great matter with which it deals, and the tremendous consequences that must follow it are entirely novel and without precedent.

The suddenness of the demand and the pressure upon the Senate for its consideration is surprising—yes, astonishing. The facts are as yet unknown to the Senate that are to [illegible] its legality under the laws of nations as a treaty that binds the people of Panama and, correspondingly, the people of the United States in their legal and moral recognition of its force as a treaty, so that they will not hereafter as suddenly and with equal haste turn upon it and repeal it by act of Congress if it shall prove to be an unfortunate venture.

Other nations have given a pro forma recognition to the Government de facto at Panama, but whether any or how many of them attribute to that Government the full powers of independence and sovereignty is not known, officially or otherwise, to the Senate.

What are the motives and purposes of those governments we are not informed, or how far they have bound themselves to an admission of the finality or validity of the secession of Panama.

For ought we know to the contrary those governments are quite at liberty to recognize the right of Colombia, under the laws of nations, to coerce Panama to submission to her laws and constitution and to her former allegiance, or even to assist Colombia, at least with loans of money and with their moral support, in forcing Panama into submission.

No nation of the earth, except the United States, has said, or will say, that due time has elapsed, or that other conditions exist that annul the right of Colombia to assert her sovereignty over Panama, and we hasten to do so because we are actuated by a motive of national aggrandizement, which has given to the secession of Panama its only strength and its sole protection.

Our attitude in this movement requires that we should look closely into our own conduct as well as that of other nations, for we do not know whether such recognition is not intended by these European and Asiatic governments as a declaration of the first successful inroad upon the Monroe doctrine. That inroad is what has been already accomplished by our rash precipitancy in this business.

Nor do we know how the precedent of our example, set in Panama, may encourage certain European states in promoting what we call "a peaceful revolution" under their protection, and may as suddenly sweep Cuba or Porto Rico within the shelter of the protection of their suzerainty.

Such questions as to the actions of foreign countries can not be safely determined in advance by a sudden surmise or guess or hazard as to their future effect, like the fall of dice on the gambling table. We should know, as far as possible, every fact that is in reach of honest and industrious search before we set out on this new road, where there is no pathway or footprint to guide us, that we must open as we go.

A still more important matter confronts us with a demand for sober thought and discreet action. Important, because it is, under the provisions of this treaty, a serious danger.

As a precendent to be established by the action of the Senate, it is most important. But, as a question of rightful power to bind the people of Panama and of the United States by treaty obligations, it is of vital moment. We are bound to know the state of the law in Panama under which this treaty was negotiated and at the time it was signed, and it is undeniable that no law in Panama authorized its negotiation or ratification at the date of its signatures.

The persons who exercised power and authority in Panama were recognized at the date of this treaty as a de facto government by the President of the United States; but that act does not create law for Panama. It was only for our commercial security and for the protection of our citizens and their property in Panama that such recognition had any effect under the laws of nations. It was not and could not have been intended to create law in Panama. Panama had no code of laws enacted by her authority when this treaty was signed.

If the laws of Colombia, locally applicable, prevailed there, under the laws of nations, they did not authorize Panama to make a treaty with any foreign power. If those laws were not in force in Panama when this treaty was signed, no laws existed there. It was simply a government of force without other laws than the will of the men who exercised power there.

Such a treaty violates the laws and constitution of Colombia, and if they were in force in Panama when this treaty was signed it is simply void and of no effect.

A law must exist in Panama to authorize that State to make a treaty through some designated agent, and the presumption of the laws of nations is that the laws of Colombia remain in force in Panama, even after its independence is achieved, until they are superseded by the laws enacted by Panama. This state of the law presents the question of the existence of any civil power in Panama to create and authorize an agent to make a treaty to bind the people, and the question of the power of such agent, if appointed by a government de facto, to grant land to other governments. It is the signature of Bunau-Varilla that is our sole evidence of title to what we are to acquire under this treaty from Panama. This is not enough.

Any citizen of Panama whose property is affected by this treaty can contest it successfully in the courts of Panama, and even in our own courts, for the President and the Senate can not create law in Panama by ratifying this treaty and can not, certainly, make such laws retroactive so as to give power to Bunau-Varilla to convey the title of the Republic of Panama to lands conveyed to the United States or to subject the lands of private persons to condemnation for public uses.

If this treaty is not ratified by some power in Panama that is more real and more binding on the people there than the junta that commissioned Bunau-Varilla to the United States, it can never be held, in any court, or by any civilized nation as binding upon the people of Panama or of the United States.

The sanction of a treaty—its binding effect upon a nation and the people who constitute it—through successive generations depends upon a law that exists and is obligatory on the people at the time it is signed. The fact that it must be ratified necessarily presupposes that there is a lawful power in the nation to negotiate it and to complete such ratification.

A nation acts as a unit, as a political entity, in making and ratifying a treaty that represents its sovereign power; otherwise the people are not bound by it.

When, as in a republic, or government republican in form, the people are the repositories of the sovereign power, no sovereign act having the force of supreme power can be performed by its officers or agents that is not authorized by law.

In making a contract that binds the people, their agent must be empowered by law to bind them when the contract is made, and also when it is ratified. If the agent was not thus fully empowered, we can not make his act good by our ratification, because the treaty when lawfully made and ratified becomes the supreme law of the United States, and its validity depends upon the lawfulness of the act of the foreign nation, as well as the validity of our action.

We can not limit our people or those of Panama by such a ratification, because one of the signatory powers was not, in fact, a government organized by any law.

The President and the Senate can only make treaties with for[illegible] sign nations, and not with foreign persons not organized as nations.

[illegible] nation must have plenary legislative powers because it acts in virtue of such power in enacting [illegible] laws for the United States that are [illegible] our Law and State constitutions. It is in fact one of the legislative [illegible] to enact a law for the United States, and invest the [illegible] to bind this nation it represents.

That [illegible] be such an organized nation [illegible] of Representatives [illegible] in enacting a law.

According to the [illegible] this treaty was [illegible] with the Republic of Panama, and its [illegible] of its recognition as a government, which was made by Secretary Hay to the Government of Colombia, he stated that Panama was a government [illegible] when this treaty was signed, and much less that it was [illegible] in form.

Mr. Hay can not [illegible] his ipse dixit, and he can not destroy [illegible] or by omitting any mention of the actual facts.

As these [illegible] are not considered by the facts, it is true that we can not change a [illegible] or change the laws of nations in Panama [illegible].

I [illegible] to the Senate for [illegible] it of principles of public law that are well understood and have never been challenged, but for a provision in Article XXIV of this treaty, that [illegible] a reference to first principles and a careful examination of the grounds on which we are [illegible].

Before discussing this article and the treaty I will [illegible] that in making a treaty [illegible] or a constitution by the vis major, which is usually accomplished by arms and [illegible] of the people, we must have our action [illegible] sent of the people [illegible] fully expressed. We can not [illegible] ourselves [illegible] what we do is the [illegible] ment with [illegible] power we [illegible] will [illegible] people with whose alleged [illegible] we are dealing. [illegible] drag our Government to an [illegible] that a nation [illegible] spurn.

Under the laws of nations we are bound to take notice of the authority of those we are dealing with, especially when we are acquiring territorial rights in perpetuity, under a treaty. And the laws of nations are [illegible] and in our [illegible] and enforced by our courts, so that the Senate must [illegible].

We [illegible] above the laws of nations [illegible] does. She refused to accept [illegible] that [illegible] on the land Hay [illegible] to treaty, and the treaty [illegible] the laws of nations [illegible] and we [illegible] quently under the power of the [illegible] treaty.

The paragraph of this article of the treaty to which I now refer is as follows:

> If the Republic of Panama shall hereafter become a possessor of any other government, but it does not find that government [illegible] that absorbs Panama.
> Here is an express permission that Panama may hereafter merge her sovereignty or [illegible] government or into any union or confederation of states [illegible] as to its form or [illegible] government [illegible] which it is in the Eastern or Western Hemisphere.
> As to how it is dangerous [illegible] to the Monroe doctrine, which is [illegible] more important matter is presented to the people as to the power of the [illegible] in Panama to lead the government into which its sovereignty may be merged to respect and enforce the [illegible] in that paragraph, that "the rights of the United States under such conveyance shall not be in any respect lessened or impaired."

A treaty right can not thus be made perpetual as against a successor to the sovereignty without its consent. It can only be done by irrepealable contract, for any nation can repeal a treaty, and the repeal is valid against a nation in perpetuity if it is made for just cause or because of changed conditions, under the laws of nations. The jus revocandi is perpetual.

As a question applicable to any foreign or American government into which Panama may become merged, it is strange a debatable proposition that such government would be left with entire freedom to dispute the authority of the present Government in Panama to make this guaranty in favor of the United States to extend through all changes of conditions and for all time. This right of merger can have no other effect except to [illegible] Panama [illegible] for the United States and instead of being given by this treaty it should be expressly forbidden.

What are the [illegible] of the Republic of Panama as to maintaining its actual independence and developing into a respectable world power, in contact with the strength, activity, energy and aggressiveness of the Americans who will occupy and control the canal zone and [illegible] its entire vital force?

The answer is that it will be diverted into insignificance in trade and in all the powers of statehood so soon as ships shall pass through the canal without breaking bulk. Its principal business is its [illegible] and its most prosperous institution is Duque's lottery. In that condition its only aspiration will be to [illegible].

Then political troubles will set in presently, and the man on horseback, with a revolutionary flag and a big pair of spurs, will [illegible] the canal [illegible] the man on shipboard will resent the [illegible]. Then the [illegible] of Panama's independence will be realized in the relation of a protectorate of the United States. If we are wise in our day and generation and are not afraid, for the sake of appearances, to pluck the fruit that our [illegible] policy [illegible], we will set out in earnest to do what is our real and necessary purpose—to hold Panama in the leash so long as a ship canal is in [illegible].

But [illegible] will be [illegible] to foreign rule and will lead to hot [illegible]. The [illegible] in Panama will unite with the Spanish [illegible] rule their joint object of [illegible] of Panama [illegible] prospect that they will [illegible] separated from Colombia or will voluntarily be[illegible] the United States.

To the one country or the other Panama will certainly gravitate, because [illegible] or civic [illegible]. The [illegible] are clearly in [illegible] of the ultimate return of Panama to a confederation with Colombia. We will have this difficulty always in the way of our [illegible] very delicate relations with Panama.

Whenever complaint is made against any form of vice or politi[illegible] in the Republic or in the canal zone, or an effort is made to suppress gambling or the resorts of liquor dealers or thieves, the patriotism of those classes will be at once kindled into violent resentment, and their love for Colombian [illegible] will lead [illegible].

It is neither unnatural or surprising that the kindred blood and [illegible] of the people of Colombia and Panama in politics, [illegible], and family relationship should draw them together, [illegible] between Panama and the [illegible] will cause [illegible], controversy, and conflict.

That such [illegible] will [illegible] in the [illegible] tain. There was [illegible] we [illegible] Hay-Varilla treaty, and there never existed [illegible] of any people [illegible] for expecting a continuance of cordial relations that now seem to exist in the region of the canal zone.

[illegible] are clear indications of a suspecting and querulous disposition among those people toward our people and Government.

The Senate admits this fact when it urges the necessity for [illegible] this treaty, and especially in shrinking from amending it, because it may encounter some opposition in Panama if it is sent back for concurrence. If we are afraid of them now and are alarmed because they speak their opinions, what will be our situation when they have the opportunity to do real harm, and assert against us that we refused to hear them [illegible] this treaty?

It is very [illegible] and [illegible] that we should provide by treaty [illegible] for the sovereignty of Panama in any other government besides that of the United States. The [illegible] of Panama, or the merger of its sovereignty in another state or confederation, [illegible] such a union that those fickle people, to whom [illegible], will be sure to accept even on the slightest occasion.

In a day, or by a secret treaty, these results can be easily accomplished, and this treaty can and will be appealed to when this [illegible] covenant that such action is valid and binding on the United States.

No question is required to be asked us by Panama as to the form or the character of the government into which she may choose to be merged, or with which she may be confederated, or where it is geographically located, or whether or not the relations of such government toward the United Statesare friendly or hostile.

If it is a rival power that holds dominion of the Suez Canal, whose sovereignty [illegible] supplant Panama, we will have another isthmian canal [illegible], or else a great war, because we refuse to [illegible] her sovereignty in that of any other [illegible].

Within a month, or a week, after this treaty is ratified and we have paid for the [illegible] under its provisions Panama can [illegible] Reyes by again merging her sover[illegible] that she thereby [illegible] agree to maintain in the first article of this treaty. She can go further and declare, with unanswerable truth, that the people of Panama were living under a code of laws enacted by Colombia when this treaty was signed and that code did not give authority to a junta or board of prefects or consuls to enter into a treaty with a foreign power for any purpose, and especially for the exercise of the highest function of civil government, the grant of lands or of territorial rights in Panama to a foreign government by treaty.

Every question of jurisdiction and power to make a treaty that may now be raised in this body upon this treaty can be raised by any government into which Panama may be merged or with which it may be confederated, and we have no power to deny to such government the right to raise it. How such a question can be settled, otherwise than by war, is not provided for in this treaty. If settled by war, as it will be if it is ever raised, the provisions of this treaty will be responsible for that situation.

When we make war to save our rights under this treaty, it should be at once, whenever any other government attempts to secure the merger of the sovereignty of Panama into its superior sovereignty, or its confederation with other governments without our express consent to be given at the time, and also expressing all the pledges, guaranties, and conditions which the United States may see fit to require or accept, not only as to existing rights, but also to such as we may then demand of such government.

To avoid the necessity of the settlement of such a question by war hereafter we can now so provide that any effort to embarrass our perfect control of the canal will be a casus belli, just as if it were located across the peninsula of Florida. We need not do this in terms if we acquire rights in Panama which neither she nor any other government will question.

It is painful and even distressing to see that we open the door of invitation in this treaty to such interference with this great work. It is to be a feature of our Government which is to be a far more intimate and important feature of our national autonomy than even the Great Lakes of the North.

The canal is to be perpetual, and our control of it is to be perpetual. So that we must now fix, immutably, the conditions on which this part of our national authority is to rest. These conditions are so varied—as yet so unknown—and they are so interwoven with the future success of the work and with its national usefulness that we dare not leave anything to future adjustment that can now be settled by the acquisition of powers that are fully adequate to that end. It is nothing short of criminal folly to surrender to the chances and hazards of the future the power to do as we shall see fit, at any time, with this peculiar and immense work.

We must know now, as far as possible, and we must forever secure the future right to determine what government will hold any rightful power in Panama outside the canal zone and the joint right of control provided by this treaty inside that zone. There is but one way that is possible by which we can secure that power. It is to provide in this treaty, if it is to be the supreme law that will control these rights, so that the Government of the United States shall determine, without let or hindrance, whether the sovereignty of Panama shall be merged into any other state or confederation of states, and all the conditions that are to be annexed to such merger.

To leave this matter entirely to the discretion of Panama, as is done in this treaty, without a single guard that the government into which it is telescoped is bound to respect, is simply to invite trouble and to preordain disaster. If Great Britain or France or Russia or Germany or a South American zollverein, led by Chile, should take Panama in tow, with her love of political liaisons, we might find it too late to repudiate the solemn guaranties of this treaty or to strangle such an anaconda.

Such an alliance or combination, or such an adventure by a single state, supported by the moral force of the laws of nations, would give such states the right, as the Senate now has the right, to question the validity of the cession of the 10-mile zone. They are left free to challenge its validity on the ground that the act of Bunau-Varilla was without the authority of law, and that there was no law in Panama when this treaty was signed that empowered anyone to make such a treaty, and, above all, that the people of Panama had not [illegible] in the negotiation or the ratification of this treaty through a [illegible] agency.

The people of Panama can act upon these questions and destroy this treaty by repealing or renouncing it, and we can do likewise. It is a rope of sand when it becomes the [illegible] of either of the powers [illegible] as to our right to repeal a treaty [illegible] when it no longer suits us to observe its engagements, and we can not deny the same right to Panama.

In such a case the treaty falls, and as to its international obligation, that is a [illegible].

The question whether Panama has the right to make this treaty under any law she had enacted or adopted when it was signed by the agents selected by a self-constituted junta at Panama and ratified by certain local municipal councils or mayors is still open [illegible] not close it by a [illegible] of this body or by an act of the President.

Any nation has the right to say that under the laws of nations Colombia has the right to say that her rightful sovereignty over Panama has not been displaced, and we can not honestly say that her right to maintain that sovereignty has been lost to Colombia.

If Panama, under this treaty, should return to her allegiance to Colombia, as she has the free right to do, then Colombia can lawfully assert that the reunion, so far as she is concerned, is only the restoration of the former allegiance and that her acts, like those of our seceding States from 1861 to 1865, are not valid when they, in any way, affect the national powers and authority of Colombia.

Is this possibility too remote for consideration? Is it absurd, in view of the fact that we are a world power and that Panama is a political kitten in our arms that does not yet hear the cry of Colombia, its caged mother, for its return?

The time will come when Panama will cry out and Colombia will listen, and an applauding world will be more ready to recognize the reunion through this open door in this treaty than it has been to acknowledge the independence of Panama.

Even the strongest men perish of infirmities that first appear in a spot on the cheek, and world powers may perish from some flattering iniquity that kindles a fatal fever in the brain of a president.

We have rumors, such as we are all the time required to act upon without official information, because the President has no respect for the views and wishes of the Senate, but only for its obedience, that Panama has placed some provision in her constitution giving to the United States the right to intervene at any time to preserve order and to protect life and property in Panama.

Was this a suggestion of our Government in an attempt to annul the effect of Article XXIV of this treaty, or was it a frightened expedient of Panama to prevent Colombia from keeping up strife in that Republic?

No matter what is the cause of this strange provision in the constitution of this fresh-born, proud, and independent Republic, our ratification of this treaty without change, after the adoption of that constitution, is only a waiver of any benefit under that provision when Panama chooses to merge her sovereignty in that of another government without a reservation of that provision of her constitution in favor of the United States. In this treaty we permit Panama to merge her sovereignty in another government, and thereby to revoke and destroy the right of the United States to intervene with requisite force to compel obedience to her will in the preservation of peace, order, life, and property or the authority of the laws of Panama anywhere in that Republic.

To make this concession irrevocable it must be secured by a bond that is stronger than a treaty, which can be repealed by legislative act. It must be a legislative compact, like that with Cuba, which can be revoked only with the consent of both Governments.

It is not far to see that this expedient is supposed to be based on the Platt amendment to the army appropriation bill relating to Cuba. But the plagiarist who did this work did not make a faithful copy of the original.

The Platt amendment was an act of Congress that required that the constitution of Cuba should set forth certain organic laws. This, when done, was a compact between two governments. A treaty was also provided for to clinch the compact; for what reason I have never known.

If this treaty contained the provision that the part of the constitution of Panama which I have mentioned should be irrevocable, then we could assert it as a treaty right against any government into which the sovereignty of Panama may be merged. But to make the agreement sure and steadfast it should be a legislative compact on the part of both Governments, and should be irrevocable except with the consent of both.

The third article also should be amended and sent back to Panama for acceptance, so as to give us the right to intervene at our option for the protection of life, liberty, property, and public order, including the suppression of all such establishments and practices as are calculated to encourage it, and providing that this power shall be perpetual in the United States.

With such definitions as to the independence of Panama as will prevent the international attitude, whatever it may be, from interfering with our sovereign right to exclusively construct, control, and protect the canal, the treaty would be improved in a vital and essential feature. With such amendment it will be only a proclamation and source for future controversy and will embarrass our operations in Panama to a degree of dangerous insecurity.

I have gone over, thus hastily, these features of the present and prospective situations in Panama that I might justify the appeal to the Senate for a careful revision of this treaty and for its postponement to whatever may be the regular and permanent authorities at Panama for consideration and ratification.

The points I have referred to, inside the independence of Panama, a matter that more otherwise concerned, remained unsettled until the right of Colombia to enforce her authority in Panama has been settled.

Of course Panama, under Article XXIV of this treaty, could set that question at rest by merely consenting to transfer her sovereignty into that of Colombia. And she might settle it by transfering her sovereignty in that of the United States or some other strong power that Colombia could not resist. But it requires no argument to convince any man that Panama could not prevent Colombia from compelling her submission, if other nations do not interfere.

But we can not, and the world will not, now settle it conclusively against Colombia, under any principle of international law or the practice of nations, that Panama is, under the present conditions, a free, sovereign, and independent republic.

We are preventing Colombia from asserting her authority over a party of insurrectionists in Panama by military force, and, in the absence of such interposition, her power to put down the rebellion in Panama is not disputed.

Our recognition of the sovereign independence of Panama under such conditions is of no conclusive weight under the laws of nations. Yet, as an accomplished fact, so declared by our Government, we may regard it as a lawful situation, under our municipal laws, and act upon it.

It is from this standpoint that I regard this treaty as if it was the act of two equal powers, both being sovereign and independent.

In doing this for one I must regard the action to be taken by the Senate as if it were dealing with one of the most powerful of the nations of the earth, neither yielding anything to a sentiment, such as a generous man might yield to a foundling placed under his care, nor omitting any safeguard for the future that is required when we are so providing as to protect the United States against possible dangers from powerful nations.

I am now trying to discuss general questions and situations that arise under and in connection with this treaty, and will advert to the circumstances of its origin to show that they require of the Senate unusual care and circumspection.

This is a very great treaty, that is intended to measure its existence with that of the United States and its influence with the whole extent of the earth.

But we are treating, in respect of such matters, with a party that is under duress from fear of Colombia, and from incapacity to deny us anything we choose to demand as the price of our protection against Colombia. This treaty power is the first of its sort that ever appeared in the annals of history.

There was never before such a government established, professing to be a republic, as that which existed in Panama from November 3 until this treaty was signed. It can only be described correctly by saying that it wanted every element that belongs to an established government, with either municipal or international powers.

After its declaration of independence, issued by a few inhabitants at a public meeting, those who asserted authority or attempted to enforce it found no laws to sustain them except those enacted by Colombia.

They did not even attempt to provide other laws for the control of the people. Their alleged independence was not a fact sanctioned by law. It was only a political situation with nothing to support it but force, the will of an unorganized body of people, and the protection of the Navy of the United States, without which the insurrectionary movement would not have been set on foot.

Colombia was, in fact, petitioning the Government of the United States for the withdrawal of its prohibition against the exercise of her constitutional sovereignty over Panama when this treaty was signed by the minister of Panama appointed by that junta.

If the Senate of the United States ratifies a treaty thus ordained in Panama, it will make lawful the most destructive principle that can be devised for the undoing of republics and the destruction of the union, strength, and solidarity of all governments, republican in form, which derive all their powers from the people, organized as self-governing nations.

The whole fabric of republican government rests upon the will of the people expressed through organic laws and organized institutions that are elective and are not self-assuming. It is the union of the people in that form and upon that basis that constitutes a republican form of government, as distinguished from government by what is called "divine right."

It remains for the Senate of the United States to establish a law of the highest authority, that is to be the supreme law of this Republic, under which an existing and recognized sister American republic can be disintegrated, torn apart, and dismembered by a portion of its citizens, acting without any legal form of organization, in open and treasonable defiance of the laws and constitution of Colombia.

Such a law for the destruction of republics should never receive the sanction of this body. If this is done no republic can have a longer lease of existence than may be granted by some more powerful government, according to its pleasure or to satisfy its greed.

Any great temptation, such as a route for an isthmian canal like that at Panama or Nicaragua, or mines of gold like those of Alaska, or great bribes of money like the $40,000,000 was now to place under the control of a few insurrectos in Panama, will induce covetous powers and treasonable citizens to unite in the spoliation of the government, for motives of personal gain and national cupidity, and the wealth and prosperity of our American republics will be the cause of their destruction by more powerful nations.

Under the rule we will establish in the ratification of this treaty no republic that has anything that any other government desires can be safe against destruction under this furtive and fatal plan of disintegration.

With reference to the boundaries of the powers of the Senate, questions are raised by this treaty that are of the first magnitude and require the most patient and conscientious inquiry.

In Article III of this treaty the question is distinctly presented, whether the treaty-making power of the Government can acquire by purchase from another government lands and territorial rights within its jurisdiction, so as to extend to Congress the duty and confer upon it the power to make rules and regulations for its government and for its disposal.

By the third article of this treaty the Republic of Panama grants to the United States, in exclusive and perpetual sovereign right, more than 520 square miles of its territory, designated by metes and bounds, whereby it becomes the property of the United States. Congress must therefore make laws, rules, and regulations for the use and disposal of this area after it is so acquired, if the acquisition is constitutional.

If Congress provides no such laws, it is very clear that the treaty-making power can not provide them, so that the grant is not complete until the Congress has accepted it. It is, at most, only an executory contract that depends upon the consent of a third power for its complete execution.

The Government of the United States, therefore, in all its departments, which are only three, is not bound by such an acquisition of territory from a foreign state until it has been accepted by Congress. Until such a treaty is accepted by Congress in some form it can have no effective force or operation. No such treaty can be self-executing.

If I am right in this point, this treaty does not perfect the grant of this land to the United States, and unless we are willing to take the risk of the future action of our Congress, without providing in this treaty that Congress shall ratify the purchase, it should be so amended, unless such provision is found in the novel and unusual form in which its ratification is provided for in Article XXVI, as follows:

> The convention when signed by the plenipotentiaries of the contracting parties shall be ratified by the respective Governments, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington at the earliest possible date.

Our Constitution requires that treaties shall be ratified by the Senate of the United States, not by the Government.

The Senate is not the Government of the United States, nor is that Government limited in any case to the Senate.

The President and the Senate are not a department of the Government. They constitute a tribunal or commission to make treaties, with no other powers conferred upon it. It is so usual as to have become a diplomatic rule that our treaties must state in the text that they must be ratified by the Senate. There is no rule or practice or law that a treaty can be ratified by the Government of the United States. This rule has been ignored under circumstances that suggest a new and utterly inadmissible power on the part of the President.

In our intercourse with foreign powers the President is known to them as the Government of the United States. This treaty, in its express terms, provides for the ratification by the respective Governments of the treaty powers. This is not a refinement that sticks in the bark of the subject, as to our own engagement of ratification. The language employed is misleading and should therefore be corrected by the Senate: it is a matter of most weighty import when the act of ratification is required to be made by the Government of Panama.

At the time this treaty was signed there was no known government in Panama that was capable of making such a treaty. If a government has since grown up there that can make a treaty and ratify it, this treaty, if the Senate chooses to act upon it as an unauthorized negotiation, should speak from the date of its ratification and not from the date of its signature.

In that case, as in the case of the Hay-Herran treaty, this instrument, when perfected by the Senate, should be sent to Panama for ratification or dissent. On just principles of fair dealing and frank intercourse between the President and the Senate on this grave and weighty matter, nothing should be concealed or omitted that will give the Senate a full knowledge of the facts as they are known to the President and the Department of State.

The credentials and full powers of M. Bunau-Varilla as the Panama negotiator are disputed by Senators in their places, as not being sufficient to enable him to make this treaty.

The Committee on Foreign Relations, by vote, called upon the Secretary of State for a copy of these powers, and he declined to furnish them to the committee, and thereupon, after the lapse of several days, the committee rescinded its resolution.

The Senate should, in justice to the Administration, demand that those powers should be sent to the Senate, that it may be seen whether the negotiation of this treaty has been conducted by an unauthorized person, and whether those from whom such powers emanated were "the Government" of Panama, empowered to make treaties and exchange ratifications, and whether, in fact, those persons comprise the Government of Panama, with which ratifications can now be lawfully exchanged.

Panama now claims to have a railroad that is to be a source of revenue to the local Government, as the successor to the Government of Colombia, to the sum of $250,000 per annum, provided some way can be found in which, by operation of the laws of nations, the contract between the railroad company to pay that amount to Colombia can be transferred to Panama without the consent of Colombia, or we are to take that revenue and to pay Panama in lieu of it a corresponding annuity without limit of time as to its continuance.

The lawyer who finds a rule or principle by which the terms of that contract can be so changed as to substitute Panama or the United States as payee therein, in lieu of Colombia, under the laws of nations, will be entitled to the highest distinctions of his profession in the art of perverting a contract so as to make it destructive of the rights of the payee through his misfortune in falling beneath the power of another, who, with the aid of friends, is strong enough to rob him of the property to which the contract relates.

If there is any principle of justice or law, municipal or international, that gives to the robber, by succession or accretion, all the rights of his victim under any contract that relates to property taken by violence, it is new to my ideas of personal or national right.

The robber law that gives to a conqueror all the property and rights of his enemy that comes to his possession in the conquered territory is tolerated, not as a law of spoils to reward the victor, but as a law of government, to better enable the new ruler to do justice and preserve rightful authority among his new subjects, and his right of legal succession to such property is sustained by such purposes.

In the case of the railroad and of the proposed canal, the benefit of the annual rental stipulated in the concession was made the property of Colombia—a consolidated government, republican in form, like the Government of France, consisting of nine Departments, of which Panama was one.

As to that Department, the constitution gave to the Congress of Colombia the express power to legislate for it in all matters. It had no law-making power except such as, from time to time, the Congress of Colombia choose to delegate to it for local purposes.

The reason for this exceptional provision as to Panama was, chiefly, that it had been a seceding State prior to 1846, and its distance from Bogota and the main body of the Republic exposed it to raids of filibusters and to the promoters of secession. Its possession of a short line of transit between the oceans made it peculiarly attractive to adventurers, buccaneers, and political revolutionists, and constantly exposed it to such marauds.

It was to meet and prevent such conditions that our treaty with Colombia in 1846 contained the guaranty of the United States that we would protect the sovereignty of Colombia over the Department of Panama and its ownership thereof, so that no political outbreak there, however successful it might be in establishing a government de facto, could release the United States from its guaranty of the ownership of the soil in sovereign right to Colombia.

Another reason also operated to make this guaranty of the highest value to Colombia. It was that the citizens of the United States were given the right of transit across the Isthmus on an equal footing with the people of Colombia; and, having shown a marked and unworthy disposition to conduct filibustering operations, they could not be admitted to such rights by Colombia without the strongest pledges on the part of the United States to protect the sovereignty of Colombia over Panama and her ownership of the soil in each and every event.

Until 1856 Panama possessed powers of local government that frequently developed into conflicts with the Federal Government of Colombia which were costly and disastrous.

In the constitution of 1856, which was accepted by Panama, these powers were taken away and the Department of Panama was placed more directly and exclusively under the legislative control of the Federal Congress at Bogota than any of our Territories are under the Congress of the United States.

The reason for all these peculiar provisions as to Panama are clear enough when we consider the character of population that was drawn to that locality by the remunerative employment given by the railroad and canal works to the lowest classes; and its distance from the main body of the Republic, which could only be successfully reached by water routes, made it very difficult to govern.

Now, to a mind that does not find in some misapplied canon of the law a convenient theory to justify a wrong, it seems quite plain that no condition could possibly exist under the treaty of 1846 that could justify a purchase of the soil and territorial rights of Colombia in that Department from any government in Panama in hostility to Colombia and as its rebellious successor to the sovereignty of that Republic. Our treaty pledge was given to secure Colombia against this exact state or condition of affairs in Panama.

To-day our Government is in Panama claiming the right to be there only under the treaty of Colombia of 1846. If that treaty is of force to protect that transit, why is it not in force to protect Colombia in the ownership of the territory we are about to purchase from Panama?

But if any mind of easy flight, not ballasted with a very weighty sense of duty, can surmount these difficulties with the aid of legal subtleties, let us see how far the law goes in justifying robbery when it is for public uses.

No case could better measure these lines and put a clearer limit upon spoliation, by legal intendment, than this one. Colombia had nine Departments before Panama was purloined, with a population of about four and a half millions—about as many people as the United States had at the close of the Revolutionary war. With Panama, her area was 504,772 square miles. Panama was less than one-twelfth of her area. Colombia was nearly ten times as large as Alabama, and more than eleven times larger than Pennsylvania. She possessed Panama, with 31,571 square miles, less than one-twelfth of her area, and a population of one-fifteenth of her entire census.

The most prized of the localities of Colombia were the railroad and canal routes at Panama. These routes, and the concessions she granted over them, gave to every part of Colombia its highest prospects for national progress, wealth, and aggrandizement.

To the cities of Panama and Colon there was a rich promise of permanent wealth from the railroad building and its traffic, and of wealth from the construction of the canal; to be followed by a loss of commerce on the canal after its completion and from the practical destruction of the railroad traffic when the canal should be finished.

In this situation it is evident that the completion of the canal would increasingly benefit all other parts of Colombia, while the benefit to Panama would be constantly diminishing. To secure these great advantages to the Republic, and the income of the canal and the railroad to the national treasury, and the entire value of both at the end of one hundred years, she made to N. B. Wyse, in 1878, a concession of ninety-nine years for a canal with an annuity of not less than $250,000 from its opening, and an annuity of $250,000 from the railroad company. At the end of these terms of ninety-nine years there was to be no extension, but the entire property of the canal and the railroad was to revert to Colombia, without compensation.

No more wise or profitable contract was ever made by any government, and if the canal had been completed, or could have been, no government would have had a richer endowment for its treasury and its people than these contracts yielded.

These contracts were made for and on behalf of the Republic of Colombia, under its sovereign authority, and not alone for Panama, nor even in the larger part, nor for any specific part of the revenue or the commercial benefits of the canal or the railroad, for the benefit of Panama. Panama had no special or separate right in these national benefits.

The fact that the canal and the railroad were located in the Department of Panama did not give to the people there any special rights under these concessions. The land was the property of Colombia, and its ownership was guaranteed to Colombia by the United States, and not to the Department or to the people of Panama.

Until the 3d of November, 1903, Colombia was keeping all her obligations under the Wyse concession with the New Panama Canal Company, and with the Panama Railroad Company, and all her obligations to the people and the Government of the United States in Panama were carried out in good faith.

On that day some of the people of Panama, under the protection of the United States, [illegible] through a [illegible] junta, the secession of that Department from Colombia. Yet they did not [illegible] the railroad company or the railroad company in the [illegible] of the concessions granted them by Colombia. Was this secured [illegible] Panama of all the benefits and all the obligations of the Republic of Colombia, under these concessions, or the Republic of Panama then became a free, sovereign and independent republic?

The Republic of Colombia was not destroyed by this secession of Panama. She is still entitled to at least her ancient part, according to area or population, or both, of the benefits of these concessions, and is bound to both these companies to keep them in possession of their rights under these contracts. If we seize them and are bound to go to war to preserve them for these companies, or if Panama seizes them and sells them to us, Colombia is still bound to protect and enforce her concessions. If she was as powerful as we are, she would not hesitate to perform this duty. We forbid her even to make the attempt. In this instance, our strength is all our glory.

But this is an entire mistake, and it is not susceptible of apportionment between two contracting parties as to rights or obligations under it except by the consent of all the parties.

No court can apportion these rights and obligations; they are either ended by the secession of Panama, in which event they are no longer operative as grants or concessions, or if any court anywhere in work out the equities between the parties it must be a court of Colombia, which is the mother country of the concessions and of the corporations to which they were granted.

No foreign court could possibly apportion these contract rights between Panama and Colombia so as to give to each a just share of the benefits, or to impose upon either a just share of the liabilities, and the present mind [illegible] be that the secession of one state may take with it the revenues that belong to eight other states, or its responsibilities [illegible] anything with it. As we are to be the purchasers and lessees of concessions from Panama, shall we assert, as we do in this treaty, that we will take all these rents?

Except in an act of the major, neither Panama nor France nor the United States can confer upon the United States or upon the Panama Canal Company any rights or obligations that exist under these concessions in favor of Colombia.

Nowhere can we find any warrant of law for striking out the name of Colombia in these agreements and inserting the name of Panama or the name of the United States. If the Senate does this, its prestige is gone, its honor is tarnished.

These concessions are dead, or else they still inure to Colombia. If the canal company continues to pay the annuity to Colombia, the court will sustain the payments.

The claims of title by conquest or successful secession can not be applied to the extent of converting into public property contracts that inure to the Republic of Colombia, because they relate in part, to a concession or lease of lands in Panama that derives its validity from the laws of Colombia, which was the real and entire consideration for the agreement.

The lease of the right of way to the railroad company was a sale for unlimited period, with payments to be made annually to Colombia. If the title to the country passed to Panama, subject to these concessions, as this treaty provides, the rights of the railroad company are sacred, and Colombia has the indisputable right to collect the rents.

Panama has possession of nothing except the political power over the land by which the railroad is temporarily and the canal is partly constructed, and it has not ventured to lay its hands upon either of these properties. They still hold under the concessions from Colombia and have not attempted to attorn to Panama as their lessor.

There is great danger to the United States in this situation.

The worst and most conspicuous danger, however, is to the character of the Republic.

It has been solely through our assistance that the present condition has been possible in Panama. We have created it, and until wrong becomes right we will have the entire responsibility and many troubles. I regret the eagerness of the Senate to assume these responsibilities.

We have predicated our actions upon the false pretense that we are moved by the sacred love of liberty to assist a persecuted people in Panama in escaping from the power of Colombia, when our actual motive was to force Colombia away from her own territory that we might take it under the guise of a purchase from Panama, in order to secure a canal route that Colombia had failed to concede to the United States under the Hay-Herran treaty, but was still willing to concede so soon as her constitution could be so amended as to enable her Congress to pass the necessary law.

We deny to the Colombian Congress the right to define the limit of its rights and powers under the constitution of its own Government.

This is a painful statement of our attitude as a government, but it is true.

What other motives may have influenced Colombia in rejecting the Hay-Herran treaty is not a question that concerns our motives or purposes in an act of retaliation for that disappointment.

Colombia was acting within her rights in the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty, and we were not within our rights in protecting Panama with our naval forces while her people, or the few men who assumed to stand for her people, threw off her allegiance to Colombia and seized the Department of Panama.

If our motives had been free from selfishness and without any covetous design; if we had been animated with the pure spirit of sympathy for people in distress, or for those whose liberty was threatened or was being destroyed, the world would applaud the motive of our act, but would deplore the open breach of the laws of nations by one of the great powers in the attempted gratification of a generous purpose.

Our people would have lamented the indiscretion as an unnecessary expression of sympathy for an oppressed people; but even in such a situation, and for such reasons and motives, they would not sanction the use of military force to secure the independence of Panama, there being no relation of friendship or interdependence between us and those people that would furnish a reason or excuse for such intervention.

Unhappily, our actual motive was either national aggrandizement or the ambitious designs of the President.

On the 3d day of November, 1903, the President made known his purpose to protect what is called "the uprising" at Panama with the armed forces of the United States and to maintain a declaration of the independence of Panama as a separate republic.

On that day Colombia was at peace with the United States and her diplomatic relations, which had continued in unbroken friendship for three-fourths of a century, were uninterrupted. Her diplomatic representatives still held relations of friendship with ours and continue them to this day, we having since that date received and conferred with a special ambassador from Colombia in friendly intercourse.

We have not notified Colombia of any fault or delinquency on her part in observing any of her treaty obligations with the United States or of any injustice, cruelty, or neglect toward the people of Panama.

Indeed, there existed no open question between Colombia and the United States that in the least degree caused any irritation between them.

Whatever may have been a just ground for complaint toward Colombia, if any existed, she was innocent in the eyes of the United States, for no sort of complaint was made by us, either as to her foreign or domestic relations.

Our intervention in the secession of Panama must, therefore, find some other ground of support than any cause of complaint that existed toward her on the part of the United States.

The true reason for such intervention, and the only one, was the refusal of the Colombian Congress to ratify the Hay-Herran treaty, that was intended for no other purpose than to obtain the canal concessions at Panama. That was the sole purpose and object of that negotiation.

Our intervention was [illegible] the disappointment of [illegible] Colombian Congress had refused to grant in the form and on the terms of the Hay-Herran treaty.

The President in [illegible] movement in Panama gave the assistance of the Navy to the men who were the officers and agents of the New Panama Canal Company, who had control of the Panama Railroad, which was the real factor of importance in the problem of preventing Colombia from using her forces, whether civil or military, in the suppression of that insurrection against her lawful and rightful government.

Among those who were prominent in the insurrection were several citizens of the United States.

The insurrectionists organized a provisional government in Panama consisting of three of their number, who are called "consuls" or "prefects." The powers that were thus assigned to these men have not been made known to the Senate. No laws enacted by them, if they had any legislative powers, have been brought to the attention of the Senate. We only have for our guidance the legal presumption that the laws of Colombia in force in Panama on the 3d day of November, 1903, remain in force until they are repealed by some legislative authority in Panama or are substituted by other laws so enacted.

In addition to the total want of justification for any assault upon the sovereignty of Colombia by the United States, we united with the officers and agents of the Panama Railroad, which is controlled by the New Panama Canal Company, in active military operations conducted for the purpose of putting down a insurrection against Colombia and to secure the permanent secession and independence of Panama.

The person appointed by this triumvirate of consuls as minister plenipotentiary to the United States is a citizen of France, with personal interest in the stock and a salaried [illegible] of the Panama Canal Company and with former official relations with that company as director-general and contract relations for doing large and costly work on the canal.

The New Panama Canal Company, whose connection with the old company is practically inseparable, induced the Government of France to obtain from the Spanish state, or some other alleged authority in Panama, the solemn pledge that all contracts between Colombia and either of said companies entered into prior to the 3d of November, 1903, should be confirmed and enforced by Panama. This compact antedated the Hay-Varilla treaty.

This attitude of the United States toward Colombia has no warrant in precedent. Being the result of inducements of a strongly tempting character, it is a selfish and covetous aggression. Colombia being at war in Panama for the [illegible] of her lawful sovereignty in that Department of the Republic, for the protection of which she has our treaty guaranty, the intervention of the United States in support of the insurrection made us a party to that war.

It still continues and would be successful in reestablishing the rightful authority of Colombia in Panama if our military intervention was withdrawn. Of this fact there is no reasonable doubt.

We are for the time being a truce to our hostilities, while we are attempting to negotiate with Colombia for the purpose of [illegible]

This [illegible] the political condition of Colombia so far as we are concerned.

If it is successful it will relieve the situation of one of its worst and most alarming features, for it will enable us to go to work on the proposition of [illegible] canal at Panama without the [illegible] of a bushwhacking conflict with Colombian insurgents and their allies, the savage tribes of Indians in the [illegible] of Panama.

[illegible] many of our soldiers who are already suffering seriously from exposure in camps in the [illegible]

No formal declaration of war has been made by Colombia against the United States. None is needed to make a state of actual belligerency between our Government and that of Colombia or that Government in protecting it against attack by Colombia.

The proposed ratification of article 1 of this treaty will commit the United States to maintain the independence of Panama and the discussion of that proposition will throw upon our soldiers the whole burden of the existing war between Panama and Colombia. In consideration of, and as a condition, that we should put an end to the ratification of that article of this treaty will be a declaration of war. It may be a defensive war, but none the less an actual state of war with Colombia.

This is the task the Senate is required to assume, to aid an unlawful exploit of the President, and it has neither the adequate powers nor any just cause for yielding to that demand.

If the action of the Senate in making this open declaration, which gives to Colombia a just cause for war against the United States, should be delayed so as to afford a reasonable time to settle and compose the relations between Panama and Colombia, there is hope that the situation in Panama can be so cleared that work on the canal can be conducted with greater safety, and that our soldiery may be saved from the ravages of disease to which they must be exposed in camp in that fatal climate.

As to the necessity of gaining the consent of Colombia to a reconciliation with Panama and the United States before we are committed to a declaration of hostilities with Colombia, there exists some serious miscalculations among Senators.

A [illegible] to pride of country and race was never inflicted upon any people than that which Colombians feel in the existing conditions in Panama. To aggravate this suffering by an arrogant attitude on our part is surely not the part of wisdom or generosity.

It may gratify the pride of the President, who has brought about this situation, that he may find in it some excuse for violating the laws of the United States, but it will not gratify our sober-minded people. Aside from that, however, we should not so far underrate Colombians as to suppose that they have not the courage or the ability to conduct war for the redress of grievances. It may be hopeless of good results to Colombia in a practical way, but men who have just conceptions of their rights are not apt to weigh them in the filthy scales of commercialism.

If any nation has ever been robbed of an important province or department by duress, without at some time endeavoring to recover it by war, I have failed to read of it in history.

A surrender to duress is so humiliating that it becomes a badge of cowardice or of utter helplessness if it is never attempted to be removed. No such surrenders without a conflict of arms are recorded in Spanish history.

The President-elect of Colombia, General Reyes, in his recent correspondence with our Department of State, has notified us of the fixed purpose of that Republic to restore its territorial integrity at Panama.

This is far from being an idle boast, and the patient and methodical way in which he is proceeding is a strong assurance of the earnest and settled purpose of his Government.

If war occurs, it may not be a great war, or one that is in any respect [illegible] war. If it [illegible] until peace and the safety of Panama and the canal are secured it will be difficult, protracted, costly, and fatal to many thousands of our people.

In the first revolution in Colombia, the war for the expulsion of the Spaniards led by Bolivar and supported by the English and the [illegible], was severe and destructive. It continued for ten years.

With the entire population of Colombia arrayed against the United States even a longer struggle may be [illegible], but it is the guerrilla character of Indian and Spanish warfare in the Isthmus that is likely to be the most [illegible] and expensive to the United States in protecting and operating the twenty to fifty thousand unmarried laborers that we will employ on the construction of the canal.

Such conditions should be avoided if patient and wise foresight are equal to the occasion. [illegible] is impossible, and the consequences are upon the conscience of the Senate.

A final vote on the treaty, without amendment, is demanded for no reason [illegible]. No [illegible] that seems to be important can be [illegible] will be referred to the Senate.

Such [illegible] amendment, and have been so reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, are not to be [illegible] purchasers. Senators, [illegible] are [illegible] that they have looked [illegible] carefully and I voted [illegible] it seems, has dazzled [illegible] into darkness and I turned their judgment into [illegible]. [illegible] the discussion of the Hay-Herran treaty all [illegible] voted down. Many of them were addressed to the [illegible] and even [illegible] that if a third or fourth treaty was changed Colombia would reject it.

It is [illegible] that [illegible] to the Hay-Herran [illegible] of its chief recommendations.

I then appealed to the Senate to be informed whether the urgency for [illegible] was so great that we could not afford to lose the time to do [illegible] by our own country. I again make that appeal, and accompany it with the inquiry: Are we so alarmed at the condition of Panama, or at the ill temper of that infant ward of the United States, yet in its swaddling clothes, that we dare not propose any amendment to this treaty lest it should kick the whole thing [illegible] into the fire?

Are we to be again assured by grave Senators that if any trouble is hereafter found in the terms of the treaty or in its interpretation that it is the fixed purpose of the United States to have its own way in the matter, and that in practice we will hereafter put amendments into the treaty that we now refuse to write in it?

To rely upon such rules of construction with safety depends upon the size or the strength of the high contracting powers we are dealing with.

It would not do if we were treating with even a respectable power, and it will not answer to put force in the stead of agreement should Panama, under Article XXIV, become merged into or confederated with some strong power.

I will only point out, but will not discuss, such startling propositions as guides for the action of the Senate.

It is no mere surmise, it is a fact that is proven by abundant evidence in our archives, that this urgent demand for hasty and conclusive action on this treaty comes from our entanglement with the old and New Panama Canal companies.

If no special reference was made to those companies in this treaty, the nervous haste for its ratification would come down to the temper of quiet consideration of its many vital provisions. If such omission had been in the treaty, however, it would not be here in the form it is, if it would ever have been negotiated by Buneau-Varilla or the junta that congratulated him. This treaty has for a leading purpose the payment of $40,000,000 to the New Panama Canal Company. If that is disappointed or postponed, the urgency for its ratification would be quieted down.

We are in fact in reality the managers of war with Colombia by passing through the ratification of this treaty, to meet the demands of France and the Panama Canal Company.

The most important company in Panama is the Panama Railroad Company, chartered under the laws of New York. Yet, as to its rights we are quite hoodwinked.

It is the only highway for commerce or passengers in the Department of Panama, and is therefore the only transit that the United States has ever protected or has any occasion to protect.

About 80 per cent of the stock of this company is held by the New Panama Canal Company under contracts that are fraudulent and void, as I have demonstrated in the Senate, and has been capturing property of the Government in Interoceanic Canals.

It is a valuable property, yielding great dividends that will increase during all the time the canal is under construction. It is the only foreign company there that yields any revenue.

An American who has any regard for the rights and property of Americans would look after the interests of this company in making a treaty with Colombia or with Panama and incorporate this railroad in the same zone that includes the incomplete Panama Canal.

The government of that company to any transfer of its concessions to the United States, secured by a contract with it, is quite as necessary and quite as important as the consent of the Panama Canal Company. Yet in this treaty and in the Hay-Herran treaty and its progenitor, the Hay-Cassini treaty, no mention is made of the Panama Railroad Company, except that its railroad is sold outright by the Panama Canal Company to the United States with the consent of Colombia in the Hay-Herran treaty, and with the consent of Panama in the Hay-Varilla treaty, just as if that company and its railroad and its concessions belonged to the New Panama Canal Company.

Why has this distinction been made between these two companies, thus ignoring the United States corporation, while the French company is not only consulted, but is permitted, through Cromwell, its general counsel, to participate in the negotiations with the United States and everywhere in evidence and heard is demand in obtaining concessions for a canal?

Why is that company here now, with its funds tied with Colombian blood, demanding that the Senate shall hasten to ratify this treaty?

The answer is plain enough. It is because the Panama Railroad is complete, and the sale of its stock by the canal company involves no great sum of money and furnishes no margin for speculation. But the canal is incomplete, and the New Panama Canal Company never intended to complete it. They were compelled either to sell it or forfeit their entire property, under the Wyse concession, to Colombia. This seems to be a desperate situation to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who evidently thinks it an outrage that this company shall be compelled to comply with its contracts.

It could only be sold to the United States—the only possible purchaser—and the right to become the vendor of the property was its only chance to realize anything from its property, that was then utterly incapable of ever earning a cent of money for its stockholders.

The sum of $40,000,000 that the United States bid for this property, gave to that company the power to set on foot an immense contest among speculators, lobbyists, and lawyers, and they had the power and the audacity to push their demands into the most reserved councils of government.

What they had to sell is the same that a person sometimes sells to doctors—his body for post-mortem season on the dissecting table.

This is not an imaginary or overdrawn statement.

The New Panama Canal Company had no possible chance to perform its contract for the completion of the canal according to its terms, by the 21st of October, 1904. Or if that term should be extended to October 31, 1904, it was equally impossible that they could have completed the canal or even to have made an impression upon it. They only put $12,000,000 into their treasury to construct a canal that had already cost the old company $[illegible] and to dig two-fifths of it.

The New Panama Canal Company had no right to occupy the relation to the United States of vendor of its ditch and plant or the ground it occupied, or of the concessions from Colombia.

It had not earned these properties, and it was impossible that it could earn them under the Wyse concession. The consent of the Congress of Colombia was the prerequisite to any such sale. It was for that which we were to pay Colombia $10,000,000. The sale when made, ended all hope for a canal under the Wyse concession, which would have been so valuable to Colombia, if it had been opened, and would have refunded all that the New Panama Canal Company had put into it, with a large profit added. It is now the same case with Panama.

Colombia's chances for the forfeiture of that property were as certain as death, and that fact rendered the title of the company under that lease of no practical value. It was this bare chance, with no prospect of its becoming valuable, that the New Panama Canal Company engaged Cromwell to sell to the United States for $40,000,000.

That project fell with the Hay-Herran treaty, and is now renewed under the Hay-Varilla treaty, with the price enhanced above $40,000,000, but to what amount is not known.

France has interposed and required Panama to agree to adopt and ratify all the concessions made to the canal company by any authority in Colombia, and to require the United States to purchase these rights and properties from the New Panama Canal Company, as the landlord, instead of being the lessee, and to provide in this treaty that our title to the ceded canal belt shall not be absolute until we have consummated such purchase.

I need not restate these indisputable facts that no one denies, or the fact that the prominent men in the New Panama Canal Company agreed to subscribe its capital stock and to complete the canal in order to obtain releases from heavy fines and pardons from convictions for felonies, for robberies of the old company. No one has denied or can deny these facts. I again refer to them to show that these men have no claims to the indulgence of the United States or to be tolerated in conducting and controlling our negotiations with Colombia or Panama for canal concessions.

In this treaty they have no participation in Article XXII, that we can not get at a decisive blow to the canal grant from Panama until we have purchased and paid for their canal property and concessions at a price that is satisfactory to them, and France has lent Panama to support and enforce their demands as the condition of their recognition of its independence.

It is to fasten this part of this treaty bargain and to secure profits thereby in speculations in the stocks of the New Panama Canal Company and the bonds of the old company, that this treaty is to be rushed through the Senate and ratified, to the exclusion of all amendments, even those that the committee have recommended to the Senate.

This urgency for swift dispatch, at the expense of the reputation of the Senate as a careful and deliberative body, does not come from Panama, but from those who are manipulating the demands of the New Panama Canal Company and the holders of its stocks and the bonds of said company in syndicates that have bought them for a song in times when their prospective value was greatly depressed.

Such combinations are in control of such powers in our country that to contend with them seems to be a fruitless endeavor.

The point of urgency at this moment is to realize their profits before the French courts have passed upon the rights of Colombia and to assert non-obligations of their contracts against the Panama canal and railroad companies.

If the Senate should ever find a worse situation than that assigned to it by these operators in the effort they make to shape the action of this body, its past splendid reputation will only be a memory of better days, passed forever.

That we should pause to give the people of Panama, on the demand of such persons, the opportunity to discuss a treaty with the United States lest they should find objection to it, is an exhibition of oppressive power that even the syndicates who are making this urgent pressure upon the Senate will deride us for when their greed is satisfied.

I respectfully submit that what I have shown to the Senate furnishes ample reason for the deliberate and courageous action of the Senate in providing for the future welfare and safety of the country, and that is all that I now insist upon.

The days will be few and full of trouble until it will be manifest that our determination to push this treaty through the forms of ratification without amendment and without submitting it to an organized government in Panama is a fearful mistake.

I have tried to do my duty to prevent this unnecessary borrowing of trouble, and will still perform it, in good faith, to avoid or modify or correct those evils that will crowd upon us in the near future, and with this declaration I will be free from responsibility from results that our rash action will flood upon the country.

I am very much obliged to the Senator from Wisconsin for his courtesy.

I desire to append to my remarks as a supplement an article entitled "The recognition of Panama," an address delivered at the Massachusetts Reform Club, by Mr. Moorfield Storey. He treats the subject entirely as a publicist and lawyer would treat it, without any political motive.

With the consent of the Senate I will append it as a supplement to my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there may be printed as a supplement to his remarks a paper by Mr. Moorfield Storey, of Boston. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the order is made.

The paper referred to is as follows:

THE RECOGNITION OF PANAMA.

[Address delivered at Massachusetts Reform Club, December 5, 1903, by Moorfield Storey.]

In order to discuss intelligently the action of the Administration toward the Republic of Panama it is necessary first to know the facts, and I will endeavor to state those briefly.

Friendly relations have long existed between the United States and New Granada, in the words of the notary [illegible] "and we have expended for the money on the personnel of the navy more than [illegible] the navy itself." That is, it binds both the United States and the Republic of Colombia, which has succeeded to the rights and obligations of New Granada.

[illegible] following reciprocal agreements:

"The Government of New Granada guarantees to the Government of the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama upon any mode of conveyance that may now exist, or that may hereafter be constructed, shall cost the Government and citizens of the United States and the property and citizens of any other nation, no more than the same rate as shall be charged to the citizens of New Granada."

"The United States guarantees positively and unconditionally to New Granada, in the present stipulation, the perfect neutrality of the before mentioned Isthmus, with the view that the transit from one sea to the other may not be interrupted or put in jeopardy in any future time while this treaty exists, and in consequence the United States also guarantee in the same manner the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada has and possesses over the said territory."

Clearly, then, we are bound to protect New Granada against any interference by her citizens with travel across the Isthmus, and the agreement of the United States should not be construed into a guaranty of New Granada. If the latter party failed to keep its agreement, a cause for damages would arise in favor of the other, and this was the clear understanding of the parties, as is shown by the preamble of the treaty.

[illegible] of the articles contained in this treaty should be violated or attempted to be violated in any way whatever, it is expressly stipulated that neither of the two contracting parties shall ordain or authorize acts of reprisal, nor shall it avail itself of the pretext of such infractions or damages, until the said party complaining shall have made its complaint before the other contracting party, verified the respondent proofs, demanding justice and satisfaction, and the same shall have been denied."

Now, clearly, by a word, I need to protect travelers across the Isthmus against [illegible] to pay damages to those slaughtered. It was clearly her duty and the duty of her right to use all force necessary for the purpose. In consideration of this, the United States agreed to keep New Granada and not to use against her. It is [illegible] to protect New Granada against her own people, or to prevent her attacking other nations [illegible] in the face of our "positive" and "[illegible] guaranty of her sovereignty.

Such, then, was our position. If any of your subjects revolt, and so [illegible] with travel across the United States, we have the right to help them, and prevent your asserting your sovereignty. I [illegible] them.

This construction of the treaty is supported by the language of the next treaty [illegible] Panama for [illegible] Panama [illegible] of [illegible] Colombia, [illegible] New Granada, [illegible] Panama [illegible] New Granada [illegible] the right to deal with insurrections [illegible] American as Lewis Cass, the [illegible] Secretary Seward wrote to our minister at Bogota: "The United States [illegible] to Colombia [illegible] to keep open the transit across the Isthmus [illegible] and property of the citizens of the United States [illegible] It is a great misfortune that ever we should be [illegible] power at home or abroad, the United States [illegible] be merely cooperating with the Government and their ally, to maintain and defend them."

On October 27, 1873 Secretary Fish said in an official dispatch to Mr. Keeler, [illegible] duty of [illegible] the United States of land factions. Although [illegible] was [illegible] caused by the action under the convention of August 5, 1846, [illegible] and all the interests [illegible] It is, however, conceded as the understanding of the contracting Governments to protect the road against attacks from land insurgents. The discharge of this duty will be insisted upon."

Secretary Bayard thus stated our position:

"[illegible] the Government of the United States, at the instance and at the request of the Government of Colombia, has in times of civil turmoil, sometimes argued that it is the duty of Panama to protect American citizens and property near the transit, from depredations which the Government of Colombia might at times be unable to prevent. But in taking such steps this Government has always recognized the sovereignty and obligation of Colombia in the premises, and has never asserted a right, but, on the contrary, has expressly disclaimed, the duty of protecting the transit against domestic disturbances."

President Cleveland in his annual message of December, 1885, spoke thus:

"Disturbances threatening civil war in the United States of Colombia demanded of the Government at the beginning of this Administration the employment of armed force to fulfill its guarantees under the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846, in order to keep the transit open across the Isthmus of Panama.

"Desirous of exercising only the powers expressly reserved to us by the treaty, and mindful of the rights of Colombia, the forces sent to the Isthmus were instructed to confine their action to peaceably preventing the transit and its accessories from being interrupted or embarrassed. The execution of this delicate and responsible task necessarily involved police control where the local authority was temporarily powerless, but always in aid of the sovereignty of Colombia. The prompt and successful fulfillment of duty by this Government was highly appreciated by the Government of Colombia and has been followed by expressions of lively gratitude. * * * The restoration of peace on the Isthmus by the resistance of the constituted Government there being accomplished, the forces of the United States were withdrawn.

"When, therefore, we had once or twice landed troops when there were riots or insurrections on the Isthmus, we had done so in aid of the sovereignty of Colombia, sometimes at the request of her authorities, and always with her approval.

"We had insisted that upon us rested the duty of protecting the transit against attacks from insurgents, and had notified her that "the discharge of this duty will be insisted upon." Our interpretation of the treaty and our action thereon had been in accordance with Cassius's language of our treaty. We had helped Colombia to discharge her duty, and so assured her sovereignty. We had never interfered nor claimed the right to interfere against her.

"There is another diplomatic precedent which should not be forgotten in this connection. I refer to the famous Ostend manifesto. In 1854 Messrs. Soulé, Mason and Saunders, the ministers of the United States at London, Paris and Madrid, met at Ostend and issued a joint declaration advocating the purchase of Cuba by the United States for $120,000,000 and proceeded thus:

"If Spain, dead to the voice of her own interest and deaf to the call of southern pride and fanaticism, should persist in her refusal, then a case would arise which would fully justify and even sanctify the United States in wresting Cuba from Spain if she could do it by her own unassisted power. What ought to be the course of the United States under these circumstances?

"We answer this question by saying:

"After we shall have exhausted every means for Cuba far beyond its present value, and this shall have been refused, * * * then by every law, human and divine, we shall be justified in wresting it from Spain, if we have the power.

This immoral declaration was justly condemned at the time and by none more decidedly than by the Republican party, which in its national platform in 1856 asserted the true doctrine in these words:

"The highwayman's plea that 'might makes right,' embodied in the Ostend circular, was in every respect unworthy of American diplomacy, and would bring shame and dishonor upon any government or people that gave it their sanction."

We have also a statement of the true American position from President Polk, who, in his message to Congress in 1845, said:

"No independent nation in America need have the slightest fear of aggression from the United States. It behooves each one to maintain order within its own borders and to discharge its just obligations to foreigners. When this is done, be they strong or weak, they have nothing to dread from outside interference."

Surely there is nothing in these words to indicate that a nation whose sovereignty we had expressly guaranteed was in a less favorable position than any other American nation.

I now proceed to show what we had considered our obligations to Colombia during the twenty of 1903, and how aggression on a weak power was regarded by the American press at its birth and by its present national chief, who we may read the political decisions of the present day that some doubt whether nations recognized by the Monroe doctrine and the Golden Rule.

Let us now compare these avowed principles with the recent action of our Government. Without any demonstration of a hostile character against Panama, Colombia, because under a compression from the Government for a French company, [illegible] that the company might transfer its rights to a public company or individuals, but not to any foreign nation or government. This was a reasonable condition as to minors could not contract with their wards to purchase, and such a consent would be a very natural requirement as to the representative of such a corporation. Colombia hesitated and finally refused to ratify treaties, the United States [illegible] to pay its money for [illegible] but refused to consider [illegible] with Colombia.

Colombia was a weak, [illegible] republic, [illegible] of peace, and was supported partly by our troops. Her possession of Panama [illegible] her property to be lost that they are the property of [illegible] whose people are employed and are somewhat kept in transit from coast to coast. What, then, and is built they possess way [illegible] small [illegible] had a right to [illegible] for the [illegible] also would possibly [illegible] from the [illegible] and it was vital [illegible] and the United States, as the owner of the canal, [illegible] and satisfactorily. A great power is a dangerous subject of a weaker nation.

The Hay-Herran treaty was an attempt to reach a satisfactory agreement on these points, but it was rejected by the Colombian Congress, as our Senate rejected the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and the treaty of other treaties in their amendment of treaties. A second treaty was the result, and the Hay-Varilla treaty for the establishment of the Isthmian Canal which was given had a most complaining response we could not present such large concessions, and it was we thought should be presented.

The Colombian Senate acted strictly within its rights and we have no large right to allege the contrary. I that Republican Senators Representatives because they did not [illegible] had to adopt another or [illegible] peace between two good nations by rejecting the Hay-Herran treaty, or than any man has to demand another for refusing to sell his property at the price which the first wishes to pay for it. As a matter of fact the property remained in the possession of Colombia over the canal, we very unsatisfactorily. It is from Harper's Weekly that I quote the following:

"The Hay-Herran treaty was unsatisfactory on three grounds. First, the lease was too perpetual, but renewable at long intervals; second, the canal zone leased was too narrow; thirdly, a conflict of jurisdiction in the canal zone seemed inevitable by reason of the company of the possessions of the corporation.

Is it necessary to assume that the Colombians were actuated only by base motives in refusing to dedicate their powerful and commercial neighbor into their territory until the canal was completed? What a supporter of the Fresidentis policy thus describes the rejected treaty. It seems to infer that the Senate of Colombia could give good reasons for refusing to accept it. With any powerful nation we should have begun fresh negotiations but Colombia was weak, and a different course suggested itself to our rulers.

Let me state it in the words which President Roosevelt intended to use in his [illegible] to Congress:

[illegible] matter such as this we should finally decide [illegible] the advantages of this route over any other [illegible] marked we should [illegible] and return to the Cartagena."

The Colombian troops withdrew to a hill outside while their colonel sent a mes-[illegible] to Panama, [illegible] to return on the 3[illegible] Hubbard [illegible] was [illegible] and [illegible] a strong force supported by our marines, and [illegible] reports Captain Hubbard, their colonel "was [illegible] and return to the Cartagena."

It is impossible to say that on November 6 the Government of Panama was such a government as Mr. McKinley described or that the danger of its being subjugated by Colombia had passed away, when Colombia had hardly learned that an insurrection had occurred.

Remember our recognition of England's action during the civil war. Remember our protest against its long delay in recognizing the South, [illegible] our long delay in recognition toward the Transvaal Republic and the Orange Free State, our denial that the Philippine Republic [illegible] and the devoted support of a [illegible] Where are the precedents which justify the A[illegible] It is a crime to violate international law. It [illegible] and put in force by the Gov-[illegible] It is war.

[illegible] to say that we had very reliable information that the Government which has negotiated a treaty is contemplating a [illegible] and a subsequent ratification. That may be so, it is true, but we have no definite information—no reliable information as far as I have our board.

That we found in this attitude. A treaty had failed with the Colombian Government—a treaty which the people of the Isthmus of Panama were anxiously desired, as they seemed to think it was the [illegible] that would turn everything to gold in that [illegible] of the world.

Mr. President, we were [illegible] with everybody concerned with that canal. We were about [illegible] the [illegible] of the construction of a great work that believed to be world, that we were to present to the world a great [illegible] Roosevelt, the senate Southman, the president of the Dual of Europe two hundred years ago, had given it most [illegible] and exploitation was a dream that had been indulged in by several nations.

The Isthmus had been surveyed from one end to the other from Costa Rica down to the end of the Isthmus, by Spanish, French, English and American officers and expeditions. Every sort of trial had been made of it. The coal had been tested for steamship [illegible] and everything was done, in fact, that would [illegible] to a knowledge of the best route.

Then the Commission of ten [illegible] decided for Nicaragua, and afterwards turned to the Isthmus of Panama because they said they had not considered it before on account of the extreme price, the extreme price being $40,000,000, afterwards reduced to $40,000,000, and yet the same Commission said that if we long what is remaining of the Panama Canal $40,000,000 [illegible] least, will be necessary to finish it. The cost of the Nicaragua Canal was never placed higher than $[illegible] at any time.

But, at any rate, we were on good terms with the world. We were not only on good terms with the United States of Colombia by treaties of amity and commercial intercourse but we had a treaty of alliance with that country. We knew its power, [illegible] as great as that of the United States. We knew its resources. We knew also that the slight cohesive power of the Federal Government could at any time be overcome.

The route is a water route to the Republic [illegible] Mondes, some four or five years ago said he had traveled all over South America, from Patagonia up to the Isthmus, and it was only "a succession of [illegible]." We knew that one or two provinces gained their independence a [illegible] of years. It was a [illegible] of said that beyond [illegible] the [illegible] or rail, [illegible] was a [illegible] front. Looking [illegible] to the relations to all the other nations of the world it [illegible] be considered as an [illegible] of government.

We [illegible] in treaties with [illegible] but also in alliance especially with reference to the Isthmus of Panama, [illegible] the proposed [illegible] by water or rail, [illegible] If the [illegible] of [illegible] to the [illegible] [illegible] plated for a [illegible] of [illegible] was a [illegible] railway and canal.

We had not only guaranteed the sovereignty of Colombia from Panama to [illegible] all her territory reaching up to Costa Rica, but we also [illegible] [illegible] to navigation [illegible] we would go [illegible] and closed the [illegible] the other day, upon which is based the present Republic of Panama.

Now, Mr. President, [illegible] can [illegible] [illegible] but it has the good [illegible] is the [illegible] There is not a man who [illegible] defend the Administration in this violation of international law.

Nations take the responsibility of violating all laws, holding themselves responsible to the aggrieved party in damages or any other way until we get to the last argument of kings. So we have taken the responsibility—that is, our Executive has taken the responsibility of violating international law generally by an armed intervention; but, further than that, in breaking faith when we guaranteed sovereignty, and not only doing that, but going further and saying to our ally that "you shall not recover or maintain your sovereignty over your revolted subjects: the [illegible] of Panama will be protected by the Navy of the United States, and we forbid you to land troops in the disputed territory to reestablish your authority." That is not the language of an ally.

And not only that, but instructions were given to the American Navy on both the Atlantic and the Pacific side to permit no Colombian troops to land within the territory of the seceded State, or Department, as they called it. This is known to all the world. [illegible] censure of all right-thinking men and that will assuredly receive the censure of history.

There is no excuse whatever, except in a few bad precedents. We acted just as badly in Samoa, a little [illegible] perhaps. We acted just as badly in Hawaii, where the revolution was gotten up by an American minister, who called upon the marines of an American ship, and it was all done to get a little sugar bounty. That was all. The whole thing was handled by an American [illegible] We have done the same [illegible] in the Philippine Islands, and we have done those things over and over again of late.

But the time was, Mr. President, when the Chief Magistrate of this country hesitated before he even admitted the independence of a sister republic. We did that, though we had [illegible] the land in a [illegible] the de facto as against the de jure government, because we ourselves had our origin in the throes of a revolution [illegible] lawful authority, and that made us [illegible] to the de facto government, and because also the doctrine [illegible] in Europe had insisted so long upon the de jure and had gone so far that there were two [illegible] lors—one to the de jure and the other to the de facto government of a people—we have [illegible] the de facto [illegible] well defended.

Now, Mr. President, [illegible] before he recognized the independence of the [illegible] We had a hot debate in the [illegible] from both bodies, in which the [illegible] that they were [illegible] army on the lower [illegible] rals, and they were [illegible] he did not do so.

Whatever it is, we acknowledge it; and whether the President was right or wrong [illegible] —yet, as [illegible] that new Republic [illegible] much right to make [illegible] d.

Well, we never have been accustomed in treaties to consult the people of a country as to what they have to say. We do not deal with the people; we deal with the government, and nothing else. That Government had just as much right to contract, as soon as it [illegible], as it ever will have or as Great Britain has.

A new treaty for a canal has been negotiated, and it is before us for ratification. Whatever I may think of the [illegible] incident to [illegible] I may hold of the conduct of the Executive in that matter, yet we have an accomplished secession, as we term it, or a revolution, and a Government that can [illegible] w, if we reject this treaty, [illegible] ate a similar treaty with [illegible] or with Great Britain or with any other power. We [illegible] threatening to do [illegible] war between the [illegible]

But take the whole of the trade of [illegible] to [illegible] ugh the Kiel Canal.

[illegible] y in India. [illegible] the S[illegible] rts, of which [illegible] r, and more than likely all that of southern [illegible] ne route—through [illegible] es of the Suez route, the ships have [illegible] traffic such important ports [illegible] Naples, and Cairo; while if the [illegible] went through the Panama Canal to the same destination [illegible] would have no way traffic, but would be as running [illegible] whole way.

[illegible] will carry that amount of the world's commerce now or in prospect which is assumed for it by its more zealous advocates. Of course it is going to be a great thing for the United States. It will shorten the way between our two seaboards and to our Asiatic [illegible].

We know the people of the United States want an isthmian canal. They [illegible] that, as private capital is incapable of building it, the Government ought to build it. They [illegible] expressed through every possible avenue their desire to have it, and they have come to the conclusion that the United States [illegible] must undertake it; that we must have the canal, and that we must have [illegible] proprietorship but sovereignty.

It is the most difficult thing in the world—the constitution of the South American states forbidding the alienation of their territory to obtain sovereignty there; but, according to this treaty, we have there everything on earth that we could ask for, and more than we ever expected to get. As a government capable of negotiating a treaty has seen fit to make it is one with us, and as we could not under any circumstances ever get a better one, then I am for taking this.

I do not mean to say that I prefer the Panama route to the Nicaragua route, for I do not. In the first place, this canal runs through the deadliest zone in the world. It is only equaled by the [illegible] swamps of western Africa. It is said that every single cross-tie in the Panama railroad has cost a human life.

I had a letter the other day from a man who said that he had worked a thousand hands for ten months on a railroad in the swamp back of San Juan, [illegible] the Nicaragua Canal route, and lost only [illegible] working upon the Panama Canal it was impossible for him to keep his men alive; that they died off like sheep with the rot.

From Nicaragua down almost to Colon, certainly as far as [illegible] germs which belong to the tropical vegetation, while at Panama there is a deadly calm which broods like a pestilence over the whole country.

[illegible] the great promontory which extends from the land south of bay Golfo Dulce, and the [illegible] a favorable exit for all [illegible] sanitary [illegible] ere whatever means may be [illegible] ed.

The [illegible] French [illegible] their [illegible] rs and [illegible] They [illegible] every hygienic method [illegible] be disregarded by the [illegible] vanced of the medical profession, and yet the death rate went steadily on, as it will go steadily on. That is [illegible] to the Panama [illegible] continual sickness which must prevail and the [illegible] deaths.

I can recollect distinctly stories told me by friends who crossed that Isthmus in the old California days before there was [illegible] transcontinental railroad, that a man in choosing his [illegible] way, and never will be any other way until [illegible] is a revolution in the winds and currents of the ocean. It will remain a calm belt, and this insanitary [illegible] to everybody who goes there.

[illegible] not help that; and therefore, as we have here the best treaty we have ever had with a power—whether they had the right to negotiate it or not I take no [illegible] cern—I shall support this treaty as something expected of the [illegible] United States do not un[illegible] n. I [illegible] that [illegible] y or us do not [illegible] unanimous. It ha[illegible] I think, hard to [illegible] It would [illegible] better for all concerned if [illegible] had been freely given [illegible] te. But I shall not d[illegible]

[illegible] n, Mr. [illegible] of my [illegible] with a reception, passed a resolution [illegible] ing me [illegible] they requested us to [illegible] and.

I believe in the doctrine of in[illegible]n. In other words, I would [illegible] Congress [illegible] to go [illegible] and to [illegible] destroy all they [illegible] Samson [illegible] him: "Know, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

The request of my legislature has just as persuasive a power with [illegible] which I could not overcome. I think that I should always obey, I understand them to mean, in their extreme kindness, that I am to use my judgment about it; but they [illegible] wishes, and their wishes, as I have said, have great influence with me.

Mr. President, I have stated what are the reasons which will actuate me in voting for this treaty, and I must express regret that there is not to be a unanimous vote on this side; not, of course, judging any man or [illegible] to criticise anybody. I know there are men whose convictions are as strong as mine and their reasons for their position perhaps are better. At any rate, they are sufficient for them. But I do say, so far as the world is concerned, that it would be a very happy event if the Senate could pass a unanimous vote on this question.

Mr. SPOONER. I am usually anxious, Mr. President, to conclude as rapidly as may be the task in which I began on Thursday last under the usually disagreeable circumstances.

I think the legislature of Mississippi furnished adequate evidence of intelligence and wisdom by reelecting my friend [Mr. McLAURIN] who has just addressed the Senate, and I think we may assume without any doubt that they were well advised upon the subject upon which they passed a resolution through both houses requesting their Senators to vote for the ratification of this treaty.

I should like, Mr. President, at this time to advert to the speech which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] delivered to-day. When the importance of this time shall have passed, I venture the prophecy that the Senator from Alabama [illegible] will find [illegible] it to be correct. Portions of it [illegible] pointedly the truth of the proposition, that excess of suspicion is as incompatible with sound judgment as is excess of confidence.

When I concluded the day on Thursday I was dealing with Article XXXV of the treaty of 1846, which is substantially the heart of all the controversy which has arisen [illegible] the treaty outside, perhaps, of what may be said as to the terms of the instrument itself.

I had called attention to the fact—and I do not intend to repeat—that it was [illegible] by Mallarino, the Foreign Minister of New Granada, that the main purpose of the treaty was Article XXXV, and that in the statement of the purposes of the provisions or references to articles of the treaty relating to commerce, to [illegible] we were simply [illegible] Article XXXV.

New Granada guaranteed to the United States:

[illegible] any modes of [illegible]

And that it should be free and open to the Government of the United States as much as to the citizens of the United States.

That, I contended, and contend, is in no sense a grant, in a sovereignty granted and a guaranty by the sovereign [illegible] to grant. New Granada cannot, Mr. President, [illegible] to the United States a [illegible] to make the guaranty which, in consideration of that grant, that Government made for any mere commercial purpose with New Granada.

I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was inserted as a [illegible] to [illegible] the rights of sovereignty and property of New Granada in the whole Isthmus. What? With the power that has been lodged from time to time in the Government of Colombia interrupted or embarrassed in any future time which Government [illegible]?

That means that if any foreign government—a South American republic or a government across the sea—invaded the Isthmus of Panama this Government would be under bond to send there its war ships and its soldiers to fight in order to keep good this governmental guaranty.

Right here, Mr. President, it may be truthfully said that while the United States has not been called upon to protect Colombia against actual foreign invasion of the Isthmus, the obligation which the assumed by Article XXXV of the treaty of 1846 to do so has been a [illegible] in [illegible] to [illegible].

It was said by Mr. Fish, in a note to the Colombian minister of May 27, 1871,

A [illegible] of New Granada in entering into the treaty is understood to have been to [illegible] from foreign aggression [illegible] New Granada [illegible] by the United States [illegible] to be [illegible] by warning from this Government to the government of New Granada that this treaty.

In January, 1885, Colombia appealed to the United States to avert hostilities which [illegible] to be threatened by the Government of Italy over the Cerruti case, and this Government through Mr. Bayard suggested to Italy the—

[illegible]

The mere fact that this great Republic, which observes its treaty obligations as [illegible] has stood bound for sixty years to protect the neutrality of the Isthmus and the rights of sovereignty and property of Colombia therein against foreign powers has constituted itself the most powerful preventive of foreign invasion of the Isthmus. To what extent there would have been invasion but for this treaty attitude of the United States, of course, one may not know, but with knowledge of the history of Colombian revolutions and the attitude of at least one South American Republic, her neighbor, it is easy to be believed that but for the influence of our promised protection the Isthmus of Panama would have passed to another South American nation years ago.

Mr. President, what was our contract? It has been assumed in this debate that the President has violated the obligation of this Government by what has been done by the United States on the Isthmus. I deny it. There is no obligation resting upon this Government under Article XXXV except to intervene there for the maintenance of neutrality and the protection of the rights of sovereignty and of property of New Granada and her successor, the Government of Colombia, as against invasion by foreign powers.

That proposition would find no support in authority, because it is a [illegible] impossible, unless the language were so explicit as to permit no escape from the conclusion, to impute to the United States an obligation to maintain order in Colombia among her own people on that Isthmus. That is what Colombia bound herself to do. That was a unilateral contract on the part of Colombia, and in consideration of that came our obligation to stand between her and [illegible].

[illegible] various demands upon the United States during these fifty-seven years, based now upon one construction and then upon another of Article XXXV, so far as it relates to our duty—constructions which sometimes took no account of the [illegible] of Colombia. [illegible] Colombia [illegible] as 1865, when an expedition from Cauca, one of the states of the New Granadian Confederacy, was fitted out to invade the Isthmus of Panama, that she was entitled under this treaty to call upon the United States, as if Cauca were a foreign power, to prevent that invasion.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, in a letter to Mr. Burton, under date of November 9, 1865, announced our construction of the treaty as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 9, 1865.

a question of grave expediency to be determined by [illegible] SEWARD.

Many, many times when there has been trouble on the Isthmus of Panama—and there has been trouble there only fifty-three out of fifty-seven years—Colombia has called upon the United States for help upon the theory that we were bound by this treaty to suppress riots there among her own people. They have murdered once a large number of Americans in transit across the Isthmus—robbery; and once, Mr. President, so variable, so utterly [illegible] have they been that when a [illegible] at Panama and the commander of our war ship sent a [illegible] music unarmed, with a platoon of marines with guns charged with blank cartridges, to attend his obsequies, Colombia protested against it as an attack upon her sovereignty, permission not having been asked; and her officials withheld their presence from the funeral.

Early in 1866 this was declared by Colombia to be the measure of our obligations under Article XXXV of the treaty of 1846:

As [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] assistance of Colombia to maintain its sovereignty over the Isthmus, but not [illegible]

Then came the statement of Mr. Fish, a great Secretary of State, in 1873; and we were summoned first to the rescue under this treaty in 1856, only eight years after its ratification. Mr. Fish says:

By the treaty with New Granada of 1846 this Government has engaged to guarantee the neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama. This engagement, however, has never been acknowledged to embrace the duty of protecting the [illegible] of the Isthmus from [illegible] but it is [illegible] expeditions [illegible] attacks from [illegible] expeditions.

I can understand from the character of the Colombian administration how that Government can put forth inconsistent construction of Article XXXV [illegible] the transit on the Isthmus, [illegible] we are under no obligation to [illegible] to find in the assurance of the [illegible] upon the request of Colombia or without it, to [illegible] order on the Isthmus between contending [illegible] ic. Colombia, as late as 1881, in the [illegible] XXXV, [illegible] as she asserted it, the true construction of the article [illegible]

invidious steps tending to separate it [illegible]
ous power or unauthorized private expeditions.

Mr. Evarts declined to agree to this [illegible] ing the correctness of the [illegible] with our own (except as to the words "or m[illegible] expeditions" which phrase would itself require [illegible] upon the ground that the article was plain and that [illegible] ment was [illegible] to enlarge it or to diminish it.

[illegible] in her inconsistency, asserts practically a new [illegible] the United States, through General Reyes, her special envoy, who says, in his correspondence with Secretary Hay:

[illegible] and be given any other interpretation than [illegible]

[illegible] quation contained in the thirty-fifth article [illegible]

[illegible] found in the last clause of the treaty ground for [illegible] tion placed upon it by Mr. Seward, Mr. Fish, Mr. Evarts, and several times [illegible] of sovereignty and property as against [illegible] Colombia.

It is [illegible] ately correct that under the [illegible] under no [illegible] at any time to land marines upon the Isthmus [illegible] duty [illegible] had a [illegible] upon which we had a [illegible] where Colombia [illegible] not or would not make good her guaranty of free transit [illegible] interests and of our treaty right of free transit, and that [illegible] not only for the benefit of American commerce and citizens, but of commerce generally over that transit.

First, the right of way or passage for the Government and for the commerce of our citizens granted to us by Article XXXV, for which we incurred an onerous obligation, vested in us a right of unobstructed passage across the Isthmus, and if Colombia failed in her guaranty to afford it to us we had a right to maintain it [illegible]

If any [illegible] Mr. Cullom [illegible] of [illegible] by intruders in its [illegible] sary to enable me to [illegible]

And when [illegible] as [illegible] of [illegible] the Isthmus from sea to sea, [illegible] to maintain it, in exchange for a [illegible] upon our part to [illegible] the [illegible] as [illegible] to [illegible] independent of the treaty the United States has [illegible] right to protect the [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] To [illegible] the United [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] mus, and is not, under any [illegible] ject that [illegible] way, its [illegible] and an American [illegible] in the [illegible] of the [illegible] at the option of [illegible]

OPERATIONS ON ISTHMUS UNDER ARTICLE XXXV.

I have thought since I began to study the history of the administration of Article XXXV that [illegible] to protect the [illegible] quite [illegible] own guaranty and grant of right of way or transit.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand Senate Document [illegible] of this session, [illegible] of Article XXXV by Colombia and the United States [illegible] before the treaty. [illegible] and the [illegible] across the Isthmus have [illegible] riots, ins[illegible] and other public disorders [illegible] "Outbreak: two [illegible] 1. War vessel to quell outbreak." I will incorporate in an appendix to my remarks this list, only partial, taken from the Pr[illegible]

I [illegible] history, but [illegible]

First, that Colombia has violated this treaty systematically from the beginning by failing to maintain the transit; that she has [illegible] by [illegible] was entirely her own, and which we had not as a government entered into.

[illegible] that from beginning to end the heart of the Isthmus [illegible] at the [illegible] 100 [illegible] by [illegible] the consulate, the au[illegible] being agitated, in the expectation of another attack—

[illegible] British [illegible]

In 1861 the intendente general for Panama informed our consul-general at Panama that a lawless expedition was being fitted out at Cartagena to invade the Isthmus, and requested, in the event of its landing at Aspinwall, now Colon, or any other of the Isthmus ports, the interposition of the United States naval forces to main-train neutrality and to protect the transit from violence of a lawless character, "which he had every reason to apprehend in case a [illegible] was effected by the [illegible] year Mr. [illegible] was informed by the [illegible] as follows:

[illegible] the invasion from Cauca, a part of New Granada [illegible] the [illegible] Panama take place and became the date of [illegible]

And so we were called on to protect the transit. It is a long story. Colon has been attacked and burned by insurgents. Panama has been captured more than once. Ten times we have been obliged to land marines to protect the transit and the lives and property of American citizens, and many times the presence of our war ships there has caused the [illegible] insurrection, and our interposition has enabled the government to put an end to insurrection and to [illegible] to the Government.

I will show, Mr. President, as I go along, that the insurrections and attempted revolutions on the Isthmus of Panama have not been [illegible] the result of mere lawlessness or desire for separation and plunder. In thirty-three [illegible] there have been revolutions, attempted revolutions, or revolutions for separation and independence. In thirty-three years there have been revolutions, or revolutions for separation, or attempts at revolution, or revolutions for independence, or revolutions for separation and independence, or revolutions for independence and separation, or revolutions for independence and separation, or revolutions for independence and separation

Until November 9 American interests were looked after at [illegible] the Mohican, which [illegible] Panama November 9. If any [illegible] the strongest, grounds of com- [illegible] r the futu [illegible] ists, and [illegible] to fight on the line of t [illegible] k to Cartagena, took with their officers [illegible]

Some miles from the city.

Rear-Admiral Jouett landing [illegible] Panama on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 28th, on Wednesday Colonels Reyes and Montoya and Aizpuru—

Aizpuru was the general commanding the insurrectionary forces who had com [illegible] at Panama, who had been allowed, because of the absence of national troops, to seize the Isthmus and who was respecting the transit—[illegible] was to surrender.

And he did surrender; and the report, which is the report of Admiral Jouett, continues:

[illegible] with the signing of the capitulation, the reasons which [illegible] imperative—

"The reasons which had [illegible] made it imperative"—

[illegible] ceased to exist. [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] on the morning [illegible]

Here again the United States, "protecting the transit," helped to bring about the surrender of the revolutionists and the [illegible] No [illegible] was heard in the country against President Cleveland "for having violated a solemn treaty or the United States," and, so far as the documents show, the action of Admiral Jouett was approved by the Administration. No one without injustice or a [illegible] could criticise that action, because to have per [illegible] troops to land meant igniting along the line of transit, with interruption inevitable and destruction possible.

I wonder if [illegible] t the United States either to de- [illegible] in perpetuity upon the inhabitants of [illegible] d of Colombian tyranny.

There is ind [illegible] evidence in this Senate Document 51 that [illegible] time of tra [illegible] Colon and Panama. I find here a cablegram from Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay, on the 14th November 7, the day after the recognition of the Republic of Panama, as follows:

[illegible] LAND TROOPS AT THOSE PORTS TO FIGHT THERE [illegible] WAY.

Of course they knew perfectly well that if they could not have permission to land troops at Colon and [illegible] ports and along the line of railway, it w [illegible] them at all for [illegible]

It must be remembered that a [illegible] r 16 Lieutenant-General Young had laid before the President a memo [illegible] as to what two regular officers, Captain Humphrey and Lie [illegible] t Murphy, who had just returned from a four months' tour th [illegible] reported as to conditions on the Isthmus, as follows:

It will be seen that the President was justified in the belief that the organization for revolution was a powerful one and thoroughly organized. That it was made up of men who were [illegible] had been demonstrated too many times to leave it in doubt. No one can doubt that if the United States had permitted Colombia, had she so desired, to land a considerable force at Panama and Colon, any more than Colombia doubted it, as shown by the cablegram I have read from Beaupré, there would have been fierce and protracted fighting in both of the cities and along the line of railway, in which it would have been impossible for us to protect the property and lives of our citizens and to maintain the freedom of transit without becoming a participant on one side or the other, or against both, which no one would have justified.

And thus it happened that while our prior interventions had inured to the benefit of Colombia, there came a time when protecting the transit inured to the benefit of the people who lived along the line of transit and at either end thereof.

There is no justification for imputing to the President and those who acted under him a purpose nonsuited to protect the transit and protect American interests and citizens and life and property, but really a dark, damnable purpose to expel Colombia from the Isthmus in violation of treaty obligations, and to build up there an independent republic, from which we could obtain a canal. It will not do.

It is of no moment that the 450 soldiers who were landed would [illegible] been permitted to land had the telegraphic orders to the commander of the Nashville been received at an earlier hour. It is enough to know that they did land. Nor is there anything of substance in the complaint that troops were not permitted to [illegible] on the railway transit. The revolutionists de- [illegible] to Panama, and were ready to fight them. What was done in this respect was identical with what was done by Admiral Casey in 1902, without essential criticism in this country. There is no evidence that Colombia intended to [illegible] troops [illegible] would be prevented from landing. As [illegible] Bunau-Varilla was invited to confer with us at Bogota, and asked officially to construe the last clause of Mr. Hay's telegram of November 6, announcing that we had entered into relations with the Republic of Panama, as to whether it meant that the United States would not permit the landing of Colombian troops.

General Reyes states in a communication to Secretary Hay that being [illegible] granted, except in an imperfect manner, with the at- [illegible] by the American war ships he had the honor to [illegible] to Rear-Admiral Coghlan, who in reply told him [illegible] permit the landing of soldiers with hostile intent within the boundary of the State of Panama." This was the 17th or 20th of November, several days after the [illegible] recognition of the Republic of Panama. And one may in- [illegible] his communication that the last information as to the [illegible] of the United States in respect of preventing Colombian [illegible] had [illegible] rived from the public [illegible] in a public document, after his arrival in this country. It is one thing for Colombia to say that we prevented her landing troops which she sent for that purpose; another thing for us to [illegible] that if she had sent troops, which she did not send, they would not have been permitted to land.

All that has been done there would have evoked no criticism in this country but for the canal. The Senator from Colorado, Mr. [illegible] Let me [illegible] statement, and [illegible] I say, would not have been criticised; it would have been [illegible] mony with what has been done before, without criticism, but for the canal. Why should it be criticised? If not for its [illegible] open to criticism had we gone to Nicaragua why should it [illegible] when liberty came at last to that people and [illegible] to consummate the [illegible] brought about a termination of the partnership between this country and Bogota and tender of generous terms for the opening of a canal so vital to them?

It seems strange to me that in all the [illegible] States [illegible] a: that Senators who hailed with such just delight the dawn of freedom to the people of Cuba have met with execration and [illegible] and criticism the dawn of freedom for the oppressed people of this Isthmus. Their tenderness and commiseration is for Colombia alone.

It is suggested that the uprising in Panama was not much of a revolution. It was enough. No one can read the statement of the two officers to which I have referred without being [illegible] that there was [illegible] fighting strength behind the revolution. Of course no battles were fought. That is fortunate. It is not necessary in order to achieve independence through revolution that it should always result from hard-fought battles. This is not the first time in the history of the world that with one proclamation a coup d'état or a coup de main without bloodshed has brought independence to a long-suffering people.

The revolutionists are not to be criticised for employing money to gain support. "In the corrupted currents of this world," Mr. President, struggles for liberty have always possessed phases of this kind. If an insurrection or attempted revolution fails, it is a crime; if it succeeds, it is a virtue and an honor.

It is said contemptuously here that the revolution had few leaders. Is that exceptional? Revolutions have few organizers. That is the history of the world. That was not peculiar to Panama.

It was said that the Government of the United States connived at it, encouraged it, was a party to it. It was darkly hinted over and every man felt that something was being held back. Has anything been held back?

Much comment is made upon the fact that a few of these conspirators were in the United States. "Conspirators" is not a bad word in this case. We had plots in Boston and other New England towns and villages in the days of the Revolution. Conspiracy is not always used in a bad sense. Revolutions are always plots, they are always conspiracies prepared. Some Senator said the revolution in Panama was hatched in the darkness of a back room. I do not know whether it was "hatched" or not; but I have no doubt it was not hatched in the front room with the blinds open and the sun shining brightly into the room. What revolution ever was thought of in that way?

Another accompanying incident was that money was in the bank to the credit of Colombia. Why not? It was money of which the people of Panama had been robbed. They had the entire right to hold that money if they had seized it from Colombia, or guns or the munitions or any other Government property belonging to Colombia.

How strange it is that such observations should be made as to this revolution in the Isthmus of Panama, and such conclusions indulged in! We have even heard it stated that some of the conspirators should be a Tom Lowe found judgment in this country! The whole Cuban revolution was plotted in New York. The Cuban junta consisted of conspirators from New York, issued bonds in New York, issued money in New York, and had their headquarters in New York. There was no such complaint in that direction for that, so far as I have ever heard.

Mr. Cleveland said in one of his messages:

> Many Cubans resident in this country and following peaceful pursuits have taken the name of a people struggling for the possession of a home and the right to frame for themselves such institutions and the tenor of our laws do not permit to be made the subject of criminal prosecution.

The man who plans for liberty finds a resting place under every decent government in the world, the neutrality laws being observed.

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER TO RECOGNIZE IN PRESIDENT.

Among the powers conferred by the Constitution on the President is to "receive ambassadors and other public ministers." To receive implies the power to recognize the existence of a foreign nation as placed by the Constitution exclusively in the hands of the President. To receive ambassadors and other public ministers then the Executive is given the power to deal with foreign nations or to receive ambassadors and other public ministers. He is likewise given the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint ambassadors and other public ministers. It would be a waste of time to argument by an attempt to prove the proposition that the recognition of independence is under our Constitution, an Executive function.

It has been able argument at other sessions of Congress, has been exercised as an Executive function from the beginning of the Government, and is supported both by the decisions of the courts and the opinions of our leading statesmen. Its constitutionality is supported by its actual exercise of learning and ability in presentation in the Senate by the Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, of the authorities cited and by Senator Morgan and Senator Frye, fourth Congress, second session. I think no one has ever been in doubt as to the Executive function. Being an Executive function, it is for the President to determine when to exercise the power.

That is premature and unwise which recognition of a revolting province as an independent one, which may be taken by the foreign power to be an unfriendly act and a just provocation for war, does not in any wise derogate from the power. One may exercise the wisdom of recognition in a given case, but no one can impeach the authority of the act. It is not a declaration of war by the President, nor an exercise of intervention. It is but the exercise of a conceded power which may precipitate the country into war. (Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, secs. 671, 672.)

INTERNATIONAL LAW JUSTIFIED THE PRESIDENT IN ENTERING INTO RELATIONS WITH THE REPUBLIC OF PANAMA NOVEMBER 6.

The President's action in recognizing on the 6th of November the independence of the Republic of Panama by entering into relations with it was a matter within his power, but was strictly in accordance with the settled principles of international law upon the subject. On that date there no longer remained—and no one can challenge this statement—a vestige of Colombian authority or power on the Isthmus of Panama. The Colombian troops which had been sent there had sailed away. The governing power of the Isthmus was a provisional committee, which had created a temporary government under the name of the Republic of Panama. It had, it is true, no constitution. It had no laws of its own enactment, except so far as the governing body, supported by the people, changed existing laws. It was supported by the people. It enforced law. It protected life and property.

It had definite boundaries. It ruled within the ancient limits of the former State of Panama, with none within its borders to dispute its authority. It had a supreme court. Its municipalities were in operation. It had [illegible] as much of a navy as Colombia had. It had the Padilla, one of the strongest of the naval craft of Colombia. It had a flag, and on that date it was the only power on the Isthmus which [illegible] its citizens or any other government would look for protection, or with which it could deal. It was the only [illegible] there, and its sovereignty was complete. The power of Colombia having [illegible] for a long period or a short time. I would be [illegible] principle of international law [illegible] entering into relations with the only governing power in existence on the Isthmus.

It was in fact [illegible] and the President's act was [illegible] us only to re[illegible] the Isthmus of Panama, which had been [illegible] no civil war [illegible] from [illegible] of that Colombia by the [illegible] rings for the [illegible] of a [illegible] Professor Woolsey [illegible]

> A state is [illegible] nt.
> [illegible] which governs itself, under what form soever, without dependence [illegible]
> [illegible]
> A state may [illegible] ple permanently occupying a fixed territory [illegible] forth as [illegible]

Pomeroy says, section 50, page 47:

It must, of course, in some way govern itself and be free from external control over its affairs. It is [illegible] note the following from Professor P[illegible], page 50:

> [illegible] Under what circumstances [illegible]

Professor Woolsey says:

> [illegible]

Chief Justice Marshall said, speaking of the equality of states (10 Wheaton, 66), "Russia and Geneva have equal rights," and so the United States and the Republic of Panama have, from the moment of its recognition, equal rights.

Professor Pomeroy upon this subject says:

> But [illegible] It is [illegible] said. Nor [illegible] and wrong at the hands of more powerful communities.

Of course the laws which were in force on the Isthmus of Panama prior to the revolution which separated the State from Colombia would continue in force until changed by the new sovereignty. To permit them to remain in force and to enforce obedience to them was an adoption of them, and in itself an exercise of sovereignty. By every test laid down by international law the Republic of Panama on the 6th of November and on the 13th of November was sovereign and independent. Its internal sovereignty was complete; its independence was complete. Recognition of the fact of independence did not add to its sovereignty or independence, but operated to admit it, so far as the United States was concerned, into the family of nations.

I am not at all oblivious to the fact that there is a distinction between the recognition of the de facto government or administration of an independent state and the recognition of an independent state. The state is one thing, its government is another. International law [illegible] the right of the people of a nation recognized as independent to change their form of government. Revolution may destroy a monarchy and substitute a republic, or it may destroy a republic operating under a constitution and substitute for it a dictatorship without destroying at all the identity of the state as a member of the family of independent states. In such case instructions to an ambassador or minister to recognize that government which de facto administers a previously recognized independent state are necessary, and may be given at once.

It is not a recognition of independence, nor does it commit the Government to the proposition that the de facto government is a de jure government. We have had a great number of such instances, of course, in our history. Minister Washburn was accredited to France when she was an empire under Louis Napoleon. While the Empire was overthrown and the Republic was established in its place he was instructed to recognize the new Government, but the identity of France as an independent nation was not interrupted nor did the recognition of the Republic involve in anywise the question of independence. The same thing was true of Brazil.

[illegible] province becomes in fact sovereign it becomes in fact independent, and a recognition of the government in such case is a recognition of the independence of the state. De facto independence is de jure independence in international law. [illegible] not inquire concerning the right or wrong of revolution which brings independence. In such case the rule as to recognition in point of conditions and time is different, yet well defined. It is said by Mr. Wheaton, Lawrence's Wheaton, page [illegible]

> [illegible] the civil society [illegible]

The recognition of a new state, of course, involves delicate and [illegible] Mr. Phillimore, page 302:

Speaking of recognition of independence, he says:

> [illegible] than is [illegible] its integrity, its [illegible] It must have [illegible] the new state into the family of [illegible] to it with all international rights.

[illegible] sums up the discussion, volume 2, pages 19 and 20:

> [illegible] two facts [illegible] of the civil society [illegible] the political state, after the establishment of a permanent government, [illegible] that the new state by the [illegible] of the world, though it is not [illegible] that this recognition should follow, and not precede, that of the old state. Upon this point both the reason of the thing and the ancient and modern practice of nations are quite decisive.

Mr. Dana says, Dana's Wheaton, page 42:

> But with reference to a final recognition by a general treaty or by the establishment of [illegible] intercourse a more positive rule can be laid down. The only [illegible] is that the new state shall be in fact what the recognizing state assumes it to be, for it must be recognized, once for all, that it is among the possibilities of things to have treaties and [illegible] intercourse with [illegible] states. The practice of nations furnishes the best [illegible] and illustrations of the consistency of things in the new state which will justify such a recognition. It is not necessary that the parent state or the dismembered country should have ceased from any efforts to regain the province. On the other hand, it is necessary that the contest should have been seriously maintained.

Manning says, page 100:

> Public recognition for the purpose of general intercourse on equal terms of a newly formed, though [illegible] and yet firmly established, government. * * * It need only be stated as to that the recognition of a de facto government no longer [illegible] with the actual [illegible] requires very [illegible] consideration, while active interposition in a contest [illegible] requires very many.

Hall says, pages 77 and 78:

> [illegible] can not be held to be established, and recognition [illegible] as a substantial [illegible] by the formerly sovereign state for the recovery of its [illegible] and that
> [illegible] on the part of the formerly sovereign state, or a [illegible] provided for a reasonable time [illegible] to prevent the rights of [illegible] in forming modern conditions [illegible] as a route [illegible] continuing to have a secular one.

Historicus says (Creasy, p. 680):

> [illegible] nor can they be regarded as a breach of neutrality or friendship.

Lorimer says (vol. 1, p. 24):

> [illegible] law is on a level with municipal law.

Apply these principles to the Republic of Panama, as it existed on the 6th and 13th of November, and the consideration of the President's act is [illegible]

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question in order that I may understand his proposition?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator does not mean to state that there is any difference in the power of the President of the United States in [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; not at all. The power of the President [illegible] independent state and the [illegible] independent state is the same. The one is as [illegible] as the other. Each is derived from the same language in the Constitution. Only in international law it is customary, and perhaps necessary, often to more quickly recognize a changed government or administration of an independent state than in the case of a new independent state.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I did not put the question as indicating for a moment a doubt on my part of the [illegible] of the proposition now made, or because I misunderstood [illegible]. But I was afraid his statement, that there was no great difference between the two, following what he had just said, might be understood in some quarters to imply a difference in the powers of the President.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not the slightest doubt that the sentence as I uttered it may [illegible] the Senator's attention, and I thank him for giving me by his question an opportunity to disclaim any such thought, because there is no possible distinction between the President's power in the one case and his power in the other.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin is discussing a very important and interesting phase of this subject, and merely in order to get some light from a legal standpoint I am going to ask him what are the President's powers, acting under a treaty, in relation to the preservation of the transit, and the condition which would arise after the railroad, for instance, or the canal, or whatever it is, changed its ownership? Now, we were protecting the transit, but we had a treaty with Colombia. After we recognized Panama did the same condition exist, and did the President have the same right in law, international or otherwise, to preserve the transit?

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I want the Senator to get to it. It is on this very subject of the President's power. I do not want him to forget this point.

Mr. SPOONER. I am hurrying to it; but I want to say, in reply to the Senator from South Carolina, that what the United States did on the Isthmus of Panama in protecting the transit it would have had an absolute right to do without any treaty in a country which acknowledged no law and which was either habitually incompetent or unwilling to afford the protection of law to foreign citizens, their lives, and their property.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator first appeal to the law and then to the higher law? Ought we not to confine ourselves to the one or the other and not take both?

Mr. SPOONER. I was not appealing to any higher law when I asserted that, independent of the treaty—and I think my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is a great international lawyer, will agree with me—if there had been no treaty, and our citizens with their property and their families, were resident in a country which was unable or unwilling to enforce law for their protection, it is powerful in and is the power and duty of the Government to use to their protection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will not acknowledge that, and the Senator need not go over to bend at the senator from Colorado. The point I can not understand is why the Senator first appeals to our treaty rights with Colombia and then, after I had taken to explain the condition which existed after the treaty died by reason of the revolution of Panama from Colombia, and whether the President then had any right under the treaty, he jumps onto the inherent right to protect citizens in jeopardy, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am trying to get back to the original legal question as to what were the President's powers and rights with regard to this piece of ground.

Mr. SPOONER. Before the Senator came into the Chamber I acknowledged to show, and I am not going over it again, that under the treaty, which grants to us the right of way or transit and guaranteed to us if Colombia failed to make that guaranty good, there existed in the treaty right the power on our part to utilize it, and I said that if there were no such treaty right, we would have the right to do on the Isthmus just what we have done.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if my friend—and I rarely object to his interruptions, but I have spoken too long——

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not like to interrupt the Senator. He is tired. I have not done as is for he has been speaking for several hours. I do not want to trespass on his good nature. I merely have a little doubt in my mind as to whether we can take advantage of two points of law here. Either we must confine ourselves to our treaty rights or we must confine ourselves to the general international law.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator doubt our right to utilize the right of way or transit under the treaty?

Mr. TILLMAN. None in the world.

Mr. SPOONER. Very good. If there were no treaty and our citizens had gone there, and they were about to be destroyed, both as to life and property, in a country which did not protect them, does the Senator doubt our right to protect them?

Mr. TILLMAN. None in the world.

Mr. SPOONER. Then what on earth is the difference between the Senator and myself?

Mr. TILLMAN. The difference is that the Senator has not shown yet, and I was trying to get some light in my own mind as to where the legal right lay. I want to ascertain what right the President had to warn Colombia not to land troops within 50 miles.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the President had every right, in view of the history which is in this book, and which, perhaps, the Senator has not read—and if he has not I commend it to him—to warn Colombia, belated and neglectful after long notice, not to land troops anywhere on that Isthmus that would bring about speedily a fight in Colon or Panama or along the line of the railway.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I can not help——

Mr. SPOONER. Just as President Cleveland did in 1885.

Mr. TILLMAN. The point I want the Senator to explain, if he will, is why at this late day he wastes sympathy—I will not say he wastes it——

Mr. SPOONER. I guess I waste it so far as the Senator from South Carolina is concerned.

Mr. TILLMAN. On the Panamaians, or whatever you call them. I will just say the inhabitants of Panama——

Mr. SPOONER. That is all right.

Mr. TILLMAN. If these people were so downtrodden and oppressed or such subjects of sympathy and charity and pity, why did not the United States step forward and say to Colombia, "Here, we are going to take these people under our wing, and we are going to build a canal through that country for our benefit and for theirs too?" Why did we wait until after the treaty had been rejected at Bogota before we found out that those people were so much oppressed, that they were in such a horrible condition of being trampled over and robbed?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator deny that ever since 1885 they were deprived of their Government and all that?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not doubt it.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator deny that they were brutally oppressed?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. Does he deny——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mind you, I do not admit it, and I do not deny it, because I have not been there, and I am a little afraid of about the reports that come here. I think there has been a fearful lot of lying done.

Mr. SPOONER. I think myself there has been a good deal. As the Senator will neither admit nor deny it——

Mr. TILLMAN. I will do this——

Mr. SPOONER. Then his answer to my question ought to be, "I do not know."

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I do not know. But what I want to find out from the Senator, if he is willing to tell me, is why we have manifested an interest this late day, after the treaty has been rejected, that those people at Panama were so terribly oppressed. Now, if you are going to bring a parallel between our interference in Cuba and the great good we did those people, and the situation in Panama, in order to soothe the American conscience in the action that we have taken in Panama, I tell you, Mr. President, that we ought not to play ourselves with ourselves and delude ourselves into the belief that we are doing a great and humane and generous thing in relieving Panamaians from distress and from oppression. If there was not a canal in it; if—as the Senator from Massachusetts has graphically and in a dozen times portrayed the situation—if the big policeman had not been induced by this Government that the time was ripe for action, and had never the Isthmus to the Senator's knowledge, I suppose his contention would meet my hearty approval.

Mr. SPOONER. Now——

Mr. TILLMAN. But with the canal——

Mr. SPOONER. Now I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will sit down.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well. The Senator seems to be worried about the proposition that we have discussed in this Chamber would be put in connection with the Senator's good friend the people of Panama had been for a great many years grievously——

Mr. TILLMAN. Oppressed.

Mr. SPOONER. With unspeakable brutality and greed and selfishness oppressed. They had if ever any people had ground for revolt. During many years the United States has helped to fasten the shackles upon them and to maintain the tyranny over them. At last they revolted. There came a situation where they were the only governing power on the Isthmus. They established a government. They called it a republic. They adopted the formation of a constitution. They had the only election that has been held on the Isthmus for many many years. Their republic was supported by all the people.

The United States, upon every principle that is dear to us—that spirit and principle which moved us to go to war for Cuba—observing every [illegible] of humanity, [illegible] to have recognized it, but the President should not have done this righteous act because there was a canal in it, notwithstanding the only hope of prosperity and happiness for the Isthmians is the canal. Is that it?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is it from our standpoint, but it ought not to be it from the standpoint of high morals or honesty.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, Mr. President, it amounts to this: All that the United States has done down there, that the President has done, has told for liberty, told for righteousness, told for good, and is beyond criticism, worthy of all praise, if the President had acted in violation of the act of Congress and refused, lest the canal which Congress has commanded him to obtain if he could, if there is any comfort to the Senator or any of his associates in that logic, they are welcome to it.

EVIDENCES OF STABILITY.

Mr. President, these interruptions, not pertinent to what I was considering, and involving repetition, have taken up too much of my time.

The President found a republic well established, with every reason in the world to regard it as a stable republic. Why? Not only was there no "substantial struggle" progressing on the part of Colombia to reassert her sovereignty, but there was none whatever. None had been prepared or attempted, except as evidenced by the arrival of the 450 men, who quickly sailed away. Colombia, after a three years' war, just ended, was exhausted to the point of ruin, as General Reyes says in his correspondence with Secretary Hay. Probably he had better opportunities for accurate knowledge than Senators have. With 4,500,000 people she had an army of only 10,000 men, as General Reyes says, and probably he knows.

Colombia is absolutely bankrupt. She has no credit abroad, and no [illegible] at home. She has no navy of any [illegible]. She is isolated from the Isthmus of Panama, and General Reyes says: "It is known that there is no overland way to reach Panama with troops from the interior of Colombia." Nor is that all. Colombia has another province, Cauca, the most powerful of her States, is and has been on the verge of revolt. The same thing can be said of Antioquia, and there are others. Already, in order to prevent the dismemberment of Colombia, the Bogota Government has [illegible] and as to how they believe these shall be brought about. (Correspondence, S. Doc. 95, p. 35.)

On the same page will be found a letter, which would be a credit to any [illegible], from General Triana, the commander of a division, and [illegible] of the Department of Cauca, in which General Triana says:

[illegible] know my views. I have expressed them [illegible] of municipal life which does not exist, and of civil and political [illegible] in administration [illegible] on this question.

In the condition she was in at home, Colombia did not dare send sufficient troops to attempt the resubjugation of Panama. The people of the Isthmus had a right to take advantage of the exhaustion and weakness of Colombia, and in considering the question of recognition the President had no right to close his eyes to the same condition.

Nor is that all. General Reyes, in his correspondence with Secretary Hay, recognizes the impracticability of a resubjugation of Panama. He says:

[illegible] the national unit it would, without doubt, have asked the mediation of some [illegible] understanding with the de facto gov[illegible]

In the same letter he speaks of the true character of the new State of Panama, as he terms it, and [illegible] of the example of the people of the Isthmus, of the "anarchy, license, and dissolution which a future dismemberment might occasion." He ought to know. Nor is that all. In a cablegram from our minister at Bogota, November 7, there comes from the minister of Panama [illegible] worn-out, [illegible] Government [illegible] in many ways should be pitied, the desire to be informed whether—

Also, if the Government of the United States [illegible] Colombia [illegible] XXI [illegible] Colombian Government is entirely unable to suppress the secession movement there.

While Senators here are [illegible] Panama could not have lived a day [illegible] been withdrawn, the Government of Colombia is officially appealing to us to know if we would not suppress the Republic of Panama under the treaty of 1846 in contemplation of the entire [illegible] herself. Who knows best as to the power of Colombia to [illegible] that sovereignty, the Senator from South Carolina or the Colombian foreign minister?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. I made a mistake. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have never made any assertion along the line the Senator has just been speaking.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I withdraw the question so far as it relates to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I want to ask the Senator, has not Colombia also notified us that if we would reopen negotiations she would ratify the treaty and give us everything we wanted?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes. Colombia rejected the treaty upon the ground that it did not give her what she ought to have within some twenty-five or thirty million dollars; upon the ground also that it violated her constitution. She could not make the treaty with us on the ground also that it diminished her sovereignty by giving us the right to maintain courts of justice there, before which our own citizens and the subjects or citizens of other governments than Colombia sailing over [illegible] appear.

She wanted to give us the treaty, but could not, because the honor of the Government [illegible] would not permit. But the moment she found that the United States would not any longer be her ally in [illegible] that there was a concentrated, well-prepared revolution [illegible] on the Isthmus, and realized her weakness, [illegible] slaughtered, and she would [illegible] would start [illegible] over the [illegible] which [illegible] would give us the treaty just as it had been [illegible].

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me another question?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe I understand why Panama seceded was because the treaty was rejected. Was that [illegible]?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator would only read the declaration of the people of Panama——

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, we do not want any manifestoes gotten up in New York.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not want anything except to have his own way about [illegible].

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I want to have the right to have my own idea about it.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator willing to ignore as a powerful element operating upon the people of Panama this long-continued reign of outrage and robbery?

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, will the Senator allow me to answer him?

Mr. SPOONER. I have to allow the Senator to answer——

Mr. TILLMAN. My idea about this matter is——

Mr. SPOONER. But I beg the Senator to be brief.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has proved very conclusively that there would have been no secession but for tyranny. But somehow or other that tyranny never came out in the open. We never heard a thing about it until the treaty was rejected. And now the Senator plays us on both prongs. He takes advantage of either side of this issue that is [illegible]. It is either tyranny or it is because the treaty was rejected. Now, the Senator ought to confine himself to one or the other of those issues.

Mr. SPOONER. I have said that the people revolted because of the tyranny, because there was but one ray of hope, one pathway to light out of that darkness, and that was the canal and through it the government [illegible] of the Isthmus, and that when the door was bolted upon that [illegible] together they [illegible] and [illegible] if the Senator from South Carolina had been there he would have been the chief of the conspirators and revolutionists.

Mr. TILLMAN. You have paid me a great compliment.

Mr. SPOONER. When the Senator says I pay him a great compliment, he speaks the truth, and he admits unwittingly the force of all I have said.

Mr. TILLMAN. Lest the Senator's remarks should be taken too broadly——

Mr. SPOONER. It can not be narrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the Senator to recall the fact that I have had some opinions and I have [illegible] in a brief way here, and I spoke of the Colombians as a [illegible] lot.

Mr. SPOONER. You took it back.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I did not take it back. I stand by it. I have never taken it back. The Senator [illegible] have [illegible] or [illegible]. The [illegible] over Panama. I do not. I simply suggest to the manner in which the United States has dealt with this matter.

Mr. SPOONER. No, Mr. President, rather than consider this revolution as a [illegible] for liberty, as natural as ever [illegible] and [illegible] for it, growing out of years of tyranny, the Senator proposes [illegible] squint-eyed judgment upon the President and [illegible] for it, all [illegible] upon which to base an [illegible] Administration.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator discloses his own partisanship in charging motives to his to me. But I want to ask him this question: Suppose Colombia had not listened to the complaint of the governor of Cauca—one of her provinces, a constituent State—would it be our business to go down there and set Cauca up in the business of a republic?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, the Senator must confine himself to some limitation somewhere. If it is our business to become a guardian ad litem for all mixed populations, Latin populations, and others down in South America and below us to the South, the Senator ought to say we should do so; and if it is not, why single out the only one that has a canal and then try to make out that we are honorably getting in the position we are now in?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator can not see the distinction between our relations to the Isthmus of Panama for the last sixty years and our relations to Cuba and Aniaquia and other Departments of Colombia, I confess my utter inability to give him light upon that subject.

WHY SHOULD THE PRESIDENT HAVE DELAYED RECOGNITION?

Mr. President, I emphatically assert that when the President found that Government established, with no struggle for its conquest in progress or threatened, exercising sovereignty and jurisdiction throughout the Isthmus, enforcing law, protecting property—independent in fact—it was his right and his duty to recognize it promptly, and the facts do not warrant any man in this country in impeaching either his wisdom or honesty of purpose in so doing.

Now, Mr. President, each state is to decide for itself whether or not and when it will recognize an independent state. It is a matter of policy. It depends somewhat upon sympathy, somewhat upon interest. The question did not present itself to this Government altogether as it did to governments across the sea, which had no such relation to the Isthmus as we had sustained for nearly sixty years.

It was right for the President to act promptly, justified by the sympathy of this people for the downtrodden; by the impossibility of our denouncing the treaty of 1846, of holding Colombia to the enforcement of her guaranty, of continuing to be her ally as an oppressor of the people of the Isthmus. It involved our dignity as a government and the safety of the Republic, as a short canal will double the capacity of our Navy, and enable us to reach more quickly our coast on the Atlantic or Pacific. It involved the Monroe doctrine in more ways than one, enabling us through that short canal to carry more efficiently its protection to the South American republics on the western coast. It subserved the interest of every South American republic. In short, there was every reason of humanity, of sympathy, of international law, of justice, of reparation, of interest, of safety, why he should recognize the independence of the Republic of Panama.

Why should he have waited, and how long should he have waited? The unanimity of sentiment among the nations which followed the example of the United States in this recognition is of itself an overwhelming evidence, from the standpoint of international law, that the President's action was correct under its principles. Seventeen governments proceeded to place the seal of their approval upon the action of the President, as follows:

List of governments which have recognized the independence of Panama, with the dates of recognition.

United States	Nov. 6, 1903	Nicaragua	Dec. 13, 1903
France	Nov. 9, 1903	Haiti	Dec. 14, 1903
China	Nov. 9, 1903	Cuba	Dec. 16, 1903
Austria-Hungary	Nov. 9, 1903	Great Britain	Dec. 18, 1903
Germany	Nov. 9, 1903	Japan	Dec. 19, 1903
Denmark	Dec. 1, 1903	Portugal	Dec. 21, 1903
Italy	Dec. 1, 1903	Costa Rica	Dec. 22, 1903
Sweden and Norway	Dec. 1, 1903	Guatemala	Dec. 28, 1903
Belgium	Dec. 9, 1903

It is unquestionable that the approval of these nations, whose authority upon questions of international law, should have so little weight with the Senator and Senators who have so bitterly attacked the President in this matter.

THE EFFECT OF INDEPENDENCE.

The moment the Republic of Panama became independent that moment, from the international standpoint, it was as completely free from Colombia as if from the beginning of time the Republic of Panama had existed as an independent nation. Colombia became absolutely a foreign State to the Republic of Panama. Its people are no longer under the Colombian constitution, and what legal result follows from that? The Senator from Alabama argues, and upon my life I can not comprehend such a contention, that Colombia still owns the canal concession and the railway concession, and that neither can be transferred to the Government of the United States without her consent. That is an impossibility, Mr. President, in law.

The moment the Republic of Panama became sovereign and independent it became the successor in sovereignty and proprietorship to Colombia of the railway concession and the canal concession as fully as if she had originally granted them. They are all on territory now a part of her domain. Being independent, Colombia has no more sovereignty over her territory or ownership within her boundaries than I have over the home of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER] in Detroit. It must be admitted, of course, that so long as Colombia maintained her sovereignty over the Isthmus she retained her rights of property; no longer. All money she received by way of rentals from the railroad concession and for extensions of time to the canal company before Panama became independent are hers. They were rentals and money received by the proprietor during the proprietorship. The ownership by operation of law has changed. It inheres in the sovereignty, and when Colombia lost the sovereignty she lost the ownership, and the nation which acquired the sovereignty acquired the ownership.

Henceforth the Republic of Panama has alone to deal with the canal company and its concession, with the railroad company and its concession. If under the terms of the Wyse concession the canal company property should become forfeited, would anyone contend that it would become forfeited to Colombia, and that Colombia could sell it, with a right to use it, to some other company or government? Upon what theory Colombia could acquire property under the sovereignty of a foreign government in that way it is impossible for me to discover. If this be not true, it follows that although Colombia has lost the ownership which she possessed by virtue of her sovereignty she is entitled forever, if the canal were completed, to collect the rents, and although the canal lies in the territory of another government and under the sovereignty and jurisdiction of that government, it is as alien to its ownership and control as if the Republic of Panama were Great Britain.

The truth is, in my judgment, that the Republic of Panama stands as to both concessions as if "Colombia" were stricken from the original concessions and the "Republic of Panama" inserted. It is for her, not Colombia, now to consent or to refuse to consent to the transfer of the canal concession by the New Panama Canal Company to this Government. It is for her, not Colombia, to grant extensions of time to the canal company or to refuse it. It is for her alone to insist upon forfeitures or to waive forfeitures. Her title is as complete and absolute as if it were derived by grant from Colombia. She owns the territory, and she has acquired it cum onere. It is burdened with the canal concessions; a portion of it is burdened with a railway concession. She owns the property subject to the burdens which were on it when it came to her through revolution and independence.

EFFECT OF INDEPENDENCE UPON ARTICLE XXXV.

What else followed the independence of this State, Mr. President? Upon well settled principles of international law I insist that the right granted to the United States by Article XXXV of the treaty of 1846 constitutes in international law a servitude, recognized in the books and in the practice of governments as an international servitude, and that the Republic of Panama upon becoming independent and assuming the territory took it subject to the burdens and liabilities of the treaty so far as they were local in their nature to that territory. In all the references in the books to international servitudes the right of way or of passage is clearly included. There were some which [illegible] an imperfect right, or "customary privilege," but which when established by contract or treaty become rights, and the right of passage or way across a territory is not only a servitude, but is the nature of a real servitude.

Hall says:

[illegible]

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me to remind him at that point that our great fishery rights, if it were otherwise, than he states, would have been extinguished by our revolution on the one side, or would be extinguished if Canada should separate herself from England on the other?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. HOAR. So we are pledged to that doctrine in the strongest manner.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course; but, Mr. President, I must insert the authorities without comment:

A state may limit or qualify its sovereignty and jurisdiction over its territorial property by permitting a foreign state to perform within its bounds [illegible] the right to exercise certain rights of jurisdiction [illegible] to others. Instances of these impairments of the sovereignty of a State are known as servitudes, which may be of the positive or negative. (Taylor, sec. 212, p. 208.)

NOTE.—The term servitude is borrowed from Roman law, wherein it denotes an incumbrance on a dominant tenement for the benefit of a servient one. In order to convey the former into the latter, some kind of contract or stipulation was necessary. (Sohm's Institutes, ii, Title II. De Servitutibus.)

A servitude is made to be created only when the parent state is deprived of a portion of its territory which is practically given and permanently dedicated to another. The subject matter is such that its enjoyment does not impair or lessen the territorial rights of any part of the dominant state, so it is not necessary for the dominant state to surrender its sovereignty or any part of its political rights, or to see its territory lessened in extent. Such a change in the political organization, or in the person of the owner, [illegible] applies to dominant tenements, which are the subject of property and treaty engagements, [illegible] to the [illegible] of property.

In other words, as through states, so also corporate life without interruption, or rights and duties, property and all general benefits pertaining to the corporation, which [illegible] for any change in the corporate [illegible] or secured by a state or [illegible] to levy no more than [illegible] (Taylor, sec. 195, pp. 205, 206.)

Servitudes may be classified in various ways. They may be "positive," [illegible] "negative," "personal," "real," "parent" or "appurtenant," [illegible] (Holland's Elements of Jurisprudence, pp. 155, 196. See Kinkel's International Law of Jurisprudence, pp. 245, 246.)

[illegible] International servitudes may be created by express compact, or they may be based on prescription. International servitudes have been defined as [illegible] state [illegible] of another state. [illegible] state which would not be lawful without express [illegible] (Taylor, sec. 212, p. 208.)

[illegible] the most kind of international servitudes, or more [illegible] (Taylor, sec. 212, p. 208.)

[illegible] a state to abstain from exercising any or full jurisdiction [illegible] a specified [illegible] imported by specified foreigners, or on specified forces [illegible]

[illegible] in a state not to set up custom-houses on its territory [illegible] international servitudes of the other class (Taylor, sec. 212, p. 208.)

[illegible] of the troops of another state [illegible]

[illegible] the troops of another state to occupy any [illegible] state; or to allow another state to exercise [illegible] or taxes in such territory, or to organize [illegible]

[illegible] an end—

[illegible]

[illegible] of international abandonment [illegible] (Taylor, sec. 212, p. 208.)

[illegible] by immemorial prescription, [illegible] manner. They may be also created by treaty, by express [illegible] by forcible [illegible] or in [illegible] to do a thing [illegible] or to suffer a thing to be done [illegible] belonging from the [illegible] (Taylor, sec. 212, p. 208.)

[illegible] Examples.—The following examples of servitudes created by treaty [illegible]

[illegible] of 1713, between England and France, it was [illegible] Stuart pretenders should not be permitted [illegible]

[illegible] between Spain and France, the possession of [illegible] by treaty [illegible]

[illegible] of 1814 provided that Antwerp was to be an exclusive [illegible] Belgian for troops were to be abolished [illegible] International Law, sec. 12, pp. 53, 54.)

[illegible] troops of war and the like. A new question of this kind has very recently been passed upon by the tribunal to the Suez canal. It said that it could some day have to be decided how far the sovereignty of a country which allows its dependencies a waterway to be used in time of war by its territory is entitled to close it at will. (Holland, Studies in International Law, p. 155.)

245 Martens speaks of treaties which create a servitude of public law [illegible] in favor of one nation within the territory of another. The term servitude is borrowed from the civil law of the Romans, where it was used to denote such things as [illegible] as for instance a right of way across the land of a neighbor. A servitude was distinguished by the Roman jurists from a right, and in order to convert a servitude into a legal appurtenant or stipulation to that effect was necessary. "Sed quia valet aliquid jus constituere pactionibus atque stipulationibus in [illegible] debet."

The right of navigation is only an imperfect right, but under certain circumstances a right of navigation may [illegible] a servitude. Thus the maintenance of a river bank by the territorial sovereignty for the benefit of two nations, which neither bank may be allowed to change without the consent of the other, or the use of the river of two nations, without passing over portions of the river which are being farther upstream, or two lakes joined by a navigable river be surrounded by the territory of another nation, and the former may have the privilege of access to the open sea without passing over the territory of the latter nation. Thus the temporary use of the Swiss Confederation is declared in fact, subject to certain conditions, so that, under the treaty of Vienna, [illegible] the navigation of the Rhine, [illegible] to be free to all nations for the purpose of access to the open sea, except by passing over the territory of one other nation.

Again a navigable river may be [illegible] by the territory of another nation, [illegible] Prussia, or occupied by the territory of other nations, as in the North Germany and Prussia provinces of Prussia, [illegible] which [illegible] a right of way across the territory of one nation in favor of another nation [illegible] Wheaton's Elements of International Law, sec. 12, pp. 53, 54.)

[illegible] of war, but which [illegible] the rights of peace. Kinkel has given the following [illegible] of War: Mr. Wheaton [illegible] which there can arise no dispute. (Twiss, Law of Nations, [illegible]) obligation would have been created by the agent of the States as to which it was local. No State under the new government could be permitted to repudiate it, because it would be from first to last its own contract, made by its own agent.

[illegible] were no international doctrines of servitude. When this treaty was made, when this servitude was created, Mr. President, Panama was a sovereign State, a component of a [illegible] upon the Government of New Granada [illegible] and this treaty, so far as [illegible] and the Legal Status Article XXXV, [illegible] Panama—was the treaty of Panama [illegible] New Granada.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator does not put his position, though, on the fact that at the time the treaty was made Panama was [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. I do not. It is not necessary. Who contends, Mr. President, on the other side that to-day we have no right of way or transit across the Isthmus? I put the question in the [illegible] that to-day we have no right of way or passage as well as before. It is not seriously disputed. I think, if that right or servitude still exists, it must be because the obligation became transferred to the new Republic, because, being a servitude and a treaty right land in its nature the sovereignty of Panama succeeded to the sovereignty and ownership subject to the burdens.

Now, Mr. President, possessing the right, what follows? Obviously that we must put the price. And what is the price? To maintain the perfect neutrality of the Isthmus, and the rights of sovereignty and property of the Republic of Panama therein. And so it has seemed to the patent. Mr. President, that upon the recognition by the United States on the 6th of November of the Republic of Panama there was in law a [illegible] as to Article XXXV, and as to the consequence, and from that date the Republic of Panama stood as the grantor of the right of transit or passage, and we as her guarantor, as we had been the guarantor of Colombia, as to the Isthmus. In this view the Proclamation the recognition of independence, had not only a perfect right, but a duty, the treaty being the law of the land, to prevent any invasion by a foreign state, which Colombia had become, of the Isthmus of Panama.

Of course senators say it was not the intention of New Granada when she made this treaty that it should ever be turned against her or a successor government. Probably not; but that is not the question. If the territory went to the Republic of Panama burdened with these servitudes, which are created by the treaty, that is the end of the question. It is difficult to conceive it possible that any South American republic could make a treaty without contemplating the possibility of revolution and dismemberment. That is one of the vicissitudes of national life, and in South America it has been one of the habits of national life.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLIC NO APPROVAL OF DOCTRINE OF SECESSION.

Some of our friends on the other side who are opposed to the treaty seem to roll under their tongues as a sweet morsel the assumption that the President, by the recognition of this Republic, has committed himself and the country to the doctrine of secession. I can not believe such a conclusion is serious. The distinction between the revolt of a province of Colombia and the secession of a State from the American Union is too palpable for debate. The contention might answer in a lodge of the lawgivers of the Confederacy, but not among Senators of the United States. It is not worth spending time upon.

The Southern States claimed under the Constitution the legal right to withdraw from what they called a "compact." They insisted that there was no power in the Federal Government to coerce a State to remain in the Union; that she was invested peacefully to withdraw. A great majority of the people of this country stood by the doctrine of Daniel Webster, that ours is an indestructible Union, which can not be dissolved by the action of any State or States. The doctrine of Daniel Webster in his reply to Hayne was crystallized on the field of battle into the national law which holds our States together, indivisible, and to-day is it a greater blessing to the peoples of the South.

The departments of Colombia were powerless to prevent Panama beyond the right of revolution, as did the Southern States, and succeeded, while the latter failed. That is all there is of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator suppose that we would have failed if we had had a big friend like the United States or England or France to come around there and wave an umbrella over us?

Mr. SPOONER. Well, we found a good deal of fault with the said that both England and France gave you. They very promptly recognized your belligerency, and England allowed you to fit out your privateers in their ports to destroy our commerce. But what is the use of going into that? The Senator interrupts me upon points which are not attracting my attention.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator brought it up himself.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not bring that up. I brought the Senator up. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I have finished. It has been far from my purpose to make a personal speech. It has been my earnest wish to support in a helpful, frank and entirely sincere way the conclusions which I have reached. I wish I might have done so with greater power and better [illegible].

Whatever may be said, the independence of the Republic of Panama is an accomplished fact. The recognitions of that fact are irrevocable. The treaty will be ratified, and it is cause for popular congratulation that in the final action upon it there will be no [illegible] on party lines.

The work of canal construction will be speedily inaugurated and pushed with the energy and [illegible] Government to the [illegible] long dreamed of [illegible] by mankind.

It is not [illegible] will be [illegible] November. That [illegible] and will not disturb the [illegible].

[illegible] to hinge if with [illegible] the safe assurance that [illegible] for the South American republics, and for the world [illegible] and the enlarging [illegible] and it will not be forgotten by posterity in praise of [illegible] there has also come, [illegible] law, a new republic, [illegible] liberty, and prosperity. For it will be deserved and will receive not only the plaudits of thoughtful men of our own day, but the grateful remembrance of posterity.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] such time as he desires.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I promise the committee that I will not occupy very much of the time that the chairman has so kindly given to me. It seems to me that it is almost unnecessary to discuss the proposition that this bill, and especially the broad proposition of the necessity of maintaining the naval service of the United States. I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] last night. I was impressed with the earnestness with which he presented the point in behalf of American seamen.

I did not understand him to make the assertion that the conditions he presented were good in any sense that [illegible] the navy of the United States, but that there have been great improvements in the treatment of the enlisted men in the Navy, and the attention of Congress to care for their interests as well as the other needs of the service. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the American enlisted man in the Navy of the United States today is receiving the largest pay of any enlisted seaman in any navy in the world; that he is given the best rations that is given in any navy in the world; that he is given more and better clothing upon the date of his enlistment than any other seaman in any navy in the world; that we give them besides this the right to go from the lowest rank to the highest in the American Navy; that he can pass through the grades of petty officers' force, through those of the officers' force, to the rank of rear-admiral, if his genius and his ability warrants him to do so.

In addition to that I want to say that under recent regulations, which in my judgment are calculated to create a very great advance in our naval service and in the effectiveness of it, every man aboard a ship of war has opportunity now to drill in the training and the firing of our guns, so that he may become an expert gunner. We have had a good deal of trouble and a good deal of expenditure about this. Any gentleman who will consider the matter and know it is a very easy matter upon land and upon a stable foundation to point a gun at a target with a reasonable hope of hitting it. When you are aboard ship, where you are subject to the fluctuations that come from the rising from the bottom to the crest of a wave, where there is constant motion, the greatest difficulties that the navies of the world have had have been to invent apparatus by which they could aim those guns at a target and be of any reasonable degree of certainty to hit it.

I want to say that your attention has been called by improvements made recently through the work of Lieutenant Commander Sims in naval gunnery, following the researches of Commander Scott, of the English navy, we are now able to accomodate the gun mount to those disturbances which come from the motion of the ship, so that that difficulty is overcome, and in order to encourage the seamen aboard our battle ships every man of them is given the privilege of training himself and learning this system and being able to fire the guns and fire them effectively. No matter from what quarter of the ship he may come, he who shows the greatest proficiency is rewarded for that efficiency, and it makes a part of his record and enables him to advance in the service. As I started to say, the condition of the American seaman aboard the American battle ships, while it may not be ideal, is far ahead of that of the enlisted men under similar conditions in the ships of other countries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word or two in regard to the general policy of building up the Navy. I congratulate the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MANN] and others on the fact that we have had a very patriotic policy in regard to the naval service. As the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from California both said, the upbuilding of the American Navy is not a partisan question.

Mr. Chairman, the maintenance and preservation of the United States Navy is a question as broad as the American people, as the nation's honor, and the nation's defense. It includes the protection of every man, woman, and child from the North, from the South, from the East, from the West. It is a question in which all parties can agree.

While we may have differences of opinion as to the method of conducting the service, the character of the ships that may be built, the expenditures of money that may be put in this navy-yard or that navy-yard, the control of the increase of this branch of service, the decrease of that branch of the service, yet the general policy of maintaining the naval service, that is vital to the interests of every man and every woman and every child in this great Republic. Why? Why, 80,000,000 people in this country, naturally trained by its resolutions of the past and by its history, there is no man today who would have fear or would entertain for a moment the question of successful invasion of this country by a land force of any nation on earth. The Minute Men of the Revolution, the volunteers of the civil war, the militia—in other words, the sons of American freedom—would spring up in a night and resist any such invasion; but we have a necessity upon us to defend ourselves at sea because any man who will contemplate the doubt or trepidation that comes to his mind in undertaking a mere visit across the ocean, the seasickness, the dangers that spring from his imagination, tell him that men, in order to defend themselves aboard our vessels, on our ships, must be fitted and prepared for it. Any man who will study the historical facts will find out that in almost every great struggle in the world's history victory has come to the power that controlled the sea.

There are many who believe that the history of Rome would have been different if Hannibal had not been compelled to lead his army through the mountains instead of crossing the narrow neck of intervening sea and thus bringing his troops fresh to the gates of Rome. There are very many who believe that our national independence would not have been possible if it had not been for the assistance of the French fleet on the Atlantic coast. There are many of us who believe that the civil war would not have been prolonged if there could have been that movement by Farragut and his fleet up through the Mississippi Valley, passing the forts and cutting in two the very heart and the very center of the Confederacy. There are very many who believe there never would have been a field of Waterloo if there had not been first a sea fight at Trafalgar.

For these reasons and because of our extended coast, because of our fixed policy of maintaining the Monroe doctrine, because of our determination to build the canal, because of the fact that we have undertaken to control and guide the destinies of the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, because we must defend our commerce in all seas and protect our citizens and their rights in all quarters of the globe, it is an absolute necessity for us to look first to offensive demonstration against our Government and defend ourselves on the sea.

Mr. Chairman, I think it was the great statesman, the man of "blood and iron," Bismarck, who said that the best insurance of peace was to be prepared for war. I want to say to you that the best assurance of our safety and our peace, not war, is in the Continental Navy. If we can be assailed at any point, it is upon the sea. If, we have any decision to make, it will be on the sea. We stand today the richest nation in the world. Our population is two or three times that of France, or of Germany, or of England even, if we take England and restrict it to the United Kingdom.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who has so strenuously taken his stand in opposition to the policy of increasing our Navy, has said that it is time for us to define our policy, and in his own mind he has worked out the idea that our policy is to build up a navy equal to that of Germany and possibly to equal England. Suppose that is true. Is there an American citizen to-day who does not believe that if the occasion came we ought to defend ourselves against England or Germany? Is there an American citizen to-day who believes that the old policy of the country of paying tribute, as we did to our shame and to our sorrow to the Dukes of Tripoli, is a proper one, and that we should be more apprehensive of England or Germany than we are of Tripoli? Is there an American citizen today who for one moment would think that because of our failure to prepare for contingencies we should not adopt such an aggressive policy, for instance, as that which England manifested towards us for years and years and which went to the length of search of our vessels and a seizure of our crews of our own ships?

I do not say that any such time will ever come to us; but suppose it should come to us now. Suppose it should come to us now, I say. We have eleven battle ships on the sea. England has [illegible] ships. Where would that great Atlantic fleet be if it were in a contest with a power? Where would we stand in a contest with Germany? Where would we stand in a contest, if it should come to us, in which two or more of the powers were allied against us? Is it possible that we are to depend always upon the kindly feelings of other nations toward us for our defense? In other words, are we to be our own protectors? Are we to maintain it with dignity and with honor, as the history of our country in the one hundred years gone by unfortunately shows we were not always able to do? We stand to-day in that peculiar position where we have our building substantially half erected, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] would pause in the finishing of it.

We have a navy, in other words, that is too good to throw away and not big enough in any decisive contest to make complete defense in our behalf. Suppose we shall build forty-eight battle ships, as Captain Pillsbury, referred to and quoted by the gentleman from New York, suggests. Is it more than we ought to have to reasonably maintain our honor, our integrity, and our defense? I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it is a different thing to build a navy to carry on aggressive warfare, to nag or to injure other nations, from building a navy in order to defend ourselves. There are two methods in every man's life by which he can defend himself if he is attacked by another. One is to run away; the other is to fight. But there is still a better method than either of those, and that is to be so strong that his enemy will reconsider and not attack him at all.

Those who advocate the upbuilding of a navy insist that it shall not be done for the purpose of interfering with the affairs of other nations, but for the purpose of securing our peace and our defense. Before I pass to the cost of the maintenance of this Navy in proportion to the other expenses of our Government, and in proportion to the wealth of the country, I wish to direct attention to the peculiar position the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has occupied in reference to the naval service. I congratulate him that he has always been the friend of that very excellent corps in the Navy, the chaplains; he has always advocated an increase of that corps in order that the religious training may be well taken care of. He has never failed to lift his voice in favor of the upbuilding of that land portion of the Navy which is situated in the city of New York.

No matter what may be proposed for the purpose of repairing the ships or for building new ships in New York, the gentleman has been a strong, an earnest, effective, and I may say successful advocate thereof. But he has further occupied the position that while that land part of the Navy was to be duly and properly taken care of, the very necessity of which is to repair the ships already built or to build new ships, he has on more than one occasion insisted that the policy of building ships was too expensive; that it was unnecessary and contrary to wisdom and sound sense. I have a square proposition to make to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if he wants to be patriotic. I admit it, and I regret it, that throughout this country there are too many navy-yards already in existence.

This condition of affairs has come about from a whole lot of circumstances. It has come about from the fact that gentlemen, just like the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], have been very earnest and consistent advocates of their own districts and their own local interests. We can very well afford to cut out some of these navy-yards. The object, the purpose of the Navy of the United States is to defend ourselves at sea, not to furnish employment for either our officers or our men on shore, save to the extent that it may be necessary.

The New York Navy-Yard is worth $25,000,000, and that is the amount carried by this bill, substantially, for the increase of the larger, the fighting ships of our Navy. I will join hands with the gentleman to-day, to-morrow, next year, in selling out the New York Navy-Yard for $25,000,000, leaving us without that station.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAYTON. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman would be very glad, would he not, to turn all the naval work into the hands of the private contractors?

Mr. DAYTON. Not a bit of it; not for one moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's conduct as a Member of this House would lead to that inference, because he has always opposed propositions for work in the Government yards for the benefit of work in the private yards.

Mr. DAYTON. I absolutely deny that statement. There has never been a question on the part of him who is speaking, so far as I know, on the part of any member of the Naval Committee as to the necessity of having these yards, and the necessity of having all the repair work done there. There has been and there is to-day a distinct opposition to building our ships in the navy-yards, first, because the evidence has come from the Department conclusively that the work would be done there at a much greater cost, and secondly, because our yards are necessary to carry on the repair work. That is the reason of the position the gentleman now speaking has taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman is not so anxious as I have supposed to turn over the work in the Government yards to the private yards, why is he so willing to dispose of what is universally conceded to be the best-equipped yard in the possession of the Government—not by reason of its location, but because it is in fact the best-equipped yard? Why is the gentleman willing to handicap the Government in its efforts to do its own work?

Mr. DAYTON. I have just this to say in reply to the gentleman: We have on the Atlantic coast a Government yard at Portsmouth, established away back in the very beginning of our history—the yard from which went out Paul Jones, carrying the first American flag that was saluted by a foreign power, that flag being borne by a vessel that went down to the bottom of the sea with that flag flying over the hundred and more dead sailors who sank in achieving their victory under Paul Jones on the Bon Homme Richard.

We have also a yard established at Boston whose existence goes back to the earliest history of the country. The New York yard was established; the League Island Navy-Yard was established. We have also the yard at Norfork. We have also the yard at Charleston, and we have a yard in Louisiana at the mouth of the Mississippi. I want to say to the gentlemen in regard to these yards that, with the possible exception of one, we have room at each of them to build—to expand for the purpose of carrying on our work. The city of Philadelphia gave to the Government of the United States for the purpose of extending that League Island yard between eight and nine hundred acres of ground. At New York there has never been a day or an hour when there has not been a determined effort to take away from us, if they could, or to get us to dispose of, if they possibly could, what little remnant of a yard we have had there; and we have not room to turn around in that yard. Therefore, I say, we can well dispose of that yard, if the gentleman wants to be patriotic, and thereby cut down the expenses of our naval establishment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman referred, I believe, to the Portsmouth yard.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was not the gentleman a member of the Naval Committee at the time when that committee authorized or reported an appropriation of $[illegible] to build a dry dock at that yard and afterwards the Government was compelled to expend a million and a half of dollars in order to have vessels get in that dock?

Mr. DAYTON. I was a member of the House at the time the gentleman refers to, and my recollection is that the appropriation was put upon the bill in the Senate [illegible] and passed by the House and the Senate. I want to say to the gentleman, further, that there is a proposition now pending before the committee, as I remember, to [illegible] to improve the New York yard and [illegible] what little [illegible] we have there available for naval purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman refers to the Charleston yard. Does he not know as a matter of fact that they are just commencing to build a new yard at Charleston and that the report of the Navy, in the hearings this year [illegible] stated that the appropriation was not [illegible] for that yard, that it did not want it, and that [illegible] ing it upon the Department; and if the gentleman from West Virginia is imposed upon by the people who insists he is, why does he not stand up against the insistence of the men who want to spend money in the yards merely for the benefit of their localities? I have never, before the gentleman's [illegible]

Mr. DAYTON. Now, wait a moment——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have never urged a single item [illegible] for the New York yard that year [illegible] and the statement that I have been [illegible] of the Navy merely for local purposes [illegible] facts. The gentleman can not cite one instance where I have advocated the improvement of that yard in opposition [illegible]

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is out of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. DAYTON. I yielded for a question, I said; not a statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the question I was coming to——[Laughter.]

Mr. DAYTON. But now I will answer your question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You did not let me ask it.

Mr. DAYTON. You asked your question and then proceeded to make a defense, which you have a right to do in other time than my own.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is out of order.

Mr. DAYTON. Answering the gentleman's question, the Charleston yard was established by the Congress of the United States by putting upon the annual bill appropriations for that yard. Since it was established there never has been a single appropriation for it put upon our bill by the House committee, and the House committee has been in antagonism to the development of that yard. While that is so, we recognize that the co-ordinate body has a right to its view. It has seen fit to establish that yard and it makes the argument the stronger that, if we are to have a navy-yard at Charleston, some of these other yards ought to be weeded out, and I do not see but what New York is about the best one to let go.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether he is really sincere in trying to do away with the navy-yard at New York, or whether he is simply led into the argument by reason of the persistency of the gentleman from New York and the difference of opinion between the gentleman from New York and others on the Democratic side and the gentleman from West Virginia himself? Because if he really wants to do away with the New York Navy-Yard I think we shall be able to give him some facts later on that he will not like to hear concerning that proposition. There are other yards that would be much better done away with—in fact, any other yard in this country.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to my friend in all frankness and sincerity that my proposition was made to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], absolutely believing that we ought to dispense with some of these yards, and that the New York yard could be dispensed with [illegible] as well as any other. I wanted to test his patriotism and his sincerity in reference to this great wave of economy that has come over him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then you really do not wish to do away with the navy-yard at New York? That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. DAYTON. Well, I say to the gentleman that my judgment is that the navy-yard at New York could be very well dispensed with; but I do not believe it will be dispensed with.

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; and I do not believe that you want to see it done.

Mr. DAYTON. The point I desire to make, Mr. Chairman, is that it is a different thing frequently to build up our Navy on [illegible] what it is to build it up at sea. The earnest purpose [illegible] of the Navy Department and every member of that committee, so far as I know, is to increase the effective naval force at sea. These yards are a necessity. One thing I am absolutely sincere about, and that is that we have too many of them. I am not going to undertake [illegible] shall be published, nor am I going to [illegible] the Naval Committee [illegible] any of them. I know the difficulties [illegible] land; but I want to sound a word of warning [illegible] of new yards on the [illegible]

Now, another thing. Reference has been made to the fact that this increase of the Navy has brought the naval appropriation bill, if I understand the gentleman's statement, up from [illegible] of fourteen years. [illegible] the result of the [illegible] civil war, when the country was overwhelmed [illegible] when its people in many quarters were in want and [illegible]—and I refer to the Southland, from which I [illegible] it and when the [illegible] did not build up the United States Navy.

We had other things to look after. It was necessary for us to look after other interests and features. Instead of building up the Navy, they said [illegible] and for [illegible] Government service. [illegible] about fourteen years ago have we gone to work systematically and earnestly to get ourselves a fleet on the [illegible] would be an honor and a credit to our country and to [illegible] As a result of it, of course, these expenditures have increased; but we have been able to [illegible] without the country ever feeling it, and the remarkable spectacle of affairs exists to-day that the strongest sentiment for the United States Navy is in those sections away from the [illegible] great Northwest, in the mountain countries like my [illegible] gentleman represents, the State of New York.

Now, as to the cost of it, the Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report, has taken occasion to give us some figures touching what this naval expenditure has amounted to.

Mr. Chairman, by your leave, I will ask the Clerk to read for me the passage which I have marked from this report, including the table given by him, in order that members of the committee may see, after all, that while it is a $100,000,000 appropriation bill, it is substantially for the purpose of defending our honor, our country, and our flag and maintaining our peace. I hope gentlemen will listen to the table, so that they may see how small the actual insurance rate is compared with the wealth and the value of this country.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

United States devotes to the support of the Navy by ten year periods in the last century. The whole period shows an average annual expenditure of $0.00123 for each dollar of the valuation.

Years.	Average valuation (computed).	Average naval expenditure.	Percentage.
[illegible]	$[illegible]	$1,686,739	0.00123
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1812	[illegible]	[illegible]	.0141
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.0152
1841-1850	[illegible]	[illegible]	.0129
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1861-1870	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1871-1880	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	81,131,690,950	38,695,164	.00047

[illegible] average, $0.00123.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, absolutely for the commerce [illegible] and the peace of this country we pay less than one-thousandth of 1 per cent upon the actual property valuation of this country. Suppose we take it from the commercial standpoint of view. There is not a single man in this House but what knows that the very essence of defense of our commerce is the Navy of the United States; that it is a hopeless thing to attempt to extend commerce and protect it unless we do it by the strong arm of the Government, exercised through its war ships. Let us look at it from the point of view as an insurance premium upon the commerce of the country. Regarding it as such, the naval expenditures would only be twenty-two thousandths of a cent, and when consideration is taken of the cost of insuring the industrial enterprises of our country the members of the committee can see how small, how insignificant, is this rate.

But, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to another thing. These expenditures are not wastes of money; they are investments. Take any railroad of this great country of ours, just the moment it ceases to make betterments of its property, to make investments in improvements, just that soon that great railroad will get the dry rot, so to speak. So it is with our Navy. The respect, the standing that we have abroad and at home depend upon the energy of our people and depend also upon the good, faithful, and prudent sense of our people. There is not a single battle ship that is built but what is worth dollar for dollar what it cost. There is not one vessel of the battle line of ships of this country that can not be sold to-day for every cent that is invested in it. It is true for a double reason. The first, that under our system and under our careful and prudent management of naval affairs we are building ships as cheap as any nation in the world, we are armoring our ships cheaper than any nation in the world, and, second, we are building better ships than any other nation in the world. That has always been our record.

I referred a while ago to the Portsmouth Navy-Yard. Here is another very interesting historical fact in connection with that yard that appeals to us all. Away back yonder in the Revolutionary times we built the America at that yard. The French fleet was coming to help us. Four of their ships sailed into Boston Harbor, and the Magnifique struck a rock and went to the bottom, and the American Government presented the America to the French Government in lieu of that ship. France already had an Amerique, and so she changed the name of the vessel presented her by the United States, built at this yard, to the Franklin, in honor of that great statesman so popular in France in those days. She went back to France, and in the siege of Toulon this Franklin was partially, but only partially, destroyed.

The French rebuilt it and put it in their service, and the ship was the last one to give up at the battle of the Nile, surrendering at half past 1 o'clock at night, when every other ship had surrendered, and the English took it and made the Canopus out of it, and Fitzgerald, in his life of Admiral Trion, has said that ship, originating in our shipyard, the product of our American laboring men, was the pattern for fifty years for the English battle ships. It has always been so. We have always had a preference in the building of ships. We have got the better workmen, we have got the better material, and as a result of it there is not a single battle ship to-day that is not worth its money, dollar for dollar. There is another thing about it. You can buy the smaller ships, but you can not buy these ships of the fighting line. Everybody is willing to buy, but nobody is willing to sell.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. While the gentleman is explaining the bill I would like to ask him if he will not kindly explain to us why the committee has put in here an appropriation of $1,250,000 for two colliers instead of having them built by the merchant marine and used by the Government when the emergency arises?

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman, very frankly, that provision of the bill did not meet my personal approbation. It came as a recommendation from the Department and as a result of the deliberations of the general board. That recommendation included one battle ship, one armored cruiser, three protected cruisers, two scouts, and two colliers, if I remember rightly.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAYTON. I will yield in a moment; let me finish this statement. That recommendation came in that form. It met the serious disapproval of a number of the members of the Naval Committee. I personally have never believed in building these smaller ships, or at least I have not favored building them until we got our battle ships completed. Fortunately, Admiral Dewey came up the next day (it was understood he was president of the board), and he told us by all manner of means to build battle ships, that these protected cruisers were substantially of an antiquated type. The insistence was so strong that some of these smaller ships should be built that this bill carries the two colliers, which seem to be a necessity for the purpose designed, and some scout ships, and the protected cruisers were cut out and an additional armored cruiser was inserted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like to ask one more question. I am glad you spoke as you did——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will address the Chair.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I did address the Chair, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield?

Mr. DAYTON. I do; certainly, sir.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to ask you further whether, in connection with these colliers, it is intended they shall be simply colliers or will they also carry guns or armament of any kind?

Mr. DAYTON. My understanding is this: I will say to my friend from New York that these colliers are simply to be adjuncts to the fleet in foreign ports, made necessary to convey coal from one port to another, and not to interfere with the merchant marine carrying trade, nor will they carry guns in any way; that they are merely a temporary requirement made necessary for the transportation of coal from one point to another in our foreign service.

Now I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I understood the gentleman to say that our Government had constructed men-of-war at a less price than foreign governments.

Mr. DAYTON. No; I did not say at a less price. I said we got our armor plate for less.

Mr. PERKINS. Not ships as a whole?

Mr. DAYTON. I think not; but I think we construct them as cheaply. If I made the statement too broadly, I would modify that by saying we construct them as cheaply.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman thinks, then, this Government can construct men-of-war as cheaply as foreign governments?

Mr. DAYTON. Very nearly, if not quite so.

Mr. PERKINS. How is it, then, that when it comes to the merchant marine it is claimed that it is impossible to construct them as cheaply here as abroad?

Mr. DAYTON. I am very frank to say that I am not posted in reference to the question of building up the merchant-marine service, and therefore I am not able to answer the gentleman's question. I do know that under the present conditions—how long they will last I can not say—there is such an intense rivalry and competition in the building of the few ships that the American Navy is building that we are getting them at the very lowest possible price, and it is a common understanding that the last letting of the two smaller battle ships authorized by the last bill—that the contractor can not possibly make a dollar out of his contract. That statement has been made and, I believe, has been conceded. The cost of these ships has been, as I say, reduced in this country to the very lowest figures by reason of the competition existing between shipbuilding interests.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to pass on to something else in this bill. I have already taken more time than I expected. All the while we are building these ships it is an absolute necessity for us to look to the personnel of the Navy. Five years ago we passed what is known as "the personnel bill." Time has demonstrated its effectiveness, and, I am also frank to say, some of its weaknesses. I hope the time will come when the personnel will not be gauged by mere arbitrary lines, but when it will be gauged by the absolute number of ships we have.

We have still a great dearth of officers; we still have every year to add to the enlisted force. We need some additional legislation to strengthen the engineering force of the United States Navy. It is never to be forgotten that these great ships of war must be taken care of—must be under the control of the men skilled in mechanics, able to understand the complex machinery that is within them. I admit that the amalgamation of the engineer corps with the line has brought about a condition of affairs where it will be necessary for Congress to make additional provision for the selection of men to fill the places of engineer officers. I hope this may come by a general plan to increase the officers and men in the service, graded according to the number of ships we may have.

A great many other things, it seems to me, ought to begin to occupy and engage the minds of Members of Congress. It seems to me the time has come when the small navies, if you please, under the control of the different Departments in this Government should be concentrated and made a part of the one Navy. I believe the time has come when Congress, for instance, should take the revenue service, the transport service, the Fish Commission service, the light-house service, all these services having to do with the sea, and concentrate them—make one Department responsible for all of our work on the sea.

Mr. Chairman, one other matter: This bill carries with it a provision to build a naval station in the Philippines. I want to say to you that the committee has considered that station and the building of it for several years. In the most earnest and careful way they have gone over the estimates of vast sums that were recommended to be expended in a yard in Subig Bay; they have been cut down and diminished until it seems to me that the members of the committee on both sides, working, as I understand it, in absolute harmony, have brought about a solution of that question that will enable us to defend our interests in the Philippines without its being such an enormous cost as was at first contemplated.

We are building a floating steel dry dock that will be shipped as soon as completed to Manila. It was at first contemplated that it would be placed in Manila Bay. It can well be placed in Subig Bay, and will supply the necessity of building a stationary dry dock at that place at this time. The committee have estimated the appropriation at $800,000 in this bill, and it will enable us to have a proper defense in the Philippine Islands. No matter whether we retain these islands or not, it seems to me it is clear beyond measure that we ought to have a naval station there, and that under any circumstances we will never surrender that right.

I want to call attention to another thing in this bill. It is a remarkable state of affairs that we are drawing into the enlisted force of the Navy from the great Northwest a great majority of our men. We need, and for two years we have been urged by the Department, to establish a naval training station on one of the Great Lakes.

The strongest reasons exist for this. On the occasion when this matter was reported by this committee at the last Congress the provision went out on the point of order. I earnestly hope that this year it will be conceded that this station ought to be established. Let the contest between the different points seeking it be settled on the floor, but let us have this naval station in order that we may better prepare the seamen who come to us from that great section of the country furnishing us with the largest part of our men.

I congratulate the House and I congratulate the committee upon the fact that, in my judgment, in this bill has been presented one with less of discord in it and more of harmony and agreement than any bill that has ever been presented, a bill in the preparation of which all the members of the committee have given earnest and careful attention and hard work. I hope this measure may pass the House as it has been reported. If I had had my way about it, we would have had as large a building programme—that is, five battle ships—as we had last year; but that was not the judgment of the committee, and I am willing to yield to their better judgment. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee, and I yield back to the gentleman the time that he yielded to me. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] consume some of his time now.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, from the fate which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has met for raising his voice against extravagance and reckless expenditure I have no doubt that my contribution to this discussion, although it is directed solely at extravagance in naval appropriations, will be construed as an attack on the Navy. This is by no means what is intended.

We have before us a bill appropriating over $96,000,000 for the Navy, and in addition authorizing an increase in naval plans which involves $29,000,000 more to be appropriated at a future time. It seems to me that a man may favor a navy, may favor its reasonable development, and still denounce this gigantic and excessive appropriation.

It is now more than one hundred years ago that our forefathers established this Republic with the idea that we could improve not only on monarchical forms but on monarchical methods. Ours was to be a government of consent, a government to promote peace, establish justice, and to insure the blessings of liberty to the people. It was to permit them to work out in their own way the natural development of their interests, only possible in times of peace, free from the exactions of exorbitant taxation.

And so, Mr. Chairman, we continued in our course for over a century, a nation of peace, in marked contrast to the war-cursed countries of Europe and the tax-burdened monarchies of the Old World. Suddenly, within the last few years, this rage for militarism and empire, for so-called expansion, has come upon us, and we are beset with that old spirit of conquest and war that has dominated every monarchy. I say it without danger of contradiction from any intelligent source that our Republic, in the use of its national revenues, is more wasteful and extravagant than any empire in the world.

This Republic, founded on the idea of consent, founded on the idea of a government by the people, is becoming the imitator of monarchies. Our forefathers sought to give the people relief from taxation, but our Republic is becoming the most tax-burdened nation of the world. We were formerly taught that as little money as possible should be taken each year by the Government from the income of the business men and from the wages of the laborers. Now we are told that patriotism must be measured by appropriations.

Whether we judge our present national expenditure by our former history or by the national expenditure of other nations, we appear in a most unenviable position.

The great Russian Empire, with two and a half times the area of the United States and nearly twice the population, is the only nation in the world that regularly raises as large an amount of money by national taxation as the United States. The total annual revenue of Russia is about $1,100,000,000. But from that must be deducted nearly $400,000,000 not raised by taxation, but flowing from state monopolies and government property, so that the actual amount which Russia raises by taxation is only about $700,000,000 a year. In proportion to the size and population that is a smaller sum than the United States annually raises by taxation from its citizens.

We can hardly compare our annual expenditures with those of Great Britain at the present time, because Great Britain has only just emerged from a most expensive and destructive war. In times of peace Great Britain's national expenditures are less than those of the United States. Nor will it do to explain this by saying that Great Britain has less population than the United States, because the national expenditures of Great Britain are the expenditures for an empire employing a navy three or four times as large as ours and an army numbering ours at least that proportion. While the United Kingdom is smaller in area and less in population than the United States, it must be remembered that it is the seat of power and expenditure for ten times the population and forty times the area of the United Kingdom. It must also be remembered that Great Britain, as the result of countless wars in the past, has a national debt whose interest charge is $100,000,000 a year greater than the interest charge with which the United States is burdened.

If we compare our national revenues and expenditures with those of France, we find that each nation has total revenues of about $700,000,000 a year. Each nation derives nearly $200,000,000 a year of this revenue from sources which are not due to taxation. In the United States the chief of these is the post-office receipts, land sales, and other miscellaneous income of that sort. In France the following items of revenue are not the production of taxation:

France's revenue not the product of taxation.

	Francs.
From State monopolies	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible] revenues from fees, etc.	[illegible]
Recettes d'ordre	14[illegible]
Total	1,093,175,000

Deducting above revenues from total receipts we have the following showing of net amount derived from national taxation in France:

Gross revenues of France.

	Francs.
Gross receipts	3,[illegible]
Sundry receipts not taxes	1,0[illegible]
Net amount from taxation	2,672,486,000

Equal to $534,497,200.

Nor does the above showing correctly represent the amount of "national" taxation in France, for the reason that the French Government, unlike the Government of the United States, expends a part of the national revenues for local purposes. In this way, of the above $534,000,000, more than $50,000,000 are expended for public schools and other purely local matters which are paid for in America by local taxation. This brings the French total of national taxation down to $483,000,000 a year, which is materially less than that of the United States. And yet France maintains a standing army of over half a million men and a navy larger than ours. France also pays five times as much interest on her public debt every year as we do. This one item alone costs France $120,000,000 a year more than it costs the United States. She has an enormous inheritance of debt from her bloody centuries of war and revolution.

But perhaps the most instructive comparison is the comparison between the expenditures of the United States with those of Germany, that Empire designated by the gentleman who preceded me as a land of "blood and iron." We might expect to find in this Empire of 60,000,000 people, ruled by the iron hand of an ambitious and dominating Kaiser, maintaining a standing army of 600,000 men and a navy ranking third among the naval powers of the world—we might expect to find here, I say, a burden of national tax heavier than in the American Republic. But the fact is otherwise.

Our national taxation exceeds the national taxation of the German Empire by more than $200,000,000 a year. The German Kaiser, with all his ambition and all his lust for empire, inflicts on the German people less taxation than the Government of the United States upon its citizens. Let us look at the figures. The following is a statement which shows the total income of the German Empire for the year 1903. With the classification of those items not due to taxation and those items of revenue not used for national purposes, the table is as follows:

German Government income.
[Expressed in marks.]

	Gross income according to accounts.	Items not taxation.	Items not for national purposes.
Post and telegraph	454,220,100	456,220,100
Railways	87,879,600	87,879,600
Some [illegible]	15,866,200	15,866,200
A[illegible]	41,658,300
Imperial personal income	49,033,800
[illegible]	[illegible]		565,856,200
Customs and internal revenue	810,252,900
Stamp duties	93,098,000
Public printing	7,906,000	7,906,000
Sundry other sources	17,406,600
Total ordinary receipts	2,145,077,700	567,871,900	565,856,200
Extraordinary	199,848,800
Grand total	2,344,926,500
Less items not raised by tax	567,871,900
Balance	1,777,054,600
Less assignments to States	565,856,200
Net national taxation	a1,211,198,400

a Equal to $302,799,600.

The reason for deducting the items of income from post and and telegraph, railways, State banks, and public printing from the gross income is manifest. These items are not taxation. The reason for deducting the items entitled "Matricular contribution of the States" perhaps demands an explanation. The German Empire is composed of a number of States. Under the law of 1879 it was decreed that certain national revenues drawn from all parts of the Empire should be assigned back to the States in proportion to their population. These revenues, as above shown, now amount to 565,856,200 marks per year, and being assigned back to the States and used by them for local taxation, they must of course be deducted from the national expenditures, as they are not a part of the national, but are purely local expenditures.

Without going into detail in the United States, the figures of which are very much more familiar to us, it may be said that our total gross income is $694,621,117. Of this amount the receipts from the post-office, land sales, and other sources should not be counted in national taxation. Deducting these items as we have deducted these items from the German revenues, and converting the whole into American money, we have the following comparative table, showing taxation in Germany and the United States:

	Germany.	United States.
Total gross income	$586,220,095	$694,621,117
Income not national taxation	288,432,095	179,331,411
Amount raised by taxation	302,799,600	515,289,706

It thus appears, as I have stated above, that our national taxation exceeds the national taxation of the German Empire by $212,000,000 a year. Nor can it be said that this is due to the fact that the American Republic has 80,000,000 population, while the German Empire has less than 60,000,000, because the per capita of the taxation is greater in the United States than it is in Germany, and if we equalize the populations we would still be taxing ourselves $85,000,000 a year more than the Germans tax themselves.

Now, what becomes of the vast amount of money which we raise by national taxation in the United States?

We know that it is rushed through here in appropriations each year that this House knows practically nothing about. A few appropriation committees meet in their committee rooms, experts from the Government come to them with figures, and, as a rule, it is those experts employed by the various Departments who are legislating our national appropriations and wasting this money.

More than two dollars out of every five that we now raise in national taxation go for purposes of war—for our Army and our Navy. This time of profound peace is a time of enormous taxation. Our Army and our Navy are absorbing more than two dollars out of every five that you raise from the people by taxation.

The gentleman who just preceded me, and who pleads so eloquently for the contractors who build our ships and furnish the armor, stated that the wealth of this country is so enormous that our national expenditures are insignificant. But he forgets, Mr. Chairman, that the wealth of this country does not contribute these millions of dollars which go to make up this enormous amount of money that we gather in from the people every year. The wealth of the country does not pay that money. We do not tax wealth; in raising our national revenues we merely tax consumption, and, plainly speaking, such taxation is practically nothing but a per capita tax on the population of the United States. The head of every family pays that tax not only for himself and his wife, but for his children. The daily living expenses of every man, woman, and child are increased by the manner in which we raise this money. Our system of indirect taxation increases the cost of food, clothing, and of most of the other necessaries of life. If the wealth of the country were contributing to these enormous expenditures which go into armor plate and war ships I think we would hear more voices raised here in this House for economy and limited expenditure. The fact is that the money is taken from the masses of the people, regardless of their ability to pay, and it is turned over to armor trusts, beef trusts, railroads, and shipbuilding trusts. These and other trusts and great corporations are the ones who get the great chunks out of these gigantic annual appropriations, and we all know it.

On the floor of this House when the bill was before us I asked the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs why our Army cost so much more than the armies of Europe in proportion to size. He replied that it was because we paid our men more. Well, I began to look over the bill, and I found that the men received about $10,000,000, but that the greatest item in that military appropriation bill of $75,000,000 was over $14,000,000 for "transportation." Of course our transportation companies—the ship companies, and the railroad companies—are in favor of a great army appropriation bill, and of course all the interests that are allied to them are in favor of it. When we turn to this naval bill here, toward the end of it, we find this short item with this enormous expenditure:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized, $[illegible]

What does this mean? It is nothing more nor less than an appropriation of those millions of money for two great armor-plate factories of the United States. They are owned and controlled by the same men, they unite and conspire every time they make a contract with the Government to bid the same price, and we all know it.

In recent litigation in New York City Mr. Schwab, former president of the steel trust and dominant factor in the shipbuilding trust, gave this sworn testimony, which I clip from the New York World:

Q. Were the Carnegie Company and the Bethlehem Company the only two companies that manufactured armor plate?—A. Yes.

Q. After the Government fixed the maximum price for bids, did they continue to ask for bids?—A. I think so, formerly.

Q. They all require bids, don't they?—A. In a sense, yes; they require proposals.

Q. Competing proposals under the maximum price?—A. Not necessarily. It was understood by the Government in Washington, the Navy Department, that all orders should be divided. I understand from the Secretary of the Navy, Secretary Herbert and Secretary Whitney, as well as the Chief of Ordnance.

Q. Don't you know the Government fixed a figure beyond which it would not accept proposals and then asked proposals from these two companies?—A. Yes, I know that.

Q. Prior to 1889?—A. I do know the Government asked the Carnegie people and the Bethlehem people to build new works, and yet they remembered that the Government was the only customer for this armor that these companies would have, and it was understood that the work was to be divided between the two.

Q. That without reference to price?—A. The price to be agreed upon. The first contract, I believe, was the highest.

Q. Don't you know they were expected to be considered not under the same ownership, or not competing ownership?—A. I don't know that.

Q. Do you mean to say the Government contemplated their being owned by the same individual—during the time the two were in existence don't you know the Government expected those two companies to compete for the work—I know the Government did not. They were working at the same price by arrangement between the Government and the manufacturer.

We know that this armor-plate appropriation in this bill, if it passes, is an authority to the Secretary of the Navy to pay these millions of dollars to the Carnegie steel plant and the Bethlehem steel plant for armor at their own price. We know that these plants do not compete with each other. We know that they have combined in an unlawful conspiracy. We know that they are parts of a trust declared illegal. We know they will charge this Government over $[illegible] a ton for armor plate. We know by the sworn testimony of Government officers published in Senate report of the Fifty-fourth Congress that the cost of manufacturing armor plate at these plants is about $[illegible] per ton. We know by the authoritative report of the former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Herbert, that both the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, year after year, have conspired to charge the Government a certain price for armor which has enabled them, after paying large dividends every year, to pay for their plants every five years in addition. We know that when Mr. Schwab, president of the steel trust, and Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, his powerful backer, put the Bethlehem Steel Company into the stockjobbing trust its enormous capitalization was based not so much on its physical plant as upon its enormous earning capacity, by reason of these fat contracts for Government armor at $[illegible] a ton.

Since 1887 the Government of the United States has contracted for some 95,000 tons of armor at a cost of $47,[illegible], and, practically speaking, this vast amount of money has all gone into the treasuries of the two great conspirators who are so anxious to have the United States continue its policy of unlimited navy expenditures.

The following is a list of all armor contracted for and the cost of the same:

It seems to me that it is about time for the Government of the United States to build its own armor plant. Year after year this Congress has appropriated millions of dollars for armor and inserted a proviso that the Secretary of the Navy "might" build an armor plant if unable to make satisfactory contracts with the armor factories. Unfortunately for the people the Secretary of the Navy seems to be easily satisfied. He knows the armor factories are in collusion and conspiracy. He knows they are controlled by the same people. He knows that these combinations are unlawful. He knows from the testimony of naval officers that the Government can manufacture its armor much cheaper than the price it pays. He knows that we pay for these armor plants every five years besides giving them an enormous profit on their capital, and yet he has never seen fit to start an armor plant with the money which Congress has appropriated.

I give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the present bill to strike out that part of the proviso which leaves the construction of a Government armor plant "discretionary" with the Secretary of the Navy. I believe that this Congress should direct as well as authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of an armor plant for the American people. I have here on my desk a great volume called "The Report of the Armor Factory Board," with many valuable technical documents, submitted to the Fifty-fifth Congress and showing, with a great deal of elaboration and detail, that an armor-plate factory could be built for $4,000,000 and armor manufactured at a cost of $300 instead of $450 a ton, which we are now paying to the trusts.

When I offer that amendment I have no doubt many gentlemen on the other side, who think we are against a navy because we are opposed to extravagance, will stand in their places and oppose the establishment of an armor plant for the American people. This has been the case at former sessions, and I think it will be so again. The wealthy exploiters and owners of these armor plants and their associates, who dominate the great trusts and conspiracies that fatten on these appropriations, will make most strenuous efforts to smother such an amendment, and I fear they will succeed.

The Presidential election is at hand, and party leaders in need of campaign funds will no doubt regard the proprietors of these armor plants as promising subjects for campaign contributions as long as they have in hand or in prospect these enormous contracts.

I have said that these armor plants were parts of a trust, and we all know that Congress legislated against trusts. It has placed a great fund in the hands of the Attorney-General—some $[illegible]—to be used in destroying trusts, and after a year or two of inaction the Attorney-General has only found use for $25,000 of this money.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman tell us how many of the rascals have been convicted up to date?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, it would not take very long to read the list; there is not one.

Mr. THAYER. Outside of the investigations going on in this city of Machen and his compeers, are there any being prosecuted anywhere in the country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not that I know of. I think there are not. Mr. Chairman, the very Government upon whose Congress has devolved the duty of prosecuting these trusts is deliberately making contracts with these same trusts to pay them millions of the people's money. The fact is that this Government knows, this Administration knows, because its officers have testified to it before the Naval Committees, that these profits are exorbitant. This Administration knows these factories are in conspiracy and knows that they are outlaws, but it continues to turn over big appropriations to them and refuses to build an armor plant to be owned by the nation.

Gentlemen have said that the Monroe doctrine is no stronger than our American Navy. That strikes me as a most ridiculous proposition. No gun has ever been fired in defense of the Monroe doctrine. That is a naked fact for you. When the Monroe doctrine was promulgated in 1820 we had little or no Navy, and all down through the time when the United States had found it necessary to reiterate that doctrine it has been a question by the nations of the world. The Monroe doctrine was never endangered except by one thing, and that by the policy of aggression by the United States. The United States can not consistently maintain and defend the Monroe doctrine that European nations shall keep out of this hemisphere, while at the same time we as a Republic are asserting our rights to cross the ocean with our conquests of empire.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman very correctly says that we have never shot a gun in defense of the Monroe doctrine, but have we not ourselves shot through the Monroe doctrine by going to the other side of the world?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, Mr. Chairman, that correction will properly stand as part of the record. We have ourselves endangered the Monroe doctrine, and that is the only danger that the Monroe doctrine is likely to encounter. Gentlemen will remember the fact, and the eloquent gentleman from New York called attention to it yesterday, that in 1895, when there was a Democratic President, his Secretary, Richard Olney, one of the ablest Cabinet officers of modern times, wrote his famous dispatch to the Government of Great Britain calling attention to the Monroe doctrine and warning her to keep hands off Venezuela. Gentlemen will remember that at that time the strength of the American Navy, as compared with the strength of the English navy, was far more insignificant than it is at the present time. Yet, was there any question? Was there any danger at that time? In the face of that bold announcement from this side Great Britain, the first naval power in the world, with four times the number of ships and five times the number of guns that we had, bowed to the Monroe doctrine and again acknowledged it by consenting to arbitration with helpless Venezuela.

Mr. GILBERT. May I remind the gentleman of the fact that even after the war of 1812 was declared Commodore Perry took some forty carpenters and went over to Lake Erie and built a navy that destroyed the fleet of England in 1813? We did not send any navy until after the war begun. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a great deal of truth in that statement, Mr. Chairman, and as another instance of the same thing, the greatest naval conflict of the civil war—the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac—sustains the claim that American genius—and at this time it was American genius on both sides of the Mason and Dixon line—can construct novel and effective means of naval warfare on short notice.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am not arguing against a great navy. I am only arguing against extravagant recklessness—wild, unlimited expenditures for the Navy and Army for the benefit of favorite contractors.

The growth of these war expenditures has been simply prodigious in twenty years.

Do gentlemen ever stop to think that we may deplete if not exhaust the resources of a nation in the time of peace by excessive preparations for war? We have heard of the man who, in preparing to leap a ditch, took such a long running start that he used up his strength before he reached the ditch and fell into it. Nations have done the same thing with war preparations.

Notice the gigantic growth of war expenditures in time of peace. In 1884 our total army and naval appropriations were $[illegible], They were $[illegible] the next year; they were $[illegible] the next year, and so they ran along year by year; but now, with the spirit of war and imperialism upon us, our combined army and navy appropriations practically equal those of Germany or France. Germany, France, and the United States each expend for army and navy about $215,000,000 a year. If we must have a great navy, still we must have a limit to the Navy. A man may favor marriage is a great institution; but because he is in favor of matrimony he is not necessarily in favor of bigamy or polygamy. There is a limit to all good things, and there should be a limit to the Navy. [Laughter and applause.]

I have compared the national expenditure of the United States with the national expenditure of the other great nations of the world. Now let us compare, in tabulated form, the expenditure of our Army and Navy in the United States at the present time with twenty years ago. The following tabulated statement shows the enormous growth:

Army and Navy expenditures.

Year.	Army.	Navy.	Total.
1884	$39,429,021	[illegible]	[illegible]
1885	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

1903	118,619,520	82,[illegible]	[illegible]

The expenditure for the present year will be materially greater than the expenditure for 1903, above given.

Notwithstanding this enormous growth in the past, the present bill not only appropriates over $96,000,000, which is $14,000,000 more than we appropriated last year, but this bill also contains the provision for a programme to construct another battle ship, two more first-class armored cruisers, and other vessels, to cost, with their equipment, in round figures, $30,000,000. In the name of reason, where is the limit to be drawn? This Republic already has under construction a greater tonnage of new vessels than Germany and France combined. When this construction already authorized is finished, the Navy of the United States will have a greater tonnage than that of Germany and almost as much as France. Yet our Committee on Naval Affairs proposes to add still another expensive naval programme, although it is well known that the revenues of the United States will next year fall short of the income from all sources.

The following table shows the strength of the navies of the four great countries of the world, both present and prospective, revealing the fact that we are making an increase of our Navy under present laws equal to the increase being made by Germany and France combined:

Strength of navies, present and prospective.

Country.	Men	Tonnage.	Tonnage in construction.	Total future tonnage.
Great Britain	114,000	1,546,000	351,000	1,897,000
Germany	[illegible]	588,000	[illegible]	[illegible]
France	44,302	558,000	180,000	[illegible]
United States	81,000	295,000	322,000	616,000

The Republic of the United States, by its determination to pile on naval appropriations, will simply inspire and provoke other nations to do the same.

The following table of naval expenditures for four years of four great countries of the world shows how rapidly our expenditures have increased, compared with those of other nations, and the mad race is only just begun:

Naval expenditures.

	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.
Great Britain	$130,000,000	$140,000,000	$155,000,000	$155,850,000
France	74,[illegible]	[illegible]	62,419,000	[illegible]
Germany	4[illegible]	[illegible]	54,[illegible]	[illegible]
United States	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	82,[illegible]

Amount proposed by new bill, $96,[illegible].

Great Britain may be excused for her ambition to have a navy twice the size of any other navy in the world. With such vast and scattered possessions to protect, she has legitimate need of one. The United States has no such need. I have said that the wealth of the country was not paying these enormous taxes which we are squandering in a reckless way. On a future occasion I hope to make a few remarks, which I had expected to include at the present time, on the income tax. Unless we incorporate an income tax as a part of the financial system of this nation wealth will not pay its proper portion of the burdens of our National Government. Now they are borne by the masses without regard to ability.

Other nations of the world reach the wealth of the country in their national taxation. France reaches it by a system of direct taxes in various ways. Great Britain reaches it by an income tax, which yields over $160,000,000 a year. Russia reaches it and to some extent Germany reaches it, but the United States inflicts its whole burden of national taxation upon consumption, which is, as I have said above, little different from a per capita tax of every man, woman, and child in the United States, regardless of ability to pay. The brilliant leader of the Democratic side of this House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], has introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to enable Congress to levy an income tax in raising national revenues. It might be an interesting discussion, Mr. Chairman, to consider whether we should amend the Constitution in order to get an income tax or enact another bill in the hope of securing a favorable decision from the Supreme Court, but we should secure the income tax in some way. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes' time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, as well as I understand the sentiment of this side of the Chamber and that of the people whom I have the honor to represent on this floor, they are not opposed to a strong American navy, a navy strong enough to protect the American flag from insult and injury wherever it may float and strong enough to protect American interests wherever they may be [applause]; but I am confident that in this bill, which both sides of this House have practically agreed is a necessity, there is a considerable increase over what would be otherwise necessary, because of the conditions with which we are now confronted. I believe it is undoubtedly true that but for the possession and retention of the Philippine Islands this large appropriation would not be necessary.

It is, indeed, an important fact, worthy of note, of significance to the American people, and pregnant with deep meaning, that in a time of profound peace we are about to make the second largest appropriation ever made for the American Navy, this appropriation only having been exceeded in amount by the appropriation for the year 1865. Now, without making war on the bill, because I believe that under present conditions it is a necessity to have a strong navy, I wish to impress upon the Members of this House, so far as I can, and upon the people of this country why it is necessary for us to have so strong a navy and to spend so much money. In a recent hearing, Mr. Chairman, before the Committee on Naval Affairs Admiral Dewey gave the true explanation of why the Navy must necessarily be so large. In the first place, he said that it is impossible to fortify Manila Bay, and therefore we are obliged to have a strong navy in the Philippine Islands. Again, he said, and I read from the report of his remarks before the committee, on page 545, where he uses these words:

Some people think in the event of war we had better sell all of them [ships] [that is, the battle ships] and have them all together, and not scattered. That is a question on which a good deal can be said on both sides. My answer to that is I would have enough battle ships to have a good, strong fleet here and one strong enough there also. It might save a war.

In other words, the Admiral of the American Navy, with the truth and candor for which he is noted, has said that we must, as long as we retain the Philippine Islands, have a navy that is not only strong enough to defend us at home, but to defend that exposed and perilous position out there. It means a navy nearly, if not quite, twice as strong as would otherwise be needed.

Mr. Chairman, the retention of the Philippine Islands is not the fault of the party that I represent and for which I am attempting to speak on this floor.

In its last national platform it declared in language unmistakable the true doctrine about these distant insular possessions. I read from the Democratic platform of 1900:

The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our institutions [illegible] we can not long maintain our form of government if we should attempt to incorporate into our population the Filipinos, who have been taught to believe that they are capable of self-government, and who have proved themselves able to govern themselves, and who, if they are not given the chance, will be a menace to the peace and good government of the Pacific Ocean, and a constant source of danger to our peace and good relations with the great nations of Europe and Asia. We believe that the Philippines should be given their independence at the earliest practicable moment consistent with their preparation for self-government, and we believe that such a course will be in the highest degree beneficial to the people of the Philippine Islands and to the interests and reputation of the American people. We believe that the Philippines should be given a government modeled after the government established by the people of the United States for the benefit of themselves and their posterity, and we believe that such a government should be established by the Filipinos under the protection of the United States, until such time as the islands may be able to care for themselves, and we believe that such a form of government will be productive of the greatest good to the people of the Philippine Islands, and will be in harmony with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States. We believe that the Philippines should be given to the people who reside therein as soon as a government can be established therein which will discharge the obligations of the United States to the inhabitants of the islands and to the civilized nations of the world, and we believe that such a government can be established and maintained in the Philippine Islands in the near future if the United States will adopt a policy with reference thereto similar to that which it has adopted with reference to the Island of Cuba.

Again, Mr. Chairman, from that same platform:

We reiterate the declaration made by the Democratic party in its platform of 1896, that the Government of the United States has no right to deprive the people of the Philippine Islands of the blessings of liberty and self-government guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and we denounce the action of the President in attempting to deprive the people of the Philippine Islands of the blessings of liberty and self-government guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States as a violation of the principles upon which our own government rests and a violation of the principles of government upon which he based his claim to office.

We believe that the Government of the Philippine Islands should be administered for the benefit of the people thereof, and we believe that the people of the Philippine Islands are capable of self-government, and we believe that they should be given the same form of government and the same measure of liberty and self-government which we ourselves enjoy, and we believe that the Government of the Philippine Islands should be administered in the interest the square efforts of the educated Filipinos who are with us to-day in building up a civil government. For those reasons I think that such a promise as that would be a great mistake.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the original report of the Philippine Commission, is it not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is from the testimony of Governor Taft, given in this city a year ago.

Mr. HARDWICK. What is the date of the report of the Schurman Commission from which you read?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not the date of the report here. The extract which I read is in a speech which I delivered in the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. The report was made during the Spanish-American war, was it not, or right about that time?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was when that Commission was over there—about four years ago.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, just one other question. The gentleman, then, is opposed to any declaration [illegible]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Wait a moment. The testimony of Governor Taft was given less than a year ago here in the Capitol of the United States to a committee of Congress.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the gentleman familiar with the last state paper of Mr. Schurman on this question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know that the gentleman has had express views upon that subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not see why gentlemen should applaud that statement.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Because of their enthusiasm.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It reminds me of an observation of Lincoln in one of his novels. He says that there are some people who contend that they will applaud a statement of a speaker whether they believe it or not. That was true of many of the French newspapers, and seems to be true of some of our friends on the other side.

When interrupted by the applause over there, I was about to remark that I prefer the views of Professor Schurman, associated and sustained by Dewey and General Otis, Denby, and Worcester, many while he and they were at the very scene of conflict, meeting witnesses by the scores and hundreds from day to day, and [illegible] with all the facts, [illegible] any statement made now for any purpose by a single man of that Commission in contradiction of some of these views.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just one moment, and then I will yield. Mr. Buencamino, a Filipino, was indeed by getting upon the stand, but who nevertheless was one of the leading Revolutionists of Aguinaldo, and associated with him in the Filipino government, in his testimony before the Committee on Insular Affairs a year ago said:

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

It seems incredible, but it is true, that in spite of our growth in [illegible] years from 3,000,000 of people to [illegible] and weakest of the nations to the [illegible] of nations of the earth, we have at this [illegible]

[illegible] Congress was a tariff bill, with a provision [illegible] for the protection of American [illegible]

A few days later another law was enacted, providing for from 30 to 50 cents a ton as tonnage duties on foreign vessels entering our ports, as against only 6 cents a ton for American built vessels. In 1793 a law was enacted, which is still in force, confining our coastwise trade to American vessels.

At this point I would ask permission to embody an article from the Boston Transcript of January 28, 1904, and also one of January 30, 1904, for a dual purpose—first, to show that even high Republican officials recognize that some means should be adopted to [illegible] our merchant marine [illegible] time to announce its will is opportune:

[illegible] laws to the [illegible] assert that these laws are in fact now self-[illegible] have been framed and passed in the interest [illegible] a few owners, while it was [illegible] ure for which Mr. Marvin's pen is enlisted, the merchants and freighters, who were eloquent in their objections, were either owners or charterers of foreign ships. Well, are such merchants guilty in that ownership of any crime?

Surely to eliminate these American citizens and merchants, who are conducting American commerce for American consumers of foreign products, would be to remove about all that there is of American commerce except the goods, the ports themselves, and the custom-houses. At the Senate hearing of the 21st instant of remonstrants against the application of our coastwise laws to the Philippine trade appeared, too, the same attempt to attach opprobrium to reputable American merchants who [illegible] foreign [illegible] to American [illegible] or otherwise employ foreign [illegible] to be low-[illegible] some Senators that [illegible] a century in the Philippines are not to be [illegible] as [illegible] but that American merchants who [illegible] business with them are to be classed as foreign shipping houses, and [illegible] Secretary Root, it appears, desires to employ foreign shipping when necessary, as in duty bound, in the public interest.

EX-GOVERNOR TAFT AND THE PHILIPPINES.

In response to the report of the hearings by the collector of customs for the Philippine Islands to [illegible] has reviewed the proposed amendment of our commerce with the Philippines by extending our coastwise laws to American vessels, viz:

[illegible] If there was an advocacy of a sound policy for the Government when this country was carrying 90 per cent of its imports and 77 per cent of its exports, it should appeal to us in thunder tones in the face of our recent naval experiences—our added dangers at a period when we are carrying less than 9 per cent of our imports and our exports.

The only factor in the solution of this is labor, and would be solved by a percentage rebate of tariff on imports carried by American-built and American-manned ships sufficient for them to compete, if necessary, to the limit of rebate permitted by the Dingley tariff.

To work out this problem it might be necessary to prescribe a restricted and limited registry of foreign-built and partially foreign-manned ships for a time. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, we have listened this afternoon to two political speeches from the other side. They have both been on the subject of anti-imperialism and have taken decided ground against the retention of the Philippines. I have no thought of inflicting a speech upon the committee, but one thing occurs to me, and it seems significant. It looks as though our friends on the other side were following the advice that has been given them and were "getting together."

Within the last few days ex-President Cleveland has issued a carefully prepared magazine article in which his views are given on current questions, and especially political questions. The New York Sun of to-day and the Chicago Tribune of yesterday interpret his remarks as putting himself in the attitude of a receptive candidate for the Presidency, and they gather from his remarks [illegible] are to be the two cardinal tenets of his political platform on which he would accept a nomination.

Now, I congratulate the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] that they have caught on so quickly to-day, and are following the principle laid down by their distinguished chieftain, who, it seems, is a receptive candidate for the Presidency, and are giving us to-day anti-Philippine speeches.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have been doing that ever since you have been holding the Philippines.

Mr. BATES. Well, but we have not had one of those speeches for some time. You have often rated us upon the Rialto for having taken them, but now we are found fault with because we do not immediately let them go and make a cowardly surrender. [illegible] I desire, with the permission of the committee, to read a few sentences from an article in the Chicago Tribune of yesterday:

POLICY AS TO HAWAII WILL FIT PANAMA

One of the first things done by Mr. Cleveland at the beginning of his second [illegible] feature of the second Cleveland Ad- [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BATES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. THAYER. What is there in that which you have read that you do not subscribe to?

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts ask what there is in that which I have read that I do not subscribe to?

Mr. THAYER. Except dealing gently with the trusts. Of course you do not subscribe to that. You and your party have a record of being rank in your treatment of the trusts and over anxious to enact drastic measures to curb them; but, outside of that one proposition, what is there in that which you do not subscribe to?

Mr. BATES. Speaking of the trusts, I would like to ask the gentleman in turn what his party and the President of his party ever did in the way of dealing with the trusts?

Mr. THAYER. They never had an opportunity. You gobbled the whole thing, and have stood guard against every bill we have introduced, and have seen to it that nothing harmful to the [illegible] see the light of day.

[illegible] will tell you what they did. To make the Sherman Act, of which you say Mr. S[illegible] was the author, but was not any such thing. History will [illegible] it is correctly written.

[illegible] to my question by the [illegible] he will kindly give it. What [illegible] at you [illegible] man he [illegible] exactly what I [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. I heard every word you read, and I su[illegible]

[illegible] I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [illegible] which strikes at the protective features of the tariff [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. There is not a word in what you have read that [illegible]

Mr. BATES. It states distinctly that the tariff bill passed in this House formulated by Professor Wilson was a [illegible] toward free trade, and we are certainly on record in every vote and in every [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Do you think the Wilson bill was a radical step toward free trade?

Mr. BATES. Why, as it passed the House it was; before the several hundred Senate amendments were added [illegible] It came back [illegible] could scarcely recognize it. It was the House measure with the [illegible] reflected the [illegible] of Grover Cleveland. It removed all [illegible] from wool, coal, iron, and lumber; and stripped all protection [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Then you subscribe to that as true, don't you—that [illegible]

Mr. BATES. I subscribe to the correctness of the statement which I have just read. I believe it [illegible] thoroughly [illegible] to the [illegible] the very last election, in a [illegible] injustice and an unfair [illegible] the [illegible] our people." Tariff reform with him [illegible] ishment that any [illegible] that came to this land when [illegible] can stand up and even by [illegible] suggestion [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Now, I [illegible] gentleman again, what is there in [illegible] you have read you object to except [illegible] trusts?"

Mr. BATES. I object to a tariff bill which is as radical as the one [illegible] in [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. [illegible] free trade, or that his statement [illegible] trade, or that free trade would follow. He simply favors a change in the tariff [illegible] [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. No, sir, I do not, it will bring injury and ruin to the industries of this country or throw 3,000,000 workingmen and toilers of this land out of employment.

Mr. THAYER. I am glad to put one Republican on record.

Mr. BATES. I am delighted that the gentleman is satisfied with my answer. Tariff inequalities must be adjusted when occasion really requires, and will be; but a wholesale slaughter of the very principle of protection will only invite disaster, as has always occurred when tariff schedules have been lowered.

Mr. THAYER. I am glad to hear one honest Republican brave enough to go on record that he proposes to "stand pat" on everything.

Mr. BATES. I did not say that, nor did I rise to go into any elaborate tariff discussion. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." The gentleman from Massachusetts, a distinguished scholar, known and respected in the State of Massachusetts, or he would not occupy a seat on this floor from a Republican district, knows full well that a tariff bill is a [illegible] measure, just as the Federal Constitution was adopted as a compromise measure. We call that a sacred instrument, and gentlemen on his side of the Chamber are apt to swear by it and think that it is [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. A sort of golden idol, to be worshiped but not to be touched.

Mr. BATES. A "golden idol," that is the word. Yet it was a hotch potch when it was formed, and a compromise measure from the beginning to the end.

Mr. BURLESON. You think it ought not to be observed?

Mr. BATES. No; not that. I only used it as an illustration of how constitutions and far-reaching laws ever come to be formed at all or put into operation. A tariff law can not be formulated, much less enacted, that will in all its features entirely suit every [illegible] or every section of this land. It is not in the nature of things that this could be. It must be viewed as a whole, and [illegible] a narrow, prejudiced standpoint. There must be considered the greatest good for the greatest number, the [illegible] prosperity, and the content- [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, if he will allow me.

Mr. BATES. Just a moment. I understand a colloquy took place [illegible] he would be [illegible] and [illegible] Massachusetts. You [illegible] ox is [illegible]

[illegible] control the Executive, the Senate, [illegible]? If you are ever going to do it, why not do it now, un[illegible] fear [illegible] you fear those affected will not allow you to fly [illegible] it out of them.

Mr. BATES. We have been rated here severely this afternoon [illegible] the money to run [illegible] must come from somewhere? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THAYER. I would take it off some things and add to it on others.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ask him on what others.

Mr. BATES. Were you not sent here as a protectionist?

Mr. THAYER. [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would be willing for you to tell what duties you would [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. It would take a long time to tell on what I would [illegible] and I would rather begin at that end. I [illegible] gentleman from Ohio, What duties would you [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. BATES. Just one further word to my friend from Massachusetts. I want to ask him if he was not sent here as a protectionist Democrat, and that that [illegible] and the [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. I want, in answer to that, to say to my friend [illegible] that I never sailed under false colors since I knew the difference between right and wrong.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman now answer my question? I have answered his.

Mr. THAYER. Now, let me answer the gentleman more fully. I was not sent here by reason of particular views I had on any subject, but [illegible] in Massachusetts felt they could trust me to do a thing I thought was right on all questions. I did not come here with any [illegible] on me, but I judge from what I have read and heard from some of you over there you can not say this much.

The people of my district know just where I stand on the tariff question, and let me say to you that most of the protectionists, even, are with me and fully in accord with my views on that subject. I am in favor of national protection, but [illegible] tion, and there is a world wide difference between these two positions. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BATES. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. THAYER. I have not changed my mind, either, from anything I have heard or seen here. And, as a rational protectionist, I want to tell you that you can not fool all the people all the time, and I want to tell the Republican party that this is the accepted time and this is their day of salvation, and if they do not now make any attempt to change these schedules, so curiously [illegible] by all classes and all people except the barren [illegible] party will be put in power that will. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. BATES. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that he is in favor of any law enacted by Congress for protection purposes?

Mr. THAYER. Of no [illegible] in it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then you are not in favor of protection, are you?

Mr. THAYER. I am in favor of protection, but I am not in favor of any law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then is protection unconstitutional, as your party declared in its platform a few years ago?

Mr. THAYER. I do not know what the party declared in its platform in relation to that matter a few years ago, or what your party declared in its platform a few years ago relative to bimetallism and the silver question. I am speaking for myself. I believe in rational protection, and I am very clear that there should be radical changes in the present schedules.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You are a Republican.

Mr. THAYER. You were never more mistaken in your life. You politicians and statesmen seem to deceive yourselves with the belief that the only question that divides the two great parties is the tariff question. You are shortsighted. I am not a Republican never was, and, God helping me, never will be. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You do not belong over there.

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BATES) [illegible].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (to Mr. THAYER). You are lost, anyway.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I [illegible] the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (to Mr. THAYER). You are in awful luck.

Mr. BATES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has interrogated me, if he has ever in recent years stood on a Democratic national platform.

Mr. THAYER. I usually stand on my own, and the people up my way know it is a broad and honest one.

Mr. BATES. Yes, I thought so.

Mr. THAYER. I do not second anybody's motion very much. A man who can second a motion will usually dare not make one.

Mr. BATES. Now, I desire to read one other extract from the article in yesterday's Chicago Tribune:

During the closing years of his Administration Mr. Cleveland took a firm stand [illegible] Democratic [illegible] were [illegible] Senators of corporate [illegible] New York [illegible] Wall street [illegible] would [illegible] to the [illegible] were [illegible] with [illegible] Lamont and Whitney.

Now [illegible] Mr. Cleveland [illegible] but it was not [illegible] that he would [illegible] was [illegible] the prosperity of the country was [illegible] the Republican [illegible].

I therefore, Mr. Chairman, congratulate the gentlemen on the other side, who have so quickly [illegible] but by ex-President Cleveland in his [illegible] as taken up and commented upon and construed by the leading journals of the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an interrogatory?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BATES. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You spoke of Mr. Cleveland issuing certain bonds during his Administration. I will ask you if he did not issue bonds at the beginning of his last Administration for which President Harrison and Mr. Secretary Foster had ordered bond plates to issue when they turned over a bankrupt Treasury to Mr. Cleveland?

Mr. BATES. I have heard that discussed on the floor of this House so often—

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did he not do it?

Mr. BATES. That is denied.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that the bond plates had been ordered?

Mr. BATES. I have heard it discussed pro and con upon this floor ad nauseam.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you deny the fact?

Mr. BATES. I say it is denied, and that neither you nor I are in a position to state authoritatively yes or no on that proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will state to you that the order was issued to have the bond plates made, and Cleveland had to issue the bonds that your Republican Administration forced him to issue by turning over to him a bankrupt Treasury.

Mr. BATES. Oh, the gentleman is asking and answering the question; I hope he is satisfied.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BATES. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But he did that which was never done by Secretary Foster or President Harrison, and that is, the Cleveland Administration sold United States bonds by private secret sale at 104 and a fraction when they were worth 111 in the open market, as was demonstrated by the second sale when forced to do so by Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And there is not an honest Democrat in the United States who does not condemn that, and I am one of those who condemn it.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, we were precipitated into the war with Spain by the logic of events and the almost unanimous voice of the whole people. The Democratic party were the loudest in their calls for war. The bill voting the President $50,000,000 for national equipment passed in this House unanimously. The North and the South, the blue and the gray, Democrat and Republican, shared alike in the glories of that war. All were thrilled by Dewey's victory, and at the fighting qualities of Schley and Sampson, and Roosevelt of New York, and Wheeler of Alabama. Colonel Bryan left his regiment and came to Washington to urge Democratic Senators to favor the ratification of the treaty of Paris, and now, because this Administration is standing consistently and holding the advantages gained by that treaty, men on this floor to-day find fault and urge that the Philippines be given up.

If our friends are men, manly men and true Americans, as they shared in the glories of that war let them also share the responsibilities which have arisen from the issues of that war and the treaty of peace which concluded it. The Philippines are ours by conquest and treaty, and we have the same right to restore order there and keep order there as Andrew Jackson had to subdue outbreaks in Florida after we acquired it in 1821. It took the fighting qualities of Andrew Jackson for twenty-one years to subdue them, and yet I presume if our friends on the other side had lived then they would have counseled turning over the Territory of Florida to Osceola, the Aguinaldo of the Seminoles.

Mr. Chairman, I again congratulate the gentlemen on the other side in apparently getting together, and in following so quickly the suggestion made by their great and good friend, Grover Cleveland, who put himself upon record in his last Administration by [illegible] giving up Hawaii to Queen Lil, and now favors giving back the island of Luzon to Aguinaldo. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I have very little excuse for rising at this time to address the committee except that it seems to me proper that you should hear from the Cherokee Strip. [Laughter.] Amidst all the noise and outbreaks that have taken place on this side of the House, I wish to assure you that some of us are still on the reservation. [Laughter.] I do not hope at this time to say anything that can greatly enlighten this committee. I do not have any such ambition. I simply presume to occupy a very few minutes for the purpose of expressing a few ideas of a novice in Congress. I shall express myself somewhat upon the way and the manner in which the business has been conducted in this House during the three and one-half months in which the Fifty-eighth Congress has been in session.

I came here, as I suppose every other new Member came, possessed of the exalted impression that these Halls have been honored in our country's history with the presence of many of the world's greatest statesmen, discussing and enacting great measures—came here filled with the idea that I have a duty to the people to perform, that they duly required me, on occasions at least, to rise above partisanship and meet the conditions which were presented to this body. I have learned since I have been here that it seems to be, and, perhaps rightly, the duty of the majority to legislate. It seems to be the duty of the minority to criticise. Now, I say that it is probably well that this is so, because without just criticism a majority would go wrong.

But when I review the fact that during the session of this Congress the only great measures that have been before the House have practically received the unanimous consent of the Members of this body, and yet the great bulk of that three and one-half months' time has been devoted to making speeches for home consumption, to be printed at the public expense and circulated among the people, but not made upon the questions pending nor with a view to changing the opinions of Members, I am convinced that the minority finds its chief duty in making a party issue for campaign purposes. Generally the discussions have had no relevancy whatever to the matters before this House. For instance, when the great Cuban treaty question was before us, it was openly declared on the first day of its introduction that both sides of this House were ultimately to vote in favor of the treaty. And yet for long days every question before the American people during all of the campaigns in the immediate past were discussed with more or less vigor and with more or less inaccuracy as to facts. Amendments were proposed and discussed, which, if adopted by the House, would have required a resubmission of the treaty to Cuba, and thereby have possibly defeated it. To the new Members the discussion by the minority during the pendency of that bill looked like a frantic effort to create campaign material.

Now, again, I take it, gentlemen, that the country has a right to expect that the party in power will fulfill the pledges made in its platform. For while it is true that you can judge of a party by its past as to what it will do in the future, much confidence is placed upon what the party promises to do if it is placed in power.

I propose to say to you, because I think it is absolutely true, that while there have been differences of opinion here about this body upon the questions which have been before us, every single measure that has been presented by the majority in this House during this session has been in accordance with the promises set forth in its platform and by which the party is to be judged, whether it is right or wrong, and for them, after a bitter battle of words, the minority has voted, thereby showing that the majority was reasonably near right in their opinion.

The Republican party pledged certain things for Cuba, and it is fulfilling that pledge. Both parties in the platforms of 1900 declared that the country was in favor of an isthmian canal. The Democratic party in its platform charged the Republican party with going too slowly, and I call your attention to the platform for the correctness of that statement. Since then when the matter has been brought up in this House, not by any direct measure, but incidentally, the President and the Administration have been charged with going too rapidly.

They charged that the President has acted too hastily, and yet I venture the assertion that our friends in the minority would have been exceedingly glad of the opportunity to have made that canal possible by such an opportunity as has been presented to the Republican Administration at this time, and if President Roosevelt had been a Democratic President he would have been exalted by Democrats as a master of diplomacy and wisdom.

We have heard other measures discussed. For instance, to-day and the other day, I heard the gentlemen on this side condemning an appropriation that was in the bill before the House for the fortifications of the insular possessions. They charged that that amount of money ought not to be expended in fortifications in the Philippines, and yet the gentleman from Georgia, in reading the Democratic platform, used these words found in that platform:

We favor the immediate declaration of giving the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence, and, third, protection from outside interference.

I ask the gentlemen who are familiar with the facts if they believe that a stable form of government could be established by the Filipinos at this time? I ask them if they believe that without fortifications or without provisions for carrying out the third clause of that statement we would be in a position to meet the promise which the Democratic party made to the people or proposed in its platform?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask the gentleman if he is not aware that prior to the outbreak of hostilities and after our war with Spain, two officers of our service over there, one a naval officer and the other an army officer, traversed the entire island of Luzon, and [illegible] reported that a stable form of municipal control existed in all parts of the island; that the people were happy and industrious; that life and property were safe and good order prevailed everywhere, and, further, if he does not know that that is one of the public documents at this time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think probably there is such a document, but I also know, and I think the gentleman must know if he has any friends over there, as he undoubtedly has, that that condition is not the condition that exists in the Philippine Islands, nor has it existed there according to the best authority.

Mr. COCHRAN. If such a condition did exist immediately after the war with Spain and such an organization of society had been effected in so brief a time, is not that an evidence that the Filipino is capable of self-government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Undoubtedly, if that were true; but it is not true to the best of my judgment and belief.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the public document I speak of has existence, signed by an officer of the marine service and an army officer after examining the thing throughout the islands, is not that some evidence that it did exist?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It possibly may be evidence sufficient for the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask if the gentleman has anything to contradict that report that is of an official nature?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a statement from gentlemen who are in authority there, in whom I have perfect confidence, who have lived there for years, and who have portrayed to me the conditions of the islands and of the people there, and those statements deny that they are in that happy condition of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, that is after three years of war with us.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Very well; I believe the gentleman now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, other things have been criticised here, and one gentleman has stated positively that the Paris convention would never have been held had it not been for President McKinley. I wish to say that the Paris treaty of which he speaks could not have been ratified had it not been for Mr. Bryan, because it required Democrats to confirm that treaty, and our presence in the Orient is as much due to Democrats as Republicans.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, just for a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Just one further question. I will ask the gentleman if at the time that treaty was pending in the United States Senate repeated disclaimer of an intention to permanently occupy those islands by conquest was not made by those in authority in the United States Senate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know of nothing now to dispute that. I know of nobody who wishes to have perpetual or continuous possession over there. I do not speak for the party. I do not pretend to speak for the party.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has anybody ever spoken for your party on that subject?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I say that condition does not exist where the American Government can leave those people where they were before. Furthermore, it is the condition that confronts us to-day which we are now talking about. That condition exists, and I ask the gentleman if he believes that the Democratic party would be in a position to carry out its pledge to protect those people against the world if we were to remove our influence and our control there in the government?

Mr. COCHRAN. I believe a declaration on the part of the United States that any unfriendly act to them would be regarded as an unfriendly act to us would protect them without firing a gun in a hundred years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well; but here we stand with the Philippine Islands in a very hotbed of international strife, and we have pledged to protect them against all outside interference, and yet, under the Democratic policy, we are to withdraw all authority and retain all responsibility of protecting them as a nation against encroachments or invasions, against all troubles, whether from without or from causes originating in the islands due to the ignorance or vice of their people. Such a policy would not decrease our responsibilities or troubles, it would vastly increase them.

Mr. COCHRAN. If that statement is true, that is, if our Government expended five hundred millions, and all for only one thing—to project us unnecessarily into international strife?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I did not rise for the purpose of entering into this discussion, but simply to give some suggestions as to the way the work has been done and the impressions that have been made upon me during the three and a half months that this Congress has been in session. I do not know how money has been expended for the purpose mentioned by the gentleman from Arkansas. The extension of a war for humanity led us into the Philippines, and there has never been a time since when we could shirk our duty and abandon the islands. The problem of humanity is being worked out and a Philippine republic will be the ultimate result in spite of all opposition from the minority in the American Congress, made for campaign purposes only.

I have learned, at least from my standpoint, that the position of our Democratic friends as to what Democracy stands for now is [illegible] we have known it to be in the past.

[illegible]

Mr. FOSS. I will yield the gentleman more time if he desires. How much more does he wish?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the gentleman will let me have ten minutes I will try not to use it all.

Mr. FOSS. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to say that I do not stand here as a [illegible] leader. I do not want to be understood as such, for I have received good humor and much pleasure in my association with the gentlemen of this House on both sides and I have learned there are honest and sincere men here, and that is the general rule; but I am simply trying to express to some of the ideas that have come to me in a short experience in this Congress.

I want to know I know what Democracy stands for. I find here that it stands for various things. The gentleman from Massachusetts who interrupted the gentleman from Pennsylvania said that he stood on no platform except his own. It seems to me there are many who stand on their individual platforms, and that is right on occasions. But the people of this country have a right to know where any party which seeks to control the affairs of this Government may stand. A distinguished Member of this House writes in one of the magazines an article which, coming from the source it does, seems to me to indicate that it has some what of an official character. Now, I may not understand his language, but I read on page 183 of Everybody's Magazine for February, 1904, in the first column, these words:

"The American farmer would find a [illegible] of the prosperity of the present [illegible] the farmer would sell more at a [illegible] the prices he paid for manufactured articles. [illegible] the same price heretofore obtained for him."

I have discussed that language with others and have come to this conclusion. The writer admits that the price of the products which the farmer would sell must be reduced, but he must sell larger quantities in order to maintain his profits.

Now, gentlemen, if I remember rightly, in the campaign of 1896 especially, the cry was that the products of the farm were too low, and our Democratic friends charged it up to the financial policy of the country. Here is a proposition which is announced, it seems to me, by the leader of the others in that campaign, in favor of the policy which would reduce the price of the products which the farmer produces or raises, and many farmers believe that they are working their farms almost to the limit now.

If this is Democracy, if that is the policy that his party believes in, it is right that the country should know it and should understand exactly what it means.

Mr. [illegible] I stated to say that I believe the Republican party has fulfilled its pledges, so far, at least, that it is conducting itself in a way thoroughly indicative of the fact that it intends to carry out those pledges. It has kept faith with Cuba. It has put itself in a position to dig the isthmian canal. There is not any question about that, notwithstanding what is said, and everybody will admit that it is right when the years have gone by and the opportunity to make a political issue out of the question has passed and gone forever. This is a measure which all the people have wanted, and it is a measure that the President of the United States has made possible.

Mr. THAYER. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HEPBURN). Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, just for a question.

Mr. THAYER. Only a question. I understand the gentleman to say in effect that the Democratic party was attempting to make an issue on the building of the Panama Canal. Upon what fact does the gentleman base that statement? Is it not true that the Democratic party represented in Congress is wholly responsible for the building of that canal?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That may be; but I notice that the leader on your side was very much afraid that from the speeches that had been made in this House the position of his Democracy would be misunderstood, and he took every occasion to say, "We are in favor of the canal." So I say, judging from the speeches that have been made on this floor, your statements warned your leader.

Mr. THAYER. Well, he is all right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, he is all right.

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman claims that our "leader" was attempting to enforce upon the attention of this House that we were not opposed to the building of the canal.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. THAYER. Then why do you try to make an issue on the building of that canal? Our only criticism has been that upon the Executive for acknowledging the Panama Republic before it was born. We have not been, so far as I know, opposed to the building of the canal.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But it seems to me, if you were all so heartily in favor of the canal—if you are sincerely in favor of it——

Mr. THAYER. I am——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, it seems to me, and there can be no other construction put upon this matter, you would have voted for it without discussion. But you have spent your time, the Democratic Senators have been spending their time in trying to impress upon the people that the Republican party and you can take the credit for having provided for the construction of that canal.

Mr. THAYER. Can you not conceive the position of a man who thoroughly believes in the [illegible] and believes that it is the duty of the Executive to [illegible] the independence of republics under proper circumstances [illegible] wrong to suppose that in that case [illegible] the Republic of Panama so soon as it did? Can you not conceive of a Member of the House occupying that position?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can; and in answer to the gentleman I will ask him [illegible] gentleman [illegible] the Democratic side of the House?

Mr. THAYER. I presume so; it was true, too.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And is it not a fact that you are condemning the Administration now for going too fast? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THAYER. Not for going too fast in building the canal. The gentleman does not seem to differ [illegible] and the beginning of the canal.

Mr. TOWNSEND. [illegible] had not acted fairly and honestly in the construction of the canal? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THAYER. It is simply to call [illegible] upon the fact that the American people were in favor of the canal, and that any means [illegible] to that end would be excused. [illegible]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is not a fact [illegible] people and every one of the [illegible] President has been criticised by the Democratic party [illegible] the transaction at Panama? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THAYER. I do not understand that [illegible] been disputed that the [illegible]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Wait a minute; do not make too many [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. It has not been disputed that we sent our war ships [illegible] prevent Colombia from landing her troops [illegible]

Mr. TOWNSEND. [illegible] bia that ever asked or [illegible] to keep [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. [illegible] we not pledge ourselves to help Colombia sustain her sovereignty?

Mr. TOWNSEND. As a [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Did we [illegible] that stood in the way of [illegible] unimpeded the transit across the Isthmus?

Mr. TOWNSEND. And [illegible] Government [illegible] Democratic side.]

Mr. THAYER. Why [illegible] ia to land her own troops [illegible]

Mr. TOWNSEND. [illegible] by allowing her to land troops the [illegible] as would have been impeded. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THAYER. That is, her own people could not come there to put down an insurrection without impeding the transit. That is the [illegible]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, that matter has been discussed, and I leave it to the record. I leave it to the judgment of an intelligent people to say whether or not the President acted within constitutional limits, and whether he took constitutional means, and whether he acted in accordance with the wish of the American people and with the demands of humanity. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan all the time that he desires.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Owing to the many interruptions my remarks have consumed more time and taken a different trend from what I had intended, but by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois and of the House I will briefly conclude, and before I leave this phase of the Panama question, which the gentleman from Massachusetts has injected into the discussion, I wish to say to him and to his party that neither he nor they can divert the country's attention from the fact that the premature [illegible] on the action of the Administration in the matter [illegible] the President had recognized a republic "before it was born," because that is not a fact. It had been born in full season, and was properly christened. It was older, in fact, than was the great French Republic when the United States recognized it.

No; that was not the reason for all these many weeks of abusive and misleading oratory in both branches of the Congress. The real object was to try to impeach the action of the President by calling attention to other matters, hoping to find something that would detract from the great, the supreme, service he has rendered the United States, and he be [illegible] but these efforts have miserably failed, and President Roosevelt will go down in history as the man who accomplished in a few days what the nation had been asking and striving after for a century.

But the gentleman insists that he is for the canal, yet condemns the way it was brought about. He is willing—yea, anxious—to participate in the result of the wrong, but condemns the one who did the wrong. He forgets that the partaker is as bad as the thief; and, by the way, that reminds me of another peculiarity of the minority of this House. I have heard righteous indignation expressed in fervid speeches over and over again at the extravagance of certain appropriations, but I have yet to learn of one of the gentlemen who refuses to accept appropriations for his district or who is not insisting that the expenditure of the money in his district is a necessity.

There was [illegible] question. It seemed to me that a [illegible] gentleman [illegible] the result of the action of the House in that matter. I may be wrong, but I thought I could detect a disposition on the part of some of the minority to play a little politics. There [illegible] an opportunity for the Republicans [illegible] the transaction. [illegible] their approval and at the same time their pockets would contain the same people's money.

I recall also the attitude of the minority the other day when the vote was taken on the appropriation for [illegible] I really thought I could [illegible] and trembling lest the amendment to strike out had carried, and I was sure of that fact when, after the amendment had been defeated by a tie vote, the yeas and nays were not called for. Can [illegible] a really meritorious measure was [illegible] Now, [illegible] that [illegible] did you credit, for it showed that while [illegible] to play politics for all it is worth, you are still patriots at heart.

[illegible] and while forced to admit [illegible] in so [illegible] yet [illegible] the Republican [illegible] we [illegible] I have failed to learn of [illegible] that minority would [illegible] except that the [illegible] gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] [illegible] tive policy by [illegible] would begin with the North, East, and West, where his party has but [illegible] in the [illegible] I do [illegible] desire to [illegible] and [illegible] will demand a complete and specific bill of particulars before they again intrust the Democratic party with a revision of the tariff. That party has had much experience in tearing down and can do a good job of demolition, but it is sadly deficient in the science and art of construction.

I am no worshiper of any tariff schedule. Changing conditions require a change in schedules, but the changes should not be made frequently, and it would be almost criminal conduct on the part of Congress to make a general revision of the tariff at the [illegible] or immediately preceding a general election—each of these things disturb business, and both together would greatly [illegible] it, and anxious as I am to relieve certain duties and [illegible] yet, recognizing the fact that the whole country is doing well, I, too, am in favor of letting well enough alone until after election and when business has assumed its normal conditions.

I have been greatly interested in the discussions of the trusts in which the opposition have indulged. They have condemned the majority for not doing more to abolish trusts and yet have utterly failed to explain why when they had full control of all branches of the Government they failed to write a single line in our statute books which even attempted to regulate trusts or make their organization and operation illegal, or to acknowledge that every particle of legislation against trusts was enacted by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President.

I have heard over and over again the President condemned for not prosecuting more corporations and combinations under the Sherman antitrust law, and that even in face of the fact that the Northern Securities case was prosecuted with all vigor and is now pending in the Supreme Court, which will determine whether the law is constitutional or not. If it is held constitutional no honest Democrat doubts that it will be enforced against all combinations [illegible] corporations. Then there is a curious thing in this matter. The minority in this House condemns the President for not [illegible] to enforce the antitrust law, while Wall street and money [illegible] Senators have tried and are now trying to defeat the President's [illegible] that [illegible] stockholders in trusts have been successfully assisted in the Securities case, and they believe that President Roosevelt will enforce the law. Evidently the trusts who have felt the enforcement of the law do not believe gentlemen here who say the law has not been enforced. I will not weary the House with further observations further than to repeat briefly that the party which was intrusted with power in 1900 has been busy fulfilling the pledges of its platform. It has accomplished much; it will accomplish more.

It promised to deal patriotically and liberally with the old soldiers, and with the aid of the equally patriotic Democrats will pass, I believe, a service-pension bill to aid, as far as may be, the [illegible] of that glorious army which preserved the Union and [illegible] going down into the valley of the shadows.

It is in honor bound to increase the pay of the rural carriers, an intelligent band of citizens, than which none connected with the Government service bring more real benefit and satisfaction to the people, and yet no other class of Government employees receive so inadequate a compensation. This is not simply a question of policy on the part of the Congress, for the people pay the bill, and I believe the people are demanding that these worthy men be paid a much better salary.

[illegible] judging by what it has [illegible] will reason it well yet do the Republican party in both [illegible] has kept the faith, and the weak, captious, [illegible] of the minority has but taught the people that all its frantic efforts and wordy denunciations have been in the interest of [illegible] and for the sole purpose of rehabilitating a [illegible] party which [illegible] of a [illegible] in [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from [illegible] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

[illegible]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman on this side of the House who desires to occupy any time in general debate, and I ask the gentleman on the other side of the House to go [illegible]

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, how much time has this side remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eighty-five minutes.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I yield one hour of that to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I have promised to yield this entire hour to a gentleman who is not now in the Hall. As it is getting late on Saturday afternoon, I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will move that the committee rise. There will be little time consumed in general debate on Monday, and we could then go into the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. The gentleman to whom I have promised to yield this time is very anxious to make a speech during this general debate.

Mr. FOSS. I did not understand the gentleman's statement. Did he make a request?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes; I requested that, owing to the facts I have stated, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs would move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I would like, if possible, to finish general debate to-day.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Well, I will say again for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK], to whom I had promised two hours in general debate, has been unable to be in the House, but will be here Monday. There has been an agreement to permit ten hours of general debate. If one hour or ten hours were consumed, we could not begin the reading of the bill until Monday about 1 o'clock or some time thereafter, and my request is, as there seems to be only two gentlemen who desire to speak in general debate, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK], that you now move the committee rise, and that we will have an hour and a half general debate on Monday, as I understand the situation, and then proceed with the bill. My request was that you move that the committee rise now.

Mr. FOSS. I would ask the gentleman if this would meet his approval: That we agree to one hour of general debate on Monday, and that we start in now with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That would either cut Mr. SNOOK or Mr. RIXEY out. Put it at an hour and a half. That will protect both of these gentlemen and certainly meet with my approval.

Mr. FOSS. I understood all they wanted was one hour, both of them.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK] wants an hour, and I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] wants thirty minutes. That would be an hour and a half, and if the gentleman would make his request protecting these gentlemen, so that we can have an hour and a half, then he can go ahead reading the bill this afternoon.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I will make that request. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed now with the reading of the bill, that on Monday an hour and a half be set aside for general debate, and close general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate was fixed by the House. This committee has no power to alter the order that was made by the House, and if there is no further debate now the Chair will direct that the bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. If this afternoon is consumed there will be at least one hour of general debate on Monday, so that under this agreement we can not lose more than half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. That would depend entirely when the committee rose.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. You would gain an hour and a half this afternoon.

Mr. FOSS. Now, I will say to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, that as soon as we rise this afternoon I will ask unanimous consent that an hour and a half be given for general debate on Monday next.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I suggest that you move that the committee rise temporarily now, so that there may be no mistake about it, and I hope that neither you nor I can control may make objection. I want to take no chances. If the House is now willing to make the agreement it will grant that request.

Mr. FOSS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11963, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that two hours be set aside on Monday for general debate, one hour and a half to be controlled by the minority and one hour by myself. I move that we proceed to the bill for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that one hour of the House shall be devoted to general debate to-morrow and that two hours be devoted to general debate on Monday, one hour and a half for the minority, to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MEYER], and one hour by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Does that mean that we will proceed with the reading of the bill then at once?

The SPEAKER. It depends upon whether the House will agree to it or not.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It does not have anything to do with that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object.

The SPEAKER. There is objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will not object to this, when the committee desires this arrangement to be made. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not want to be misunderstood. I want to offer a number of amendments, and there are a number of Members who are not present and who left the House with the understanding that the reading of the bill will not be taken up to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska objects.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn. [A pause.] I withdraw that motion and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the gentleman from Nebraska not to interpose an objection to the arrangement that was made upon the floor by the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see any use of wasting any time about that, as the gentleman has objected.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may suggest——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I have made the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair make a suggestion for the consideration of the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Illinois? The gentlemen see the situation. The Chair has a number of requests from gentlemen on both sides of the House to submit requests for unanimous consent touching certain bills.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing that the motion to adjourn be pending during the submission of those requests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman for the present withdraws his motion?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS, SHERMAN COUNTY, OREG.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of any other motion, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMSON], who asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Public Lands from the further consideration of the following Senate bill, and that the same be considered in the House at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 277) for the relief of settlers on lands in Sherman County, in the State of Oregon.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel and discontinue the preemption [illegible] pending in his Department [illegible] Section 2289 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, [illegible] Act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to amend the preemption laws," and the amendments thereto, [illegible] Act of September 29, 1890 (26 Stat., p. 489), and the amendments thereto, and a description of the lands so entered, respectively, and to ascertain the value of the improvements made thereon by such entrymen, respectively, between the date of the restoration of said lands to entry and the original entry, or, in the event there has been no entry, then as [illegible] Secretary of the Interior further to [illegible] the Department [illegible] Sec. 4. [illegible] of the Secretary of the Interior to [illegible]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a brief explanation of this bill and how much land it involves.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate certain land claims which have been pending out in this country for a number of years and to report to the next Congress concerning the status of these claims. This bill has been introduced first in the Senate and then referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and both have reported favorably on the passage of the measure and it has been reported favorably by both committees of this Congress. I believe you also asked about the quantity of land?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It is a strip of land, if my memory serves me aright, about 4 miles wide—that is, every [illegible] and about 13, 14, or possibly 15 miles long.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. This bill simply authorizes a report to the next Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar House bill will be laid on the table.

REGULATING THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11963) regulating the practice of medicine and surgery in the Indian Territory.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no person shall practice medicine and surgery [illegible] in the Indian Territory [illegible] of the [illegible] demonstration as physician and surgeon, or either, with the date of such [illegible]

The members of said board shall, before entering upon the duties of their office, take the official oath required to be taken by officers [illegible]

SEC. 7. That the board may [illegible] shall constitute a quorum for [illegible] the board [illegible] the sum of $10, which shall be their [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes, sir; he would have to be examined under the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He would have to be examined under the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes, sir; he would be required to take an examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill is reported by the committee unanimously, I believe.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Unanimously, and it has also had the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There is no amendment to the bill, because the new bill embodies all the amendments suggested by either the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to have been pretty carefully examined, but it occurred to me it was a very important piece of legislation to be taken up by unanimous consent under these circumstances, but I will not object to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, BENTON COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. BUCKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2815) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to build a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the Sauk Rapids, in said River, and at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn., for the development of water power, and such works and structures in connection therewith as may be necessary or convenient in the development of said power and in the utilization of the power thereby developed: Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of the construction of the same: And provided further, That the said Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, its successors or assigns, shall not deviate from such plans after such approval either before or after the completion of said structures, unless the modification of said plans shall have previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That there shall be placed and maintained in connection with said dam a navigable waterway arranged so as to permit logs, timber and lumber to pass around, through, or over said dam without unreasonable delay or hindrance or injury to the same: And provided further, That the dam shall be so constructed that the Government of the United States may at any time, or from time to time, without compensation, control the said dam so far as shall be necessary for purposes of navigation, but shall not destroy the water power developed by said dam and shall impose a rate greater than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation, and that the Secretary of War may at any time require and enforce, at the expense of the owners, such alterations and changes in the construction of said dam as may be deemed advisable in the interests of navigation: And provided further, That such alterations shall be approved by the United States Engineer in charge of the improvement and maintained at said dam by the Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, its successors or assigns.

SEC. 2. That no rights arising from the building of said dam, or from the diversion of said power by said dam or appurtenant works, shall be in the public domain, as now provided for the purpose of the State of Minnesota and the citizens of the United States, but shall remain in the said State, to be so controlled as to prevent injury to the rights of the public in reference to the improvement of the navigation of rivers or transport and other uses from the operation of said dam.

SEC. 3. That the said dam shall be begun within two years and be completed within six years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 4. That the right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there ought to be a slight amendment in the bill, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to it. I move to insert in line 8, page 2, after the word "dam," the words "and highway."

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if that is not already provided for in the bill?

Mr. LACEY. No; it says "sluiceway."

Mr. LIND. This is a Senate bill, and an amendment at this time would be embarrassing. I think earlier in the bill there is a provision for a fishway.

Mr. BUCKMAN. The head of water is not so high there but what a sluiceway would answer the purpose.

Mr. LACEY. These matters have come up several times, and care has always been taken to insert a fishway in all these bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa seems to have a different print from that at the desk. There is no "dam" at the place that he indicates.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Clerk read the provision to which I have called attention.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the provision mentioned by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That suitable fishways, to be approved by the United States Fish Commission, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam.

Mr. LACEY. I withdraw my amendment.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BUCKMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TO REGULATE THE PRACTICE OF PHARMACY IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23) in relation to pharmacy in the Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23) in relation to pharmacy in the Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person other than a registered pharmacist or assistant pharmacist, as hereinafter defined, to retail, compound, or dispense drugs, medicines, and pharmaceutical preparations in the Indian Territory as at present compounded and refined, unless such person shall be a registered pharmacist as this act provides, or shall have in charge of such pharmacy, store, or shop a registered pharmacist, except as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That "registered pharmacists" shall comprise all persons regularly engaged as such in the Indian Territory at the time of the passage of this act, and all persons over 21 years of age, having two years' experience in the compounding and dispensing of medicines (Pharmacists), who shall pass a satisfactory examination before the Territorial board of pharmacy hereinafter provided for. Graduates in pharmacy who have completed a course in a college and school of pharmacy as shall be approved by the board of pharmacy may, on payment of a fee of $5, be issued a registered pharmacist's license.

SEC. 3. That "assistant pharmacists" in the meaning of this act, shall comprise all persons who have been authorized to assist in the dispensing and compounding of prescriptions under the supervision of a registered pharmacist, or all persons other than those of age, having two years' previous experience in the compounding and dispensing of drugs, who shall pass such examination as the Territorial board of pharmacy may require. Assistant pharmacists shall not be permitted to [illegible] under their own name, or have their name [illegible] or more than three assistants have been duly qualified [illegible] of a registered and registered pharmacist.

SEC. 4. That upon the passage of this act there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, Territory of Indian Territory, a board of pharmacy, consisting of five members, all of whom shall be citizens of the United States, and residents of the Indian Territory, and who shall pass such examination as the Territorial board of pharmacy may require. Assistant pharmacists shall not be permitted to [illegible] the Territorial board of pharmacy [illegible] shall hold their office for one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, or until their successors have been duly qualified [illegible] appointed for the term of five years, or until their successors have been duly qualified. In case of resignation or removal from the Territory of any member of said board, or a vacancy occurring from any other cause, the Secretary shall appoint a registered pharmacist to serve as a member of said board for the remainder of the unexpired term.

SEC. 5. That the said board shall, within thirty days from its appointment, meet at such place within Indian Territory as said board may select, and organize by the election of a president, secretary, and treasurer, who shall serve for the term of one year, and thereafter perform the duties [illegible] by the board. Meetings for the examination of applicants for [illegible], and the transaction of other necessary business, shall be held at least once in four months and at such times and places as the board may direct: Provided, That ten days' public notice of time and place of such meeting shall be given. There shall be an examination of applicants for examination and registration are [illegible] under such rules as the board may prescribe. It shall be the duty of the board to issue certificates of registration to such persons as may be entitled to the same, upon the payment of a fee of $5, to be paid to the treasurer of the board, as well as the fees of all persons registered under this act, to keep a book for registration, in which shall be registered the name and place of business of every person registered under this act, and the date when such person was registered, and any other facts pertaining to the qualifications of such persons.

SEC. 6. That said board shall have power to make by-laws for the full and proper [illegible] and prescribe the forms and methods of [illegible] and registration, to [illegible] the [illegible] of any person against whom proceedings are [illegible] to be made [illegible] and other necessary expenses [illegible] the fees to be paid for the [illegible] and other necessary expenses [illegible] the balance of the [illegible] and other necessary expenses [illegible] the balance of the [illegible] and other necessary expenses [illegible] the balance of

Mr. BURKETT. But that detail was not in the original law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The detail is not in the law. The law requires the Director of the Census to collect vital statistics every year, and in order to make those statistics of any value at all of course much detail is necessary; the cause of the death, for instance, the civil condition, the sex, age, and color, and if there is any one class of statistics that is of particular value to the people of this country, it is vital statistics.

Now, it is readily seen that 2 cents is not a sufficient fee to induce registration officers in districts where the number of deaths and births are below 500 to make reports. The Director has no power to compel them to act. He limits the inquiries to as small an amount of information as is necessary to get statistics that are of any use, and the Committee on the Census after careful investigation, came to the unanimous conclusion that the fee ought to be increased to a maximum not exceeding 4 cents.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. LIND. Is this money to be paid to the city or municipal officers or to the employees of the Census Department?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The fee is to be paid to the local registration officers, those in charge of the registration records for making transcripts for the Director of the Census, and the difficulty has been that in small districts where the number of births and deaths were below 500 these officers would not make the reports. The estimate of the expense under the proposed scheme made by the Director is that the information can be obtained for $17,500 a year. The appropriation for these statistics for the current year is $14,000.

Only $5,000 has been used, because officers will not respond to the request of the Director. The question is this, whether the Government is sufficiently interested in the collection of vital statistics from registration districts to authorize the schedule or scheme of payment recommended. If it is not, the bill can be defeated, and that branch of statistics will be discontinued.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the registration cover an area of an entire State?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not necessarily.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe in my State we have a law covering that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The registration area depends on the State law. Some States have registration of vital statistics in large cities and some in every county. But wherever the local law provides for registration, so that accurate information can be obtained from the records in relation to births and deaths, the law creating the permanent Census Office makes it the duty of the Director of the Census to collect those statistics. That is the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKETT. I think that 2 cents will collect all the information necessary in this matter. Therefore I object.

MONDAY, February 22, 1904.

THE PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, offered the following prayer:

"Who raised up the righteous man, * * * called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? * * * Who hath wrought and done it? * * * I, the Lord, the first, and with the last: I am He."

Let us pray. Father of life, we thank Thee that Thou hast been with the fathers; that Thou has been with him whose birth this day we celebrate. Thou wert willing to speak to them, and they were willing to hear Thee and to answer Thee, Lo, here am I; send me.

We thank Thee that the memory of these men has come down to us of him who was first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen, and we ask, Take that Thou will be with us as Thou wilt be with us, and with us wherever we go, that Thou wilt teach us Thy law, that we may walk in Thy ways; that thus may be that happy nation whose God is the Lord.

In all times of our life, O we have sought Thee, we have found Thee. In all times of our sorrow, Thou hast been to us our vacations. Thou hast been with our counselors.

Prosper, to-day, to-morrow, and in days to come, in our memories and in our hopes, be with us still, our Father who art in heaven.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] will now read Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. HEYBURN (at the Vice-President's desk) read the address, as follows:

[An address of George Washington to the people of the United States, September 19, 1796.]

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important charge, there appears to me a propriety in my making to you some public declaration of the state of my mind. I have been long enough your servant to be well acquainted with your wishes, and I should now perhaps give you of this predilection I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to believe the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a full regard to all circumstances which ought to influence a decision in a matter so momentous to a dutiful citizen to his country, and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of gratitude for your past kindness, but am supported by a firm persuasion that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a sufficient sacrifice to my inclination, which is strongly bent on an immediate retirement. In the last instance I thought it would be more consistent with your interest not to decline the honorable trust, some circumstances in the state of the nation made it my duty to yield to your desires. I accordingly yielded then to what I was not at liberty to refuse, but I felt and expressed all the reluctance with which I was not at liberty to refuse to retirement from which I had been relieved by your voices. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I flatter myself that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer requires the present of it to induce my retirement. The duties of office or property, and interest, with which my fellow-citizens may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not think it my duty to persevere in my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself, and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my unfeigned attachment by services faithful and preserving, though in useful labors unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from those services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead, amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which at this time link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvements of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionately greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by the passions of others, and what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of a party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our Western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which may impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

The spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duty of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursement to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your [illegible] but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my Administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am, nevertheless, too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GO: WASHINGTON.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA—PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the unfinished business may now be laid before the Senate, being the resolution of Mr. BACON.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 12th ultimo, as modified by him on the 8th instant, as follows:

[illegible]

[illegible] of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems likely that the dream of [illegible] centuries is now at last to become real. Columbus believed that he was sailing a westward passage to [illegible] China. [illegible] westward.

That was four hundred and [illegible] his mistake. In [illegible] It was not till seven years after [illegible] narrow rock. [illegible] and adventurous spirit of [illegible] Mr. President, [illegible] the two oceans is [illegible] through it without [illegible] in half a [illegible] Canal.

Stared at the Pacific [illegible] a surmise, we know pr[illegible] four [illegible]

I should [illegible] even if it [illegible] a million or two [illegible] lay, before committing ourselves absolutely to a canal at [illegible]

But it is not a su[illegible] to deal. The [illegible] mine—by exp[illegible] of wa[illegible] for and [illegible]

The gentlemen [illegible] set forth with [illegible] ceeding tide; that [illegible] to make but one [illegible]; that the time has come when the two hemispheres, when East and West, shall be one, or, if not one—

Two [illegible] apart,
But beat and tremble to one throbbing heart.

It would be no wonder, Mr. President, if the tide of this enthusiasm were to sweep people and Senate and Executive off their feet, and that any voice counseling a moment's delay or deliberation should be heard with impatience or should be unheard amid the chorus of acclaim and joy.

There is, however, Mr. President, another result to the accomplishment of which this canal is, in my judgment, to be a great contribution and which, it seems to me, if not even greater than the advantage which is to come to us in the Orient, at least ought to be mentioned along with it—that is, the effect it is likely to have in binding together and to us the sixteen or seventeen republics of the American continent.

In the very darkest period of our civil war, when we had few friends abroad and the stoutest hearted at home were almost in despair, when Washington was in peril and England and France were watching for an opportunity to recognize the Southern Confederacy; when the Alabama had driven our commerce from the ocean, the whole world was startled by a voice of good cheer and good hope. It was the voice of John Bright, at Birmingham.

The chancellor of the exchequer, as a speaker—is not surpassed by any man in England, and he is a great statesman; he believes the cause of the North to be hopeless; that their enterprise can not succeed.

He said—

I do not blame any man here who thinks the cause of the North hopeless and the reestablishment of the Union impossible. It may be hopeless; the restoration may be impossible.

But I can not believe, for my part, that such a fate will befall that fair land, stricken though it now is with the ravages of war. I can not believe that civil order, quite journeying with the sun, will sink into endless night in order to gratify the ambition of the aristocrats of one section.

I have seen, I have had far brighter visions before my eyes. It may be but a vision, but I believe it shall come true. I see one vast confederation stretching from the frozen North in unbroken line to the growing south, and from the wide Atlantic shores westward to the setting sunset of the Pacific waters, and I see a people, and one language, and one law, and one God, and one all that made England great, and I see the banner for freedom and a refuge for the oppressed of every race and of every clime.

When the end of the nineteenth century was coming on we looked forward to the accomplishment of this hope in the century that was to follow. Certainly it was no ignoble dream. If ever nation were entitled to hope for the good will of any other nation the great Republic might well look for the good will of her sisters at the south. She held out to them in one hand the Declaration of Independence with its great doctrines of the equality in rights of every nation with every other. In the other hand she held out the Monroe doctrine, to which every republic to the south of us owed alike her independence and her safety.

What nation, what combination of nations, can resist the peaceful influence of this great American continent, occupied by republics and alive with the spirit of liberty? When that shall have come about we shall never need to go to war. Our strength will be the strength of peace. Our victories will be the victories of peace. Europe seemed already ripe for the Monroe doctrine. France and Switzerland were already republics in fact. England and Sweden and Norway and Belgium and Denmark were republics in substance. Asia and South Africa and Australia were ready to enter our school as docile, eager, and obedient pupils.

The people of these republics have their grave faults, as we have ours and our ancestors had theirs. Humanity, as it rises from the savage state, is, like Milton's lion, still pawing to get free his lander parts. For one, I feel like being tolerant of the faults of our sister republics. I think revolution and riot and unsteadiness and discontent in freedom are quite as pardonable as the century long dead level of European or Asiatic despotism.

I do not expect myself to see the accomplishment of that vision. But I believe it is not far off. The eyes of children now born, the eyes of men now within the sound of my voice, will see it far on its way to accomplishment. In spite of a difference of opinion on one great question, I am confident that that career of peaceful empire and of peaceful glory will be along the same path, with the same chart and compass, with the same guiding stars, with the same rule of faith and practice, that this nation has followed from the beginning.

The doctrine of the Declaration of Independence that all men are equal in political rights and political opportunities, that governments get their just powers from the consent of the governed, that every nation has the right to that form of government which it and no other shall deem for its safety and happiness, is the doctrine henceforth to be the magnet which will draw men into that mighty federation and to share with us the peaceful dominion of self government.

We will, in my judgment, never substitute permanently the doctrine that strong nations are to judge of these things for weak ones, that we are to give to all weaker peoples such government as we think good for them, that we will determine for them whether and when they are capable of governing themselves, and that military conquest or grant from a dispossessed tyrant will make a good title to empire of one people over another.

The gratitude of free Cuba, Japan started by us on her career of civilization and glory, China saved from partition and spoliation—these great achievements, in two of which my friends who sit by me have had so noble and honorable a share, are to be our passports and titles to the confidence of a continent of republics in this hemisphere, and to the confidence of many a struggling people in the other.

I expect, Mr. President, to give my vote for the treaty. As I said the other day, no man in this country desires it more eagerly than I do. I doubt if there be a man living who desires it so eagerly as I do.

I should hardly deem it needful to speak again after what I have said already and after what has been said by other Senators on both sides of this Chamber were it not for some criticism and misunderstanding here and elsewhere of what I said the other day. Certainly, Mr. President, I have been taught one lesson, especially by the speech of my good friend from Ohio, which it may be was needed to take the conceit out of me. I had, with what I am afraid was an undue vanity, supposed that whatever else might be my defects or shortcomings I had the capacity at least to state what I think so that my meaning would be known with tolerable and ordinary clearness, and that after thirty-five years of service in these halls I should not be suspected by men who knew me of saying one thing and meaning another.

I called attention the other day to some charges which were made extensively in the press in this country and in other countries which I declared in my judgment were unjust and false, but which I thought needed explanation and contradiction. Beside what had appeared in the newspapers hostile to the President and to the Republican party, I was receiving private letters expressing anxiety and alarm from Republican sources of the highest intelligence and respect. The writers were puzzled and anxious. I thought that the case had been very imperfectly and inaccurately stated. I was confident that a full and complete statement would remove all ground of reasonable criticism.

For some reason, what was a simple and ordinary resolution requesting the President to give us such information as he might think not incompatible with the public interest was met with delay and opposition. It was a resolution which for many years it had been the custom of the Senate to adopt on the desire of any single Senator. But it was attempted to delay it and suppress it, first by sending it over under the rules, and then by a proposal to commit it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I then stated the reasons why I thought a fuller and clearer statement of the whole case was needed for the satisfaction of the public and the absolute vindication of the President.

That I was actuated by no hostility to him, if anything other than my own affirmation be needed to show it, will, I think, be believed when I quote the resolution of the Republican convention of Massachusetts, adopted not long ago. The eminent gentleman charged with the duty of preparing the platform for that convention did me the honor to invite me to prepare so much of it as related to the President. This is the resolution which I prepared myself, of which I wrote every syllable. It was prepared without consultation with anybody and without help from any other man.

The Republicans of Massachusetts and her people, without distinction of party, have paid [illegible] to the President and government of their choice, and [illegible] in the providence of God, the burden he laid down is borne by a worthy successor.

[illegible] Roosevelt has [illegible] of his high calling with wisdom and courage. He has [illegible] The less [illegible] He has [illegible] his present Administration and intends to sustain and support him in another.

I introduced a resolution on the 9th of December calling upon the President to give such information as he might deem not incompatible with the public interest as to what had been done in dealing with Colombia and the new Republic of Panama so far as it affected the canal treaty. I suppose I must call it "Panama" though I was brought up on the old-fashioned lines of Sam't, which my friend the Senator from Ohio will recollect. They run something like this:

Panama's maids will long look pale,
When FORAKER finishes his tale
Colon's dark matrons long will tame
The froward child with CULLOM's name.

I have not got the names right, but the lines are in substance as I have quoted them. That resolution was one of a kind which, according to the customs of the Senate prevailing until quite recently, has been adopted as a matter of course, if any Senator think he need information for the discharge of his own duty. I can not conceive any reason for withholding it or delaying it.

It left everything to the discretion of the President. It asked for no information, except what the Executive and the State Department were in the habit of giving to any Senator who should visit the White House or the Secretary of State. But for some reason it was met by all the tactics of parliamentary opposition which the Senate rules permit. First there was a demand that it go over from day to day, and then a motion that it go to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that it was not a peremptory direction to a department, such as we are wont to give. It was a courteous request to the Executive to tell us so much of the matter as he should think the public interest should permit. If that resolution had been adopted, as I expected when I introduced it, as a matter of course, I should not have said a word. I was specially careful when I did speak to give notice that if any Senator thought anything I should say fitter for executive session, I would instantly desist. Under these circumstances, I deemed myself compelled to say what I said. I thought then and think now that I was doing a great service not only to the country, but to the party of which I am a member, and to the President, of whom I am a supporter.

Mr. President, there was a very peculiar condition of things at that time. A large portion of the press of the country, Democratic and what is called "Independent," were making very bitter charges against the President. The echoes of those charges were beginning to reach us from foreign countries. They charged the President with manufacturing the revolution in Panama. One editor in Panama, favorable to the revolution, made a statement in his own newspaper, extensively copied in this country, that he had had an interview with the Secretary of State, who had, in substance, conveyed to him his approval of the revolution, but counseled a little delay until things should be in readiness.

These charges were, in my judgment, foul and infamous. I was applied to by a well-known newspaper that had repeated them to give my opinion of the whole question. To that request I replied that I was not myself informed sufficiently to make a public statement about it, but that if I did make a public statement I should not select for an organ a newspaper which itself, knowing no more about it than I did, had charged the head of the Republic with dishonorable conduct. The correspondent asked me if he might report my answer. I told him he was welcome to do it, and he did it. That was a few days before I introduced that resolution in the Senate.

Now, does any man believe, after reading that resolution of the Massachusetts State convention, and after making that public statement, I undertook either directly or by insinuation to indorse the calumny I had so indignantly rebuked?

But, Mr. President, these charges of the newspapers at home and abroad were having their effect. I was getting letters from men, whose names, if I were at liberty to make them known, would create a good deal of astonishment, expressing their uneasiness and alarm. They were asking whether these things were possible. Many of the writers were evidently very deeply impressed by them. These letters did not come from the men who are called "Mugwumps," or "Independents," or "Bolters," or "Free Traders," or from the cloisters of universities, or the libraries of dreamers, or from men who were lukewarm in their Republicanism.

They came from men of the highest character and influence, political and personal friends of my own, with whom I have been acting all my life. They did not come from men who in the past have been in the habit of going from one party to another at every alternate election. They came from business men, from protectionists, from large employers of labor, from men of advanced years, from men who never gave other than a Republican vote and whose names were never absent from a Republican contribution. They were full of uneasiness and alarm.

The danger seems to be over now. But it seemed to me then, as it seemed to men wiser and better informed than I am, that the condition was like that which preceded the first and second elections of Mr. Cleveland—a condition of fancied security at Washington and a condition of well-founded alarm among Republicans in the places where elections are decided.

What were the charges and complaints? They were:

First. That the Administration, failing to get a treaty from Colombia, had instigated the revolution.

Second. That the President had been hasty in recognizing the new State, thereby abandoning the doctrine we maintained against England and France in the beginning of the civil war.

Third. That he had, in violation of the solemn treaty by which we were bound to maintain the sovereignty of Colombia over Panama against any other power, at home or abroad, not only neglected that duty, but had tied the hands of Colombia so that she could not defend herself, and then had proceeded to despoil her of that sovereignty and of the Isthmus which gave it its chief value.

Now, Mr. President, I said in my speech on December 17 that so far as the charge of secretly fomenting this revolution, it did not seem to me worth the President's notice. I said that if the President were to consult any Senator, that, in my opinion, he would tell him that there was no occasion for him to prove by any evidence beyond that of his own character that he had had nothing to do with any indiscretion or artifice. I said that from all I had ever seen or known he was the last man living capable of such an act. Perhaps I might say, without indelicacy or impropriety, that what I said any Senator would say to the President, if he had asked him, I had myself said to the President when he asked me. But I also said of the charge against the Secretary of State that I did not believe one word of it; that it did not seem to me to be Mr. Secretary Hay's style.

But the President decided otherwise. He had undertaken to contradict these aspersions. He had sent to the House of Representatives a message containing a few of the documents, with the history of the transactions, and had given to the press, for the express purpose of showing the impossibility of these charges, a part of a message he had prepared to send to Congress on the 7th of December, showing that when he had prepared it, in the latter part of October or the beginning of November, he had no expectation of revolution in Panama, and expected to deal with the situation on an entirely different theory.

Mr. President, unfortunately, it seems to me, and as it seemed to many loyal friends of the President himself, his explanation and contradiction were in a very imperfect state. Neither he nor the Secretary of State had given an indignant denial of the charges. It is true, as I thought then and think now, no denial whatever was necessary. But he had not taken that view. He had sent certain documents to Congress and made known to the public a draft of a message for the very purpose of contradicting these slanders. Now, I pointed out in what I said, affirming with all my might, that I did not believe a word of them myself; that if they were to be contradicted by a history of the transactions we ought to have the whole of it and not simply that part of it that did not contradict them. The documents which the President had sent in began, in order of time, before any revolution had begun in Panama. So far as appeared by them our Administration had no knowledge or expectation of any, a view confirmed by the draft of the undelivered message, until orders were given to hurry ships to Panama for the sole purpose of preventing Colombia from so disposing of her forces as to prevent it.

It is true there had been rumors in some papers before that time of expected revolution in Colombia, but they were not alluded to in anything the President said to us. They were unknown to a large portion of the American people. I confess my own ignorance; but they were not known to me, and they were probably unknown to the general public in foreign countries.

So, Mr. President, the only official fact that had been furnished to us in answer to these calumnies were the facts that the first step, apparently, in these important transactions was that before the revolution broke out the United States gave an order not to let Colombia anticipate it and prevent it.

Now, Mr. President, was it an unfriendly act? Was it unpatriotic? Was it disloyal, either to my country or to the party which my enemies, at least, say I love with an extravagant affection, that I called attention to the condition of things? That friend of President Roosevelt must be very sensitive indeed who thinks when a slanderous and foul charge is made against him that it is a wound to say at the time that the charge is foul and slanderous, and that the President's character is such that it is not worthy of contradiction, and to add, also, as you have undertaken to contradict it, had you not better make your contradiction complete? If it be a wound, be it so. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend."

I not only, Mr. President, utterly disclaimed any other purpose than this at the time, with as much clearness and vigor of statement as I could put into language, but when the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Ohio put a different interpretation on what I had said I declared that I would not permit, if I could help it, the Senator from Maryland or the Senator from Ohio to put me in a false position.

Mr. President, whether I was right or wrong, the President and the Secretary of State seem to have agreed with me. They have sent in, first a few days after I spoke, and again still later, two messages, giving all the history of the transaction and of our relations with Colombia and New Granada, arguing all these questions very powerfully, so far as they are matters of argument, and accompanied by emphatic and indignant denials of all the imputations to which I referred, expressing at the time my own belief that they were false. The Secretary of State says, what I knew beforehand from my knowledge of his character, that he never said any such thing to that editor, and never talked with him except in the presence of a number of other persons.

The President, in his message January 4, 1902, shows by the history of the transactions that what he did was in precise accordance with what had been done in previous years with entire public approval. He says:

[illegible]

Is there any man on the face of the earth, friend or foe of Theodore Roosevelt, who [illegible] Will the emigrants coming from Portland, Me., to San Francisco or Puget Sound have one among their number who will accuse that brave and honest man of [illegible] And is it not on the whole a good thing for Europe [illegible] or foe of these propositions? Again, if anybody does, I wish he would tell me.

Now, Mr. President, it would be arrogant and presumptuous in me to claim that anything I said in the Senate [illegible] I certainly make no such claim. But I do claim that what the President has said and done vindicates absolutely the propriety of what I myself said and did, and I am able when I read the message of January 4 to repeat what I said in the [illegible] of the Republican State convention of Massachusetts, to which I just [illegible]

Mr. President, if my life shall be spared and my eyes shall see, as I hope and believe if my life shall be spared they will see, another Roosevelt Administration. I shall try, if I have a seat here, to give to President Roosevelt honest and friendly and [illegible] counsel, without stopping to think whether that be the best road either to his favor or to the popular favor of the day. I have learned in my life that while we must do our duty in the present, as God gives us to see it, that the reward for doing duty comes in the future, seldom at the time.

Mr. President, the time for the vote is so near and the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations and other Senators, particularly the Senator from Wisconsin, have so [illegible] that I do not like to enter into an argument now. I will, however, say a word or two upon two questions.

First, I want to speak of the charge that the President has been overhasty in the recognition of the new Republic. That is a matter solely for his discretion. The power of recognition of a foreign government, whether of its separate existence or of its de facto government, must in ordinary cases be with the exclusive discretion of the President, and his action must be absolutely binding upon all other departments of the government. That matter was debated when some members of this [illegible] Congress in recognizing the insurgent government which was then literally in the saddle in Cuba.

Those gentlemen, some of them at any rate, admit their mistake now. This power, though so important, is not an express power. It is a derived power coming from the President's power and duty to appoint and receive ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and his power and duty to see that the laws, including treaties—which are laws—be faithfully executed.

It is impossible that the exercise of this power should wait for the assembling of Congress in those cases that arise in vacation, or should be delayed until the lawmaking power, consisting of three separate and independent authorities, can agree and act. I have thought that cases may be conceived where such a duty and authority may exist in the lawmaking power. It may be desirable sometimes to enact a law which will determine the status of all persons under the authority of our Government in dealing who is the lawful government of a foreign country. But that question does not arise now.

So it is clear to my mind that for every American, whether in Congress or out, the question, What is the status of the government at Panama? has been settled by the President. No question remains for the Senate but whether the proposed treaty be a proper one and for the public interest. Otherwise, if the Executive think one way and we think another, and the House of Representatives perhaps differs from both of us, there can never be a lawful treaty with any power occupying the territory of Panama, and not only the canal must wait, but everything so far as our relations with that country is concerned must be in chaos.

I ought, perhaps, in all candor, to say one other thing. I listened carefully to the interesting argument of my honorable friend from Wisconsin last Saturday. I have read [illegible] all that has been written from the Department of State upon the subject. I am ready to give my assent to the interpretation of the treaty of 1846 with New Granada—the treaty of which the [illegible] Colombia and now, as a consequence of the Panama revolution of the new Republic, to Panama—which has been [illegible] put upon it by my honorable friend from Wisconsin and, if I understand the matter correctly, by the President and given by the President, I suppose, the advice of his able and accomplished Secretary of State.

I do not [illegible] as they do the attitude of previous Administrations upon that question. I think we were bound to guarantee the sovereignty of New Granada and Colombia and now of Panama, since the President has recognized it, over that Isthmus against all foreign powers, including [illegible] This has nothing to do with the Monroe doctrine. Our security is against American States as well as against European powers.

As I interpret the treaty and as I interpret the previous interpretations of our former Administrations, I think, as an equivalent for this valuable and costly right of transit—in which we are more interested than all the rest of the world put together—and the right to compel that Isthmus with our public forces to protect not only the sovereignty, but the [illegible] of Colombia, we were to say to New Granada: "We will guarantee your sovereignty against any unlawful power whatever."

But, Mr. President, the case of the United States, in my opinion, under present conditions is stronger instead of weaker according to my view than according to the view taken by my honorable friend from Wisconsin, as will be seen in a moment.

By the language of the treaty of 1846 the United States guarantees "positively" and "efficaciously" to New Granada—as special compensation for the right of way and the advantage and favors of [illegible] embarrassed at any future time.

Now, as the President stated and as every Senator who has spoken in this discussion has stated, the United States has an interest in keeping that transit peaceful and neutral whatever contending forces might menace it.

A domestic insurrection might be a greater menace and a more permanent interruption than that which would come from any foreign war. Suppose there were an insurrection in Panama and the conditions along that Isthmus were like those of the valley of the Shenandoah or the Rappahannock in our civil war. The United States, if it were to keep the peace of that region, would in a conflict, inevitably take one side or the other in the [illegible] So our Administration says, and so our Administration has acted.

Now, the treaty goes on to say that "in consequence the United States also guarantees in the same manner the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada has and possesses over the said territory." Upon any other construction of the treaty the United States is bound to prevent what it has recognized as the lawful sovereignty from ever asserting its lawful authority. From that would follow either that the rebel authority is always to be recognized or in case of any disturbance that there must be no sovereignty existing there whatever, action or a civil war might last, as many Spanish wars have lasted, for a year or for a generation.

Now, Mr. President, this view is supported by the language of the treaty of 1857, under which both Governments admitted the liability of New Granada for damages caused by a mob at Panama, as is expressly stated in the treaty, which says:

[illegible] to preserve [illegible] the [illegible]

If it were not our right and duty to protect that sovereignty it must follow that the right and duty were not [illegible] We were not bound to do it ourselves, and we were bound by our duty to keep the peace to prevent New Granada or Colombia from doing it herself. This view, as I understand, was the view of Secretary Seward, as expressed in his letter of April 30, 1866, in which he says (I abbreviate his language a little, but give its entire substance): "If the complete and absolute sovereignty of the State of Colombia shall ever be assailed by any power, at home or abroad—that is, by domestic violence or foreign violence—the United States will be ready to cooperate with the Government of their ally to maintain and defend it."

Mr. Fish says, October 27, 1873, in his dispatch to Mr. Keeler, that—

> Our engagement has never been acknowledged to embrace the duty of protecting the road across the Isthmus from the violence of local factions.

It is clear that he is not speaking of a menace to the sovereignty of Colombia. He further says that—

> That protection has been given, but with the consent and at the instance of the local authorities. It is regarded as the undoubted duty of the Colombian Government to protect the road from attacks of local insurgents. The discharge of this duty will be insisted upon.

Mr. Bayard says that—

> Our Government has always recognized the sovereignty and obligation of Colombia in the premises and has expressly disclaimed the duty of protecting the transit against domestic disturbance.

And that—

> Whenever we have sent our forces there it has always been at the instance and with the consent of Colombia.

He is speaking of local disturbances not amounting to an attack on the sovereignty which we ourselves are bound to guarantee.

And President Cleveland, in his annual message of December, 1885, says that our forces which were sent to Colombia by him to keep the transit open were sent there only when the local authority was temporarily powerless and always in aid of the sovereignty of Colombia, and that that fulfillment of our duty was highly appreciated by the Government of Colombia and has been followed by expressions of its satisfaction.

So, Mr. President, so far as I can understand the matter, but for my deference to the great legal authorities who differ from me, it would seem to me to be clear that we entered into a treaty in 1846 by which we bound ourselves to guarantee the sovereignty of Colombia against domestic as against foreign violence. We were to do it at her instance and in her aid.

But, Mr. President, this obligation is, in my judgment, limited in all reason and in all justice by the absolute necessity of the case to the protection and guaranty of that sovereignty only when it is so exerted that it gives no occasion or justification for a lawful resistance by the people over which it is exercised. We did not mean to bind ourselves in violation not only of our own Declaration of Independence, but of the doctrine we had been preaching from the beginning to all South American republics that an oppressed people had no right to overthrow a tyrannical government, and that if they undertook to do it our power was to be pledged to their subjugation.

If we had made a like treaty with Spain in regard to Cuba or in regard to any part of South America, Tehuantepec or Nicaragua or Panama, while under her rule, would it be contended for a moment that she could summon us to support her in aggressions like those of Weyler or those against which the whole South American continent and the islands of the sea had rebelled?

There is an analogous case, well settled by all authorities, in international law which declares precisely the same principle, though adapted to a not very dissimilar state of facts. That is the well-settled doctrine that a treaty obligation for an alliance, offensive and defensive, never binds any nation to support its ally in an unjust war.

Wheaton says that Grotius and the other text writers hold that the casus foederis of a defensive alliance does not apply to the case of a war manifestly unjust, that is, to a war of aggression on the part of the power claiming the benefit of the alliance. And it is even said to be a tacit condition annexed to every treaty made in time of peace, stipulating to afford succors in time of war, that the stipulation is applicable only to a just war. To promise assistance in an unjust war certainly would be an obligation to commit an injustice, and no such contract is valid.

Certainly, Mr. President, this doctrine must apply a fortiori to an engagement by treaty to guarantee sovereignty. No such treaty can be for a moment reasonably claimed to constitute an obligation to maintain a sovereignty against which there is a just and clear ground of revolution. If any power had engaged to maintain the sovereignty of Spain over Cuba, would it be for a moment contended that such a treaty bound the contracting power to maintain a rule so oppressive and tyrannical and cruel that we held ourselves justified, under the law of nations, in interposing for its overthrow?

If, therefore, the statements, so far uncontradicted and unqualified, made by the President and made on the floor of the Senate be true, and Panama had an honest ground for revolution against Colombia, in accordance with the doctrine of which we set the example when we became ourselves a nation, and the doctrine stated to the world in our own Declaration of Independence, then, in my judgment, the treaty was not applicable or of binding force any longer.

Of this also it seems to me that the President must necessarily be the judge. The treaty with New Granada, to the rights and duties of which Colombia succeeded, was the law of the land, binding alike upon the executive and the judicial departments. It was the constitutional duty of the President to see that, like other laws, faithfully executed. It was not a case, from its very nature, where he was bound to await the action of the lawmaking power.

The duty to interpose for the defense of the sovereignty of Colombia in a proper case, like that of preserving the neutrality of the Isthmus, would ordinarily be an obligation of instant necessity. It could not await the assembling of Congress, if it arose in vacation, and it could not await the slow action or the possibility of difference of opinion of a power which required the concurrent action of two legislative bodies and the President himself for its exercise.

I hold, therefore, Mr. President, that although, in my opinion, the treaty of 1846, as expounded again and again since, required us to protect the sovereignty of Colombia against all assailants, either foreign or domestic, and of course bound us to respect it ourselves, yet that that only bound us to guarantee and protect it in its lawful exercise. When it became intolerable, so that its subjects had a fair right of revolution on principles which we ourselves have declared are the fundamental and natural rights of every people, we were no longer bound by the obligation. And the question whether that condition of things had arisen was necessarily and solely for the Executive.

Now, Mr. President, if this doctrine be sound, and I do not think it likely to be questioned, what follows? The moment Panama declared her independence and had established it, of which the President is the sole judge, our obligation to defend the sovereignty over that Isthmus, which had come down from New Granada to Colombia, came down from Colombia to Panama. She had the right to claim the advantage as she had succeeded to the obligation of the treaty of 1846, just as she would have the right to claim the right and succeed to the obligation of the treaty of this year if the Hay-Herran treaty with Colombia had been ratified on both sides and she had accomplished her revolution afterwards.

I had thought of saying a word about the charge against the President of undue haste in the recognition of the new Republic. But I do not think at this late hour that I care to do more than to repeat precisely what I said the other day. I am afraid I did not say it very clearly. I certainly failed to make the very clear intellect of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], whom I love and honor—and who, I sometimes think, likes me a little, too—understand me.

It is said that the President's action is inconsistent with what we demanded of European powers at the time of our civil war. I said, then:

> The question whether and when he shall recognize any government as de facto is, in the first instance, by the Constitution to be a question for the discretion of the President. It is a question which, in the first instance, belongs to the executive department of the Government. I do not think he should wait much longer to give the force of law to dealing with Panama from the date when it became a de facto government, belonging to our civil war.
> During the impeachment of Warren Hastings, when the lawyers in the House of Commons complained of the delays and the slow process of the trial, Burke answered that when those gentlemen called the precedents of their courts to guide for the proceedings of that great tribunal, it was as if a man that for four times a year should seek to measure the period necessary for the gestation of an elephant. Certainly the reverse is true. The elephant that breed once in twenty months can afford no rule for judging of the period of gestation of a dead mouse or a humming bird.

I have been told by some learned naturalists since I spoke that the elephant takes twenty months, instead of twelve, for that interesting process. That is a matter about which I have no knowledge and about which, I presume, Senators who hear me have no knowledge. If that be true, it only strengthens the force of the illustration. What I meant to say was that, as compared with our civil war, with the birth of the great Southern Confederacy, determining the fate of eleven and perhaps fifteen States, and rending asunder a great nation, this matter of the birth of this little Republic was but a field-mouse or humming-bird transaction as compared with the birth of an elephant.

All the facts, all the history, affecting that transaction were well known to the President when he acted. There were reasons for prompt haste growing out of our relations with that Isthmus and by reason of the necessity of having some power with whom we could deal in the pending negotiations relating to the isthmian canal.

Now, Mr. President, the last sentence which I uttered in the speech of last December was this:

> I do not undertake to say—I do not say—that there has been anything so far on the part of our Government liable to criticism or censure. But the American people and the Senate ought to know all the facts. They are, in my judgment, entitled to know the whole case and to know it now, before action be taken upon the Panama treaty. We are entitled to know it in the way pointed by the established system of the Government for a century—by an official communication from the Executive to one or the other House of Congress, and not to get it through some individual Senator, whose information may be colored, unconsciously, by his own wishes or by what he fancies to be the wishes of anybody else.

Whether I were right or wrong in that declaration, every word of it has been abundantly indorsed by the President. He has declared, as I did, that he thinks the charge unworthy of a serious denial. He has declared also, as I did, that having once treated it as worthy of attention it is better to make his denial complete and absolute, as he has done, and enable the American people and foreign critics and the men who are to write history to judge of the transaction by the whole story and not by a hasty narrative which begins on the 2d of November.

I shall, Mr. President, cordially and gladly support this treaty, as I said, when I spoke the other day, it was my hope and expectation to do. I shall share the exultation of the whole people when, in the near future, the construction of the canal shall be begun by the only power on earth competent to complete it, and another glorious chapter in the history of the world will be also another glorious chapter in the history of the Republic.

For fifty-three years, ever since the Republican party was born—before it was baptized or christened—Massachusetts has kept in these seats an unbroken succession of Republican Senators. She has given through them fearless and honest and brave counsel. She has been often criticised. She has been sometimes unpopular. But I think on looking back that my brethren will agree with me that the country has been on the whole better off, and that the Republican party has on the whole profited by the fact that she has put no bridle or muzzle upon the lips or the tongue of the man she has chosen to represent her. In general you have come round to her way of thinking, and have followed—I will not say her lead, for that is too much—but her advice.

I count myself the humblest and the least worthy of the men she has selected to represent her. I have differed, as have my predecessors, sometimes temporarily from by brethren, whom I love and honor; but the people have kept me here, not only longer than any other in the Senate or House of Representatives for a consecutive term of service and longer than any other Massachusetts Senator, but longer than any other man now in public life in this country.

I have tried to be faithful to her traditions and to represent worthily as I might her deliberate opinions. I have tried, if I might, to bring it about that this great transaction, greatest in our history save only the achievement of our independence and the abolition of slavery, be performed in a way to enhance the pure fame of my country at home and abroad, that it shall owe nothing to power but everything to justice.

So, Mr. President, I not only find no difficulty in giving my vote for this treaty, but I give it with an unqualified pleasure and satisfaction.

I repeat what I said on the 17th of December:

> No man in this country desires more eagerly than I do. I doubt if there be a man living who desires it eagerly as I do—to support the Administration, and to act with my Republican associates in this matter. I desire the success of the project. It is one of the great transactions of the century, in the progress of humanity, bringing nations together and making the whole world kin.
> I hope it is a laudable ambition—at any rate it is my ambition—that this may be accomplished in my time by the party with which I have acted from my youth and by the Administration of my choice. I have said to my friends, time before, to me than that it should be accomplished on the first day of March. I had supposed I had the right to speak so in confidence and without pretense to friend. It was clear enough to me that it could not be accomplished in advance of that time.

I added then what I desire to repeat now:

> But let this great transaction be wrought in the great way which alone is worthy of it. Let it be brought to pass, if not unanimously, at least by the votes of all parties and the united authority of the people. If it cannot be done, let it be done, at least let it be without the taint or suspicion of national dishonor.

Mr. President, I am happy to believe that this great transaction is to be wrought in the great way which alone is worthy of it. It is to be brought to pass, if not absolutely, at least almost absolutely, by the unanimous consent of all parties and the united action of all the people. I believe it will come to pass without national dishonor. I may perhaps deceive myself, but I believe I have done something to remove from the transaction any taint or suspicion of national dishonor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have listened to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] with that delight which a high order of intellectual effort always imparts, in this case with the added pleasure that I am in full accord with all he has said about the question under consideration, however it may be as to his criticisms upon myself for the speech I made in answer to him when he spoke in December last.

I regret myself somewhat unfortunate, Mr. President, with respect to this controversy in so far as there is one between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself. I had been otherwise engaged when he made his former speech to which reference is made and came into the Senate Chamber only as he took the floor and commenced to speak. I was not aware he intended to make a speech. I was not aware he had introduced the resolutions to which he spoke. I knew nothing about that speech except only as I gathered it as he delivered it. I undertook to make an answer to it. It was necessarily impromptu. It was necessarily based on what I understood the Senator from Massachusetts at that time to say.

If I misunderstood him in any respect, as the Senator in his speech claims I then did misunderstand him, I am not alone in that misunderstanding. I have turned to the RECORD, and I refer to it only that I may the better assure the Senator, and place it in the RECORD, that I did not intend at that time to misrepresent him, as I would not under any circumstances knowingly or intentionally misrepresent anyone. When the Senator concluded his speech, which I find in the RECORD of December 17 last, he was succeeded immediately by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who seems to have understood the purport of the Senator's speech precisely as I did. I quote from the speech made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] on that occasion:

> Mr. President, I think the country is to be congratulated that again the Senator from Massachusetts, a great leader on the floor of the Republican party, whose reputation is world-wide, has declared the sentiments that have been expressed in this body time and time again. When some question arises involving the honor of the American people he has declared, time and time again, that no other Senator ought to join the minority in charging the conduct of the Executive, even when it trenches upon the duties of the Senate or of Congress, or attempting, without the consent of Congress, by an improper joint resolution, to involve the country in war.

Whether or not the Senator from Maryland was justified in employing that language in making his answer to the Senator from Massachusetts will appear from a study of what had been said by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio will also remember that I at once rose and said that I could not permit the Senator from Maryland to put me in a false position.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I remember that very well.

Mr. HOAR. I disclaimed it at the time.

Mr. FORAKER. But the question remained then, notwithstanding what the Senator from Massachusetts said, and remains now, whether or not a fair construction and interpretation of the language then employed by the Senator from Massachusetts warranted what the Senator from Maryland said.

It is perfectly clear from the language then employed by the Senator from Maryland that he understood the Senator from Massachusetts to be making an attack upon the President of the United States, at least to be severely criticising him, because of what had been done under his direction in the Panama affair. Was he or not justified in that? We shall see in a moment.

After the Senator from Maryland had concluded I made the remarks which have been referred to. I have stated how I came to make them: that they were made on the spur of the moment in answer to the speech as I understood it. I knew at the time when I rose to speak that I was not alone among the Republicans in this Chamber in the view I entertained as to the character of speech the Senator from Massachusetts had made. A number of Senators had expressed to me as their opinion of what he had said precisely what I understood him to have said. I rose, therefore, to answer, having in my mind exactly the view as to the character of speech made by the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator from Maryland had expressed.

But I did not answer as the Senator from Maryland did. I contented myself not with opposing the resolutions—I had no objection to them—but with stating in a prefatory way that I thought these resolutions should have been offered and the speech should have been made in executive session, because at that time we had pending in the Senate—it was just then, I believe, in the Committee on Foreign Relations—a treaty with Panama with respect to which all of those questions were necessarily raised; and if any additional information or evidence or knowledge was desired by any Senator, it could have been secured by asking for it in executive session, where I think it properly belonged, as well as by asking for it in open session. And it occurred to me that that was where the resolution should have been offered and there, if anywhere, where the speech should have been made.

I was not alone in that opinion, Mr. President. The Senator from Massachusetts himself seems to have had the same kind of an impression, for one of the first paragraphs of his speech on that occasion was the statement that if as he proceeded any Senator should think his remarks more appropriate in executive session he would yield at any time for such a motion to be made. I think not only did the Senator from Massachusetts feel that at least in all probability the speech should be made in executive session, but I think every member on this side of the Chamber was in accord with me in that opinion. Therefore it is that, so far as the prefatory part of my remarks on that occasion is concerned, all that I said was entirely justified.

I then came to discuss what the Senator had said, not at any length, for I simply called attention to the fact that he had read a lot of telegrams—all of which are set out here in the RECORD—and from those telegrams which he had just read he had drawn a conclusion. Let me read the language, that I may be accurate. I said:

> He reads a lot of telegrams and draws therefrom an inference, which he states as his opinion, to the effect that the President, notwithstanding having read and quoted from telegrams from which he thought only one conclusion could be drawn, and notwithstanding his just confidence in his word and in his honor, was not proceeding in such a way as to take issue with it, and he draws from that the inference that there was no connivance or intrigue in regard to the matter, was not proceeding in such a way that no other conclusion could be drawn therefrom.
> Now, Mr. President, as I read I seem to see before me the image of our duty and obligation as Republican Senators. Pursuant to the treaty across the isthmus, I see no occasion for such a construction, any inference except only that the President of the United States was about to do, in a patriotic way, his duty as the President of the United States.

Then I was interrupted by the Senator from Massachusetts, who claimed that I had misrepresented him. That brings us back to the question which we have just now been discussing and of which I trust we have made disposition. I did not intend to misrepresent him. I do not think now I did misrepresent him. I understood

Mr. FORAKER. Well.

Mr. HOAR. I accompanied what I said with an expression of my indignant disbelief in any such thing, but I said the President had begun his narrative at a point which did not repel it.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true. If the Senator will bear with me a minute he will not differ with me, I take it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said, if he will pardon me, that I drew that conclusion.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me say——

Mr. HOAR. If any honest and candid man will look back he will see that I expressed my indignant disbelief and said that the President was the last man in the world to do such a thing, and that his own character did not make it worth while for him to contradict it. But I then said, "You have sent in a story beginning on the 4th of November, instead of sending in the whole, and we want the whole."

Mr. FORAKER. That is true. I am coming to say all that.

Mr. HOAR. I was calling attention, not that I believed in it, for I said I did not, but to the fact that there were people who were made uneasy by it.

Mr. FORAKER. What I said was that the Senator read a lot of telegrams and then stated as his conclusion deduced therefrom thus and so.

Mr. HOAR. Read what I did say.

Mr. FORAKER. I am about to read it.

Mr. HOAR. Read it and see.

Mr. FORAKER. I so understand it. The Senator, after reading all these telegrams, said:

> So it is clear, if this be the whole story that we have in these documents, that at least twenty-four hours, perhaps forty-eight hours, before the time when the President of the United States had proclaimed the intention of our government to prevent the establishment of a revolution from doing anything in anticipation of the revolution to prevent it.

Now, after reading these telegrams he said: "If this be the whole story, then thus and so." In another part of the same speech he referred to the fact that I referred to in my remarks in answer to his, that the President had disclaimed more than once on behalf of the Government and every official connected with the Administration that there had been any connivance, or any intrigue, or any complicity whatever to bring about any such result. I was speaking, Mr. President, in that connection about these telegrams and about the conclusion the Senator deduced therefrom. I was not unmindful of the fact, but referred to it, that the Senator did say in that same speech, notwithstanding he had quoted telegrams from which he thought only one conclusion could be deduced, that he had such high regard for the President and such implicit confidence in his word and in his honor that he did not believe that was the whole story.

But how did the Senator from Massachusetts proceed? After having read these telegrams and after having made the statement that it appeared from these telegrams that we had taken these steps to prevent Colombia from doing anything in anticipation of this revolution to prevent it, the Senator used this language. This was the kind of language which impressed itself on my mind at that time: that gave to my mind the impression as to the character of the Senator's speech, to which I made answer as I did:

> Now, Mr. President—
> Having read the telegrams and made that statement—
> I want to know, I think the American people want to know, and have a right to know, whether this is a city policeman—
> Referring to the United States—
> instructed to keep the peace on that isthmus, seeing a man about to attack another, because he has already had some unpleasant words with the man attacked, so that he could not defend himself, seizing the assailant from behind, thrusting a pistol to secure from the assailant the pocketbook of the victim, on the ground that he was de facto the owner?

To whom did that language apply? Of whom was that language spoken? Were we not warranted in drawing the conclusion from the Senator's statement that the telegrams he read showed what he claimed they showed, and from his statement—this figure of speech about a policeman—were we not warranted in coming to the conclusion that the Senator was making an attack on the President which, if we meant to defend the Administration, it was our duty then and there to take issue with? But how did we take issue with it? I said, in answer to that:

> He reads a lot of telegrams and draws therefrom an inference, which he states as his opinion, to the effect that the President, notwithstanding having read and quoted from telegrams from which he thought only one conclusion could be drawn, and notwithstanding his just confidence in his word and in his honor, was not proceeding in such a way as to take issue with it.
> Now, Mr. President, as I read I seem to see before me the image of our duty and obligation as Republican Senators. Pursuant to the treaty across the isthmus, I see no occasion for such a construction, any inference except only that the President of the United States was about to do, in a patriotic way, his duty as the President of the United States.

the Senator to say then, and as I read his speech now I understand him to have said then, that these telegrams which he read told what he thought was an imperfect story, and that from these telegrams there was only one conclusion to be deduced, and that was one which justified criticism of the President and criticism of the Administration.

I did not so read them. I called the Senator's attention to a fact which he had already referred to in his speech of that date—namely, that we had before us not only these telegrams to construe and interpret as on their face they might read, but we had also before us the statements of the President.

The Senator from Massachusetts had referred to the fact that the President had caused to be published in one of the newspapers of the country an extract from the message which he had prepared to send to the special session of Congress in November, but which he did not transmit to Congress because it became unnecessary by reason of these events, but which he had prepared before those events and afterwards had published to show that he was telling the truth when he said to the country, and said officially, and said in every other way in which he was called upon to speak, that there was no complicity, no intrigue, no connivance.

I said in that connection that the objection I took to the Senator's speech was that, boiled down to the fine point, he was calling upon the President of the United States to prove that he had been telling the truth, and I did not think that was becoming. I did not think so then; I do not think so now. I think we had a right to judge the President—as the language ascribed to him by the Senator from Massachusetts shows that he judged him then, and judges him now—as a man of honor, as a man of truth, as a man of patriotic purpose, as a man of lofty character, who would spurn to do that which the interpretation that I put upon what the Senator said amounted to an insinuation of.

Now, that is not all that the Senator from Massachusetts said. I speak of this at more length than I perhaps should, simply because of the unqualified and unlimited respect and admiration I have for the Senator from Massachusetts. I think all he said in praise of his predecessors in the office of United States Senator from Massachusetts was worthily and befittingly said. I will go further and say in this presence what I know every member of this body on either side of the Chamber will concur in, that great as were Webster and Sumner and the other great men to whom he referred, they were not so great but that the senior Senator from Massachusetts is a worthy successor in that great line. There is not a man here, on either side of this Chamber, who does not respect him for his great learning, for his great ability, for his zeal in the public welfare, for his fidelity to duty in all the relations of life, both public and private. When a man for whom I have such unbounded regard thinks I have in any degree whatever misrepresented him or misunderstood him, I want to take some pains to show him that I at least did not think I was doing so.

Now, after the Senator had made the remarks I have quoted, he proceeded—I am not reading all—first to speak in high eulogy of the President, to whom he had just referred, as I supposed, as a policeman who had manacled a man who was about to be struck and then taken his pocketbook away from him and claimed it by some sort of de facto right, and then he said:

> Now, Mr. President, as the matter stands on the information given to the House in Document No. 8, the shores of Colombia were patrolled by armed vessels of the United States in order that the Government—the Government of the country—should not take any steps to prevent it.
> It does not appear in that document where or from whom our Administration, through information that led to these orders,
> According to the documents sent to the House to the President the first charge of any revolution that came either from Panama or Colombia, any organized revolution, came November 3, the day the revolution happened. As the matter is now put in the official communication to Congress, the revolution was known at Washington before it was known on the Isthmus. All that the Government, by its own statement, seems to have done in its anxiety that treaty should not be destroyed was not to take measures that would prevent revolution, but to take measures that revolution should be prevented. I quote from the Secretary of Navy, transmitting to Congress a copy of the instructions to the commanders of the naval vessels, which I find in the most sacred and published form, issued by the United Government of the country, imposing its own jurisdiction, its own territory, that it must prevent a breach of its peace and organized revolution, or attempt at revolution.
> Mr. President, is there any doubt that, as now standing unexplained, this was an act of war?

And so I might read on at greater length. It is true that the Senator from Massachusetts did mention in that speech his high regard for the President.

He did speak of him as a man in whom he had implicit confidence. He did speak of him as a man who appeared to him, as he knew him to be, incapable of that which these telegrams showed, as he construed them. But, Mr. President, of what avail is all that when accompanied with the Senator's interpretation of them, coupled with the declaration that they admit of no other interpretation than that which he put upon them, as I understood him. And that, Mr. President, remember all the while, in the face of the President's declaration, to which the Senator in that very speech referred, that there had been no complicity and no intrigue and no connivance.

I had [illegible] and every other Senator on this side [illegible] to have [illegible] at that time, in the truth, of what the President said, and that it was [illegible] to require him to produce [illegible] that he had had [illegible] and to the Congress of the United States.

Now, the Senator says that he is entitled to credit for having [illegible] answer. I do not deny but that he is, and I gladly accord it to him. But I still remain of the opinion that it could just as well have been [illegible] and it would have been [illegible] properly. There was no [illegible] when the President [illegible] the Congress of the United States or the American people any information in regard to this matter—never one moment—and as soon as he learned that there was a disposition to have more light [illegible] had been given he directed that every [illegible] be fully informed. The President could have done that just as readily had he been [illegible] and we would have had [illegible] but what I think will be found in the [illegible] of a treaty which ought to be considered [illegible] in executive session.

Mr. President, as I said when I began, I agree with the Senator in [illegible] so far as he saw fit to criticise what I [illegible] I agree with the estimation he has given us here of the President of the United States—of his great ability and [illegible] as a worthy official to be the head and Chief Magistrate of this great Republic.

I agree with him that all that has been done is consistent with honor and a patriotic purpose and that there is nothing from beginning to end that can be legitimately criticised. The only thing I differ with the Senator about is the fact, as he has expressed it, that he seems to think I was liable [illegible] for taking the view I expressed on a [illegible] which he had seen fit then to say. I rose merely to correct that and to say that I had no idea then of misrepresenting him. I have no idea of misrepresenting him now, nor would I under any circumstances misrepresent any Senator or [illegible] where I regard [illegible] to deceive [illegible] misrepresent himself by [illegible] when he is [illegible] the same [illegible] I undertook then to deal fairly with this matter. I am only now [illegible] if it be necessary I should do so in order that I may continue to enjoy undiminished the friendship, [illegible] good will, respect, and regard of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, my honorable friend from Ohio, I have no doubt with absolute sincerity, expressed respect for me, and what I have to complain of is that he [illegible] disposition of mind [illegible] and I [illegible] and say.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. [illegible] was [illegible] the Senator from [illegible] had [illegible] the President and in the same speech so severely criticised him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. That is what I want to come to.

Mr. President, the Senator [illegible] I said [illegible] I do not [illegible] I have [illegible] not from any desire to do so, but [illegible] in a very critical frame of mind [illegible] him to ask him a question.

Mr. HOAR. [illegible] if you like.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator kindly tell me in this connection [illegible] of the policeman?

Mr. HOAR. I am going to tell you.

Mr. FORAKER. I may have misunderstood that figure of speech.

Mr. HOAR. I did not [illegible] President. I referred to the attitude in which he [illegible] of a great volume. [illegible] were not surprised [illegible] and numerous [illegible] wrong and [illegible] He said it was as if a man should quote the passage of Scripture, "The fool hath said in his heart. There is no God," and [illegible] the words "The fool hath said in his heart." The Senator from Ohio takes my sentences, reads half and leaves out the rest, and then he undertakes to represent what I said, again and again and again.

I said of a story of a series of transactions which had been going on a long time, you have only a page which begins in November. Suppose, for instance, a man was giving his description of a fight, and he should say that A struck B half a dozen times and then B struck A, and the Senator should leave out the first sentence and put in as the whole story that B struck A. So it is as if he were telling the story and somebody should get up and say: "You have put in the previous thing which provoked that blow, you have left it to appear that this man committed an unprovoked assault."

Now, just see how the Senator goes on. He reads what I said regarding telegrams, and he went on and he says the Senator [illegible] that A [illegible] has been guilty of [illegible] I [illegible] of my indignant disbelief that the President had [illegible] or unworthy conduct. I said he is the last man in the [illegible] to do it, and [illegible] is so foul that, in my opinion, it is not worth the while to reply to it. That was what I said.

Then I went on to say that the President has undertaken partly to contradict it by giving a message to the press which does not contradict it. So he has shown that he thinks it ought to be contradicted, but he has not yet contradicted it. Now, if the Senator from Ohio will give me his attention, I said——

Mr. FORAKER. I am giving the Senator attention; and the Senator, I know, does not mean to misrepresent me, either.

Mr. HOAR. I do not mean to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. What I said on the former occasion and what I [illegible] telegrams [illegible]

Mr. HOAR. No; I said I did not draw [illegible]

Mr. FORAKER. I know, and I stated [illegible] that in another connection, but I was [illegible] I was contending [illegible] the telegrams did [illegible] ent.

Mr. HOAR. I said that the telegram [illegible] alone did not [illegible] the previous story, which completely [illegible] the President, and would do so in my [illegible] I said.

[illegible] and with——

Mr. [illegible] also [illegible] on the President [illegible] of his message which the Senator [illegible] had published for the express purpose of showing [illegible] we had the President's own [illegible] grams, and I was interpreting [illegible] in the light of what the President said.

[illegible] is another in[illegible] ter. The President did not contradict it. He did not disclaim it. He did not say a word [illegible] except that he gave to the press a message in which he proposed to take possession of that canal by a different right. That is all. Then the Senator gets up and says that after the President had indignantly contradicted it I put this question. I called attention to the fact that the President had not indignantly contradicted it; that he had only sent in a message which only impliedly, by indirection, perhaps, would [illegible] with it after he had contradicted it. I said you [illegible] to contradict it, but if you are going to do so, contradict it plainly and fully.

Now, that is what I find fault with the Senator from Ohio for. He represents me to-day as having said these things after a contradiction by the President——

Mr. FORAKER. I said it——

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish the sentence; then I will listen to the Senator.

I said the President has shown that they need attention, but instead of sending in a contradiction he sends in merely this [illegible] and I th[illegible] thing is false. He is the last man in the world to be guilty of it; he is utterly incapable [illegible] incapable of it that he does not need to notice it; but when he does notice it it is better for him that he should give the whole story and that [illegible] it. Now, after sa[illegible] said all this after the President had indignantly contradicted it. I deny it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know that I used the word "indignantly."

Mr. HOAR. Yes, you did.

Mr. FORAKER. Possibly I did. If I did I will stick to it. [Laughter.] It was indignantly denied, and not only denied indignantly, but with a good deal of feeling.

Mr. HOAR. By me?

Mr. FORAKER. No; not by you.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. Up to the time I had made that speech I was the first man on the face of the globe who had given this infamous charge against the President a flat and indignant contradiction.

Mr. FORAKER. It may be that that is true so far as speeches in the Senate are concerned, but I quite differ from the Senator as to that. Here is the language that was employed by the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; I like to hear him. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. I am always delighted to hear the Senator. Here is the language I referred to. When in the speech of December 17 I referred to the fact that the President had entered a denial of any complicity, I said in that connection that he had done so in one instance by publishing an extract from his message which he had prepared to send to the special session, but did not send.

Mr. HOAR. And he did not contradict it at all.

Mr. FORAKER. Here is what the Senator said about it. It shows that the Senator understood it was being indignantly contradicted, and I did not imagine that the Senator would take any other view at this time or express any other view from the language he then employed. The Senator said, referring to that fact:

He has taken the uncommon step of communicating to the press extracts from a message which he had prepared to send to Congress, written before the revolution occurred in Panama, in order that the American people might know that it was impossible that he had expected it and still more impossible that he had done anything to bring it about.

Now, Mr. President, what I said on that occasion and what I say again is——

Mr. HOAR. Read the last sentence of my language.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I will read it; but does the Senator qualify that or contradict it?

Mr. HOAR. I explain it.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, let us see.

Mr. HOAR. Read what I said about his having decided otherwise.

Mr. FORAKER. I will read it.

I did not think myself that such an assurance to the public was at all necessary. If the President had sent for any member of the Senate and had proposed to show him that message, he would, I think, have been [illegible] there was no occasion for him to seek to prove by any evidence beyond that of his own character that he had had nothing to do with any indirection or artifice. But he decided otherwise. And having decided otherwise——

I suppose that is enough.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I wanted.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg pardon.

Mr. HOAR. Now read the next sentence

Mr. FORAKER. You will find me entirely accommodating. I simply did not want to take time.

And having decided otherwise, I suppose he will like to have the important evidence afforded by the communication to the House of Representatives and by the message at the beginning of the present session made complete, and whatever is meeting to a complete answer to the charges which have been made in the press supplied.

That is the language to which I referred. I said the Senator knew when he made that speech, December 17, that the President had entered a denial of complicity and intrigue on the part of this Government, and I referred in support of that to the fact that the Senator had quoted the publication by the President of an extract from his message with the purpose of thereby making a denial, and that it was so understood by the Senator himself.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, can not the Senator see the difference between saying that the President had entered a denial and pointing out, as I did, that all he had done in order that this might be contradicted was to send in a message which did not afford a contradiction?

The President has not said anything about it beyond that, and I called his attention and the attention of the Senate to the fact that there was no denial there, that the evidence was incomplete, and that it was imperfect evidence. I did not say what the Senator keeps saying over and over again I said, that the President had entered a denial. He had not entered a denial.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, what I have said over and over again is that the President had denied it.

Mr. HOAR. That I deny.

Mr. FORAKER. This is not the only case in which he denied it. It had been denied repeatedly before that time. It had been denied from the State Department on behalf of the President. The President has not sent in a message to Congress making an explicit denial, but the President had made this publication, which I understood and the Senator from Massachusetts understood to be intended to show that denial. The Senator so interpreted it in his speech. The Senator had no question in his mind when he made that speech but that President Roosevelt had denied complicity and intrigue.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. FORAKER. I refer to the Senator's language.

Mr. HOAR. There had been, to my knowledge, no denial from the State Department and no denial from the President.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator misunderstood me. There was no official denial. I did not mean that.

Mr. HOAR. There was no denial, official or unofficial, anywhere. The President undoubtedly sent a document in order that the people might infer that he expected at that time to deal with this thing in another way, and I got up and said I do not believe a word of these charges; they are foul, infamous, inconsistent with the President's character; but he has undertaken not to deny them explicitly, not even to tell the whole story, but only to tell a very small part of it, which does not accomplish the contradiction that he proposes.

Now, I want to say one thing——

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to be misunderstood and I do not want to be misrepresented. When I say that it was denied by the State Department, I do not mean that Secretary Hay, as Secretary of State, published a card with his name signed to it, but I do mean to say that in the papers it had been published repeatedly on authority received from there that there was no truth in these stories. The very first moment that the charge was made it was met with such a denial.

Mr. HOAR. Now, I want to put against the affirmation of the Senator from Ohio my own explicit affirmation to the contrary.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, we will look at the newspapers.

Mr. HOAR. Not only was there no such denial, formal or informal, authorized or unauthorized, before I made my speech, but, to the best of my knowledge and belief, I never heard of it. Will the Senator set out the paper where it occurred? In what document?

Mr. FORAKER. I will say in all the papers. Does not the Senator remember that when the President published the message he referred to, and what he said he understood to be intended for a denial, it was commented on in all the papers of the country?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know. I never heard of it, and I do not believe it now.

Mr. FORAKER. I am talking about the publication of the extracts from the special message. I said when it was published——

Mr. HOAR. I have the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I am asking a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must call the attention of Senators to the rules. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOAR. It shows how confused the Senator's memory is in these things. He has been talking all the time of the publication of the message.

Mr. FORAKER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. He was talking of the State Department, and what he says was published in all the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. HOAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I have made no such statement as that. I said the denial had been made over and over again, and I thought it had been. That I can substantiate without any trouble. I called attention to one of the denials, and I called attention to it because the Senator himself had called attention to it, and had placed an interpretation upon it, to wit, the publication of the message, as I said a moment ago, in all the papers, and the message when it was published was discussed and was understood to have the effect or as intended to have the effect which the Senator himself places on it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, can not the Senator see the difference between saying that I do not believe any such thing about the President is true, and that he has sent in a document intended to operate as a denial? But when we come to look at it, it does not deny, it is not a denial, and therefore he had better send a denial that is a little more explicit.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; I see that distinction, and I readily concur. I am talking about the specific interpretation the Senator himself made.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, that is the way the Senator from Ohio has treated this subject, and the way he has treated it to-day. I repeated these telegrams. The first thing in that history was the telegram to one of our naval officers that if Colombians or anybody else should attempt to land troops—of course nobody but Colombia would attempt to land troops—on that Isthmus they should be prevented. That was the beginning of the story; and I said, arguing for a resolution of inquiry which I had been prevented from getting through, is it not true that the American people have a right to know?

Then I went on to add in the next sentence that it was an affront almost to ask such a question; that the President was incapable of such a thing, and it is not worth noticing except that the President has noticed it, and he has noticed it without any explicit denial, and he has noticed it merely by saying, "Here is a document," and when you look at that document it does not deny it. Then I went on to say that as the statement is now left the revolution was known at Washington before it was known on the Isthmus.

Then I went on to add that the President having decided otherwise, that is, to make a statement—

[illegible] the strongest evidence afforded by the communication [illegible] and by the message of the President [illegible] and what seems to be a [illegible] which have been made in the press supplied.

Then I said at the close of my speech that I did not undertake to say there was anything that had been done by our Government [illegible].

Now, Mr. President, the Senator undertakes to criticise me because I did not offer the resolution in executive session. The reason why I did not bring it up in executive session was because I supposed it would go through as a matter of course. Does the Senator now claim that that resolution, as I offered it, was not one which in the ordinary course in the Senate would go through as a matter of course?

Mr. FORAKER. No: I do not.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. As the Senator knows, I was then engaged in an [illegible] before a committee and I was not present at the sessions of the Senate at that time, and I did not know that any objection was made to such a resolution. I did not know it had been offered. But still I think it would have been better, having a treaty before us, if it had been offered in executive session.

Mr. HOAR. Now, then, Mr. President, the Senator admits that the resolution I offered should have gone through in the ordinary proceedings as a matter of course. In fact, that resolution was unobjected at every point, and if I was going to get it adopted at all I was bound to state the reasons for it. I stated them, and I put into words my emphatic belief in the utter righteousness of the President's conduct all through and that the charges against him were totally false. I made that speech with a view of bringing out what the speech or something else has brought out, and though the Senator from Ohio has done me injustice in many things, he has at least done me justice in one thing, for which I thank him, and that is that what I have done in this matter has been a public advantage, an advantage to the President and the party to which I belong. Now, if that be true (though I am afraid the Senator said it in the kindness of his heart and not that he believed it was wholly true), I am perfectly content to suffer any personal consequences now or hereafter.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not say anything in my kindness of heart; I said it because I believed it, but I accompanied it with the statement that I thought the same good could have been subserved if the Senator had offered his resolution and brought on the debate in executive session, and that I thought it more properly belonged there. That is what I said in that connection.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then I have got the admission of my chief antagonist and the manifestation of all the rest that I have done a great public service in this matter. I am quite content to bear any personal consequences from any quarter.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not admit that the Senator has rendered any such service. I have been rendered by any Senator who had called for any additional information. I mean by that simply that there has never been at any time any withholding of information by the President, or the Secretary of State, or anybody else in regard to this matter.

The President has furnished, whenever called upon, promptly, all that he has been asked for, and when he learned that more was desired he volunteered it, as he had a right to do under the Constitution. It is his privilege as well as his duty to communicate with the Senate and send us information whenever he may see fit or whenever he may deem it good for the public interest to do so. That would have been done anyhow. It was, therefore, no difficult service that has been rendered, yet it is a service in the fact that we have more light than we had at that time.

And now only one more word. The Senator quits by referring to the injustice, as he terms it, that I have done him. Mr. President, I think the Senator has by that remark done me an injustice, and that I have not done him any injustice. I have undertaken to point out to the Senator that what I said in the Senate on December 17 in answer to him was based upon his statement as to the effect of certain telegrams which he read. I called attention to the fact that he in fact spoke in emphasis the President in the broadest terms. I called attention to the fact that he said he had every confidence in the truth and character of the President, in his honor and patriotism.

Mr. HOAR. Those telegrams were only a part, and I said that when the rest of the story came I believed the President would be completely exonerated.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, I know; but, Mr. President, the trouble with the Senator is—and he just now gives away his whole case by employing the word "exonerated"—he thought the President could exonerate himself; in other words, the exception I took to that speech was that it was criticising the President without having a just right to do so, for I did not read those telegrams as the Senator from Massachusetts did. I said I read those telegrams in the light of the President's statement and the President's denials—denials made on behalf of the President and the Administration. The President can not go and sign an interview, sign a card, or sign a public statement as ordinary individuals are privileged to do. He is not expected to do so. But we all know how the Administration puts out information; and every Senator here knew that the Administration had denied the charge that any intrigue or connivance had been resorted to.

The Senator from Massachusetts referred to the fact that the President had published a part of his message with that purpose in view. He did not think, perhaps, the President should have done so; but he understood that to be a denial on the part of the President of that charge, and he so expressed himself in his speech.

All I said was that I read the telegrams from which the Senator drew his criticism in the light of that denial of the President, and in view of that denial and other denials that had been made. I had absolute faith that all the Administration had done was above and beyond criticism; and the Senator himself, in the most admirable speech which he has made to-day, has said he believes that. With that I think I am content.

I did not say that the Senator had criticised the President without at the same time stating that he did not believe those attacks, but believed that full information would bring out an exoneration. What I was complaining of was that the Senator was criticising the President for that which he had done, in the face of the President's denial. I meant that, but I had certainly no intention of doing the Senator any injustice.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, one sentence more. I think the Senator's last statement of what I said in regard to what the President said is incorrect. It is not worth while in contradicting a statement to point out something in a document as a denial that for the purpose of contradiction is not competent, and I stated that we had better have the rest of the story, not criticising the President.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in answer to that I have only this to say: The Senator from Massachusetts certainly knows, as we all do, that the President would be busy processing signed cards all the while if he had to negative in that way all the charges made against his Administration. In other words, it is the more dignified, the more becoming, and the more usual course which the President has taken. I do not think that I ever saw a statement such as the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think should have been put out by the President in regard to a charge of this kind.

Mr. HOAR. On the contrary, Mr. President, immediately after I made that speech the President sent in a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEVERIDGE in the chair). The Chair must state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the reporters can not hear him when he addresses the Senator from Ohio instead of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio has been addressing me, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, of course the President can always communicate with Congress officially, and that is the only way in which he can with propriety communicate. He had communicated officially; he had sent to the House of Representatives the information asked for. The Senator from Massachusetts read it one way; I read it another, perhaps due to the fact that I attached more importance to the denial, as I understood it to be, than to that we have been discussing.

But whether it was the one thing or the other, the point that I made then and the point I make now is that I was commenting simply on the interpretation placed by the Senator upon those telegrams. True, the Senator went on to extol the President as having a true and patriotic purpose, but still the charge was made and remains; but those telegrams, when properly interpreted, amount to only what I contend for.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I do not intend to take any part in the laundry work which has been going on on the opposite side of the Chamber, but while the imperfectly washed Republican linen is drying on the line I wish to submit a few remarks on another branch of the question.

I will take occasion, however, to call attention to one passage in the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which I believe was not quoted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and which, as I understand it, is not affected by anything the Senator from Massachusetts has said to-day. In the course of that speech the Senator from Massachusetts said:

> Do you think it well to proclaim to the sixteen republics at the south that if they are weak, or even if they are liable to frequent revolution, we will deal with them hereafter, if we fancy it for our interest, as we are charged with having dealt with Colombia?

And again:

> Are we willing to say that if this revolution had not happened we meant to take that strip of territory by the strong hand and to pay Colombia what we thought its proper damages? Do you claim that every South American nation holds its property subject to our right of eminent domain?

That, Mr. President, was a very distinct criticism of the President. That must have referred, I think, to a certain passage in the President's message, and it has not been affected by anything the Senator from Massachusetts has said to-day by way of disclaimer of any intention to reflect upon the President, for the President in his message did expressly declare a desire or a purpose, if necessary, to seize the territory of Colombia by force, and without asking any other consent except a compelled and enforced consent.

It is also true that the President in his message admits or declares that he was anticipating an insurrection in Panama as a possible means of securing the Panama Canal. He admits that he was looking forward to that event: and in the very nature of things, Mr. President, if he expected to secure the Panama Canal by means of an insurrection there, he must have intended to aid that insurrection, because in no other way could that insurrection have possibly been successful, or, at least, it could not have been successful within the time necessary to accomplish the purpose he had in view.

It is also true, Mr. President, that the leading conspirators in Panama did firmly believe in advance that they would have the help of this Government in the event they raised the standard of insurrection, and that they would not have attempted that insurrection if they had not so believed.

It is also true that a French person by the name of Bunau-Varilla, of whom I intend to speak briefly in a little while, gave assurances from the city of Washington or from the city of New York to those conspirators that if they did raise an insurrection, the Government of the United States would help them and that its war ships would be there on time for that purpose.

It is also true that when the insurrection did begin, the war ships were there precisely as the promise had been made that they should be.

Mr. President, what I wish to say now is with reference to that gentleman who gave these assurances in the name of and on behalf of the Government of the United States.

A few days ago I had something to say with respect to this Bunau-Varilla, minister from the new-made Republic of Panama, a citizen of France. I then declared that this person who claims not only to have known the secret purposes of this Government, but to have influenced them, and whose claim is supported by a number of unfortunate coincidences, was one of the very worst of the knaves whose thieving operations bankrupted the old Panama Canal Company. Without cumbering the RECORD with extracts, I asserted that these facts appeared from the official records of his own country, the Republic of France.

As it has been lately intimated that Bunau-Varilla will shortly resign his position as minister from the Republic of Panama and return to France, and that his reason for doing so is that he only desired to serve his French corporation, and that he has accomplished all he desires in that respect, I think it well to show more in detail both the character of the man with whom this Administration has had such intimate relations and the character of the concern which, under the guise of an American minister, he has undertaken to serve.

I shall therefore have printed in the RECORD the extracts from official reports and documents to which I referred. But before doing so I wish to make a brief but clear statement with respect to the operations of this canal company which brought shame and disgrace upon every man in France connected with its management, and which, with change of name, but without change of character, has transferred the field of its activity from France to the United States. From the first to the last scandal and dishonor have attached themselves to all the operations of this company. Whether its field of activity was in France or Panama or the United States the slime of the serpent was over it all.

Corruption fastened itself upon the old Panama Canal Company at its very birth. It was compromised in the beginning by its relations with one Baron De Reinach, a banker and promoter, who maintained corrupt relations with a large number of French newspapers and politicians.

De Lesseps sought in vain to free himself of these associations, relying upon his own reputation as an engineer to secure financial backing for his enterprise. The result was that he found it fiercely assailed by all the influences under De Reinach's control, and he was compelled to surrender. With the active aid of De Reinach, his venal newspapers, and other powers at his command, the scheme obtained great popularity, and $285,000,000 were subscribed to it, chiefly by the French peasantry and small shopkeepers, many of the investments representing the savings of a lifetime.

Of this $285,000,000 about $170,000,000 was corruptly expended in the bribery of French newspapers, cabinet ministers, and members of the French Parliament. About $115,000,000 were nominally expended on the canal work, but about half of this sum went into the pockets of swindling contractors and others, and represented not a single day's work on the canal. Among the worst of these thieving contractors, as I have said, was this man Bunau-Varilla, who has played so large a part in the recent exploits of this Administration, and I beg leave to present now a few extracts from official French publications to show the character of this man.

I have these publications here in the French language, and any French scholar in the Senate who desires to examine them is welcome to do so.

In the report of the trial in Paris of a cabinet minister, several members of the French congress, and certain officials of the old Panama Canal Company, for swindling the honest investors in that company, I find the following statement, under date of March 15, 1893, made by the attorney-general:

> We are now at 1886. At this moment the attitude of M. De Lesseps was so grievous that the secretary-general of the company, an honest man, M. Martin, thus expresses himself before the first chamber of the court:
> "In the course of the month of June, 1886, I learned that pour-parlers had been had with M. Bunau-Varilla to substitute him for a financial company which had been given the concession of the Panama. Some days later I was informed that of the price to be paid to Bunau-Varilla he was to hand over a part of the price of each cubic meter to a third person, who was designated to me as being M. Jacques de Reinach."
> M. Martin then proceeds to say: "As it was my duty to at once inform the management of any rumors which I thought well founded, when some days later the question came up of verifying this [illegible], by the counsel I felt myself unable to continue in the office which had been confided to me."

The attorney-general then added:

> When M. De Lesseps was confronted with this witness he did not contradict the testimony. The witness was asked: "Did you make this statement to M. Charles De Lesseps?" And he answered: "Yes." He was then asked: "What did M. De Lesseps say?" He said: "Nothing; and when I left says the arrangement was to be revised." I repeated to M. Charles De Lesseps [illegible] in my [illegible] M. Reinach [illegible]: Is it not possible to persuade M. De Reinach to [illegible] than 1 franc. [illegible]

Five years later, in 1898, the Chamber of Deputies of France published a report of a commission of inquiry made by its chairman, M. Valle, then a member of the Chamber and now a member of the cabinet. On page 268 of this report is printed the testimony of M. Martin, described by the attorney-general as one of the few honest men who had any connection with this company. I have this report now in my hands, printed, of course, in French, and any Senator here who is a French scholar may look at it and verify the accuracy of the translation. M. Martin says:

> I made two voyages to the Isthmus in 1885 and 1886. I had heard great abuses spoken of, especially of squandering.

He then says:

> M. Bunau-Varilla was substituted for Cuthill & Co. In place of 4 or 5 francs per cubic meter, [illegible] by the ordinary contractors, the scheme was to contract with Bunau-Varilla at the price of 7 francs. I do not recall the exact figures, and I mention them only by way of example to make my point understood. Having been appointed as secretary-general to the meeting of the executive committee on June 2, 1886, M. De Lesseps solicited my approval of the scheme, which I refused, and the same day I wrote my resignation. I owe it to the truth to add, with great regret, that it was a fact within the knowledge of many persons that M. Bunau-Varilla had agreed to make allowances of 1 francs 40 centimes per cubic meter upon twenty millions of cubic meters, being the amount of the contract, whose [illegible] was to be paid to Baron de Reinach. I note, and I do not know whether or not this bargain was carried out.

With respect to this latter statement the attorney-general says:

> Yes; this bargain was carried out, as is shown by the report of the expert at pages 357 and 358. It was even made worse.

The plain meaning of all this is that Bunau-Varilla was substituted for other firms, which had agreed to do the work for 4 or 5 francs per cubic meter, he to receive 7 francs per cubic meter on condition that he would divide the plunder with Baron de Reinach, the corrupt promoter. Mr. President, it is one of the many illustrations of the injustice of fate that Baron De Reinach committed suicide rather than face a trial, while his fellow-thief comes to the United States and is received with honor.

On page 269 of this official report the attorney-general further says:

> Bunau-Varilla, formerly a division director of the works of the Panama Company, became for the occasion the promoter and inventor and, picking up spread the creation of a company composed of his brother, a financier in Paris, and two contractors, and without having his name mentioned put himself at the head of an undertaking for a great price. The price of the cubic meter was suddenly raised with an increase proven here, [illegible] and a series of contracts intelligently conceived gave to his company a premium of [illegible]. They secured fixed allowances for [illegible] for expenses of installation and organization of point amounting to [illegible]. The company, exclusive of written agreements, paid Bunau-Varilla, without competition, sums amounting to 9,500,000 francs.

Mr. President, it needs no comment or exposition to show the significance of these facts. Bunau-Varilla took advantage of his temporary position as director-general to give himself contracts at exorbitant prices for the purpose of enriching himself by plundering the company and wrecking the enterprise.

I have also a statement from the official journal of France of June 22, 1890, a statement made in the course of a debate by M. Jules Delahay, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, which shows that under one of his contracts, in what was called the Paraiso section, Bunau-Varilla excavated 818,500 cubic meters, while he charged and was paid for 1,724,536 cubic meters. This statement is based on the figures of the canal company itself. You may get some faint conception of the enormity of the frauds practiced by Bunau-Varilla upon the company and the honest French investors from the fact that while he was receiving nearly a double price per cubic meter for actual excavations made he was at the same time receiving pay for more than twice the amount of work performed.

The failure of the old company was the inevitable result of such fraudulent transactions, and it went into bankruptcy.

Then in due course came the organization of the new company to save something from the wreckage of the old. This new company appealed in vain to the stockholders of the old company to furnish money to continue the work and keep the concessions they had obtained from Colombia alive. The original investors had lost all their money and all their faith, and refused to contribute. Some other method was necessary to raise the funds.

The official report which I have here says substantially that the tribunal of the Seine appointed a representative of the honest investors in the old Panama Canal Company, with full authority to demand "restitution"—that is the word—from those who had defrauded the company in order to furnish capital to start the new company. The sum fixed upon was 60,000,000 francs, or about $12,000,000, and this sum was to be obtained by forcing the dishonest contractors like Bunau-Varilla to disgorge a part of their stealings. On page 41 of this report it appears that Bunau-Varilla's firm was compelled to disgorge the sum of 2,200,000 francs, or about $425,000.

Other dishonest contractors were compelled to disgorge some larger and some smaller sums—M. Eiffel, for instance, being required to pay 10,000,000 francs, or $2,000,000. They were required to either pay this money into the treasury of the new company or submit to a revision of their accounts, and they chose to pay the money. In this way the $12,000,000 was raised. It was of course a mere bagatelle, so far as completing the canal was concerned, but under the contract with Colombia it was necessary to continue the work to prevent a lapse of the concession. This sum was intended simply to keep the concession alive while the company was attempting to dispose of its rights and properties to the United States.

The company then began an earnest campaign with a view to selling its property to this Government. Its agents and lobbyists fairly swarmed in Washington City to impress upon Congress and upon everybody the superior advantages of the Panama route. Then it was we began to read in some of the newspapers such amazing statements as that the Nicaragua route had been rejected and declared impracticable by the engineering genius of the world. Mr. President, I believe I am warranted in saying that the violent partisanship for the Panama route displayed by some of the newspapers and their utterly false and unfounded assertions with respect to the other route could not have been inspired by any honest or patriotic purpose. And as these knavish contractors began their activity with the beginning of the Panama movement in this country, they continued with increasing energy and increasing audacity to the end.

It was Bunau-Varilla, as the agent of this company, who appeared upon the scene when the treaty with Colombia was about to fail to incite and promote an insurrection in Panama, boldly promising the support of this Government and aiding that insurrection, as has been charged with great circumstantiality of detail, with the money of his French corporation and of French speculators in its securities. It was Bunau-Varilla who hastily concluded a treaty with this Government, no citizen of Panama being allowed a voice in the transaction, though commissioners sent for that purpose were within an hour's ride of Washington.

The activity of these thieving contractors is explained by the fact that they alone are to derive any substantial benefits from the payment we are to make for the rights and property of the canal company. The last chapter in the history of this company closes, as the first chapter began, with a robbery of the honest investors. There was a great deal of simulated indignation in Administration circles over the assumed fact that Colombia was trying to delay action on the treaty until the concession of the canal company should lapse and thus secure for herself the benefits of all the money that had gone into the construction of the canal. The basis of this righteous indignation crumbles to sand when brought into contact with the hard fact that the $40,000,000 we are to pay does not go to the honest investors who were robbed, but to the thieves who robbed them.

Even in the face of exposure and disgrace these thieving contractors seem to have lost none of their greed, none of their audacity, and but little of their power. Never for a moment did they forego their purpose of robbing the honest investors of their hard earnings, and never for a moment did they intend to give up one dollar of their stolen money. It was arranged that 60 per cent of whatever should be obtained for the rights and property of this company should go to the stockholders of the old company and 40 per cent should go to those who had contributed capital to the new.

The $40,000,000 which we are to pay for the rights and property of the canal company are to be divided in this proportion. Under that arrangement the honest investors, the peasantry, and the poor shopkeepers of France, whose money represents every dollar's worth of work and every dollar's worth of property, including the railroad, will get back $24,000,000, or about 8 per cent, of the $285,000,000 stolen from them, while Bunau-Varilla and his associates will get back $16,000,000 for the $12,000,000 stealings they were compelled to disgorge.

It is not surprising that protests have been heard in the Chamber of Deputies against the injustice done to these honest French investors.

Mr. President, in my judgment this canal company has no legal title whatever to any of the canal property. Its contract was with the Republic of Colombia and it could not sell that property to any foreign country without the consent of Colombia. It has simply become derelict property, and there is nothing more than a moral obligation upon whomsoever may become the possessor to pay the value of it to the true owner. I should be willing to pay whatever is just and right to those who have honestly invested their money in this enterprise, but I recognize no moral obligation to pay one single dollar to the rascals who stole that money; and I say that under the circumstances there is nothing very fine about the sensitiveness which this Government has displayed with respect to the alleged rights of this syndicate of thieves and the bitter scorn it has exhibited for the alleged greed and rapacity of Colombia.

There are other beneficiaries of this treaty who, perhaps, have not been without their influence in creating sentiment in its favor. One of the leading banks of New York—the Capital City Bank, I believe—says in a recent circular that a large proportion of the securities of the Panama Canal Company have been purchased at a low price by American speculators. All of these are very firmly convinced that the salvation of the Republic depends upon the ratification of this treaty and they have no doubt labored with patriotic zeal to convince others.

Mr. President, I have heard, on what I consider first-rate authority, that Mr. Cromwell, the attorney for this canal company, is to receive 5 per cent, or about $2,000,000, of the forty millions we are to pay. I should be glad to know whether or not this is true, and Mr. Cromwell, no doubt, if he thinks it worth his while, can give me and the country the information. Then I should be glad to know what legitimate service, as a lawyer, Mr. Cromwell could have performed in connection with this business that would entitle him to such an enormous fee.

Mr. President, I impute no dishonest motive to any man in this Chamber. I even believe that Senators have persuaded their minds and consciences to assent to the plainest and most flagrant violations of the Constitution and the law. But the very best interpretation that can be put upon undisputed facts can not save this transaction from scandal and dishonor.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not feel like allowing the discussion in the Senate on the general question of a treaty with the Republic of Panama and the conditions, history, and international and international, involved, to pass without asking the attention of the Senate for a little while on this general subject. I have waited so that all other Senators who desired to speak might have an opportunity, and have refrained from speaking until the Senate had substantially debated the question as long as it desired. I take the floor now this late in the evening because to-morrow I think the Senate ought to go into executive session and remain there until the treaty is disposed of.

When I had the honor of reporting the treaty to the Senate, and the general discussion was entered upon, I preferred quiet, contending myself with doing whatever might be necessary to have the entire subject of the treaty go forward as orderly and rapidly as possible consistent with the importance of the subject.

The debates in open session being now about to close, I think proper, as chairman of the committee reporting the treaty, to submit some remarks.

There has been no greater question before the American people, and with which the American Congress has been called upon to deal, than the question of a great canal uniting the two oceans.

We are about to take the final step that will end the controversy over the different routes and secure the actual construction of the canal in the interest not only of the United States, but of the commerce of the whole world.

Mr. President, I was greatly disappointed and grieved when Colombia r[illegible] into between that [illegible] that treaty was far from [illegible] yet it [illegible] a friendly Republic, and [illegible] two nations, and the [illegible] so anxious to secure the successful comp[illegible] that all controversies over the treaty would be [illegible] amicably adjusted to the satisfaction of the United States.

[illegible] to ratify the treaty, resulting in [illegible] new Republic [illegible] recognized by the [illegible] the world.

[illegible] I do not [illegible] indulge in harsh words against [illegible] of Colombia [illegible] people. That country surely [illegible] the treaty. They recognize [illegible] more in the years to come. But we are not at war with Colombia, and let us say nothing to aggravate the Colombian people, in the hope that they may conclude that the condition in which they now find themselves is the [illegible] of their own mistake and not the fault of any other nation, [illegible]

For almost three quarters of a century the construction of an isthmian canal has been a policy of every succeeding Administration in the United States, regardless of party. Prior to and for [illegible] and Great Britain. To that end the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was entered into with the object of promoting the construction of the canal, but that treaty for half a century proved to be a barrier against any canal across the Isthmus. After much difficulty it was finally abrogated.

[illegible] obstructions standing in the way of a canal, the question then [illegible] shall the canal be built over the Nicaragua or Panama route?

The Isthmian Canal Commission, authorized by Congress to make the [illegible] in favor of the Panama route, [illegible] and the President, under authority [illegible] a treaty with Colombia. That treaty was promptly and almost unanimously ratified by the United States Senate, sent to Colombia March 18, 1903, where it was unanimously [illegible] by the Colombian Congress with very little con[illegible] October 13, 1903, and on October 31 the Colombian Congress adjourned.

It is well un[illegible] how liberally we treated Colombia by that treaty. We gave her $10,000,000 instead of $[illegible] which she agreed to accept under the [illegible] We [illegible] the canal zone; we agreed to joint judicial tribunals [illegible] the first right to protect the canal by armed forces. In brief, we treated Colombia as we would have [illegible] with Great Britain or any other first-class and most powerful nation of the world. On November 3, three days after the Colombian Congress adjourned, Panama seceded and peaceably regained her [illegible]

[illegible] could not have been a surprise to either the [illegible] or to the United States. The correspondence shows that [illegible] from [illegible] of this revolution was considered and discussed in the [illegible] Senate. In fact, it would have been a great surprise and wonder in the United States, in Colombia, and in the world at large if Panama had taken any [illegible] revolution [illegible] I saw no hope that the Panama Canal would be built. To [illegible] of a canal [illegible] the Isthmus, and to me [illegible] standpoint, one of the most important in Central [illegible]

Under the circumstances Panama needed no encouragement from either the [illegible] or any other source to [illegible]

All of the correspondence in possession of the Executive Department [illegible] before the Senate, either in open or executive session. There has been no concealment on the part of the Executive. That correspondence has been gone into in considerable detail here, and there is not one particle of evidence to show that any officer of the United States encouraged or instigated the revolution.

On November 3 the State Department was notified by our consul at Panama that an uprising had occurred, that there was no bloodshed, that the government would organize, and that order prevailed.

There was no resistance to the revolution by Colombia, and on November 4 the three consuls, constituting the provisional government of Panama, notified the Secretary of State officially that in consequence of a popular and spontaneous movement of the people of Panama, the independence of the Isthmus was proclaimed and the Republic of Panama instituted and a provisional government organized. An envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary was later appointed by the new Government of Panama to the United States. On November 6 our consul at Panama notified the State Department that the situation was peaceful, that the movement was a success, and that no Colombian soldiers were on isthmian soil. After receiving that message on November 6, our consuls at Panama and Colon were instructed to recognize the new Government of Panama.

I will not go into the correspondence pertaining to this revolution further at this time; but, in my judgment, that correspondence shows that [illegible] would take another course, under the circumstances, than to recognize the new Republic.

There were no Colombian officials in charge on the Isthmus, and if we did not recognize the new government there would have been no government at all on the Isthmus to which we could look for the protection of our citizens and their property.

From the authorities which have been quoted here on the subject of the recognition of new governments it seems to me that the correct principle is that the whole question of recognition is one of fact.

That matter has been discussed here to-day. So it would seem [illegible] question. All that our [illegible] in recognizing a new government, must look to is the fact. Has a new government sprung into existence, recognized by the people, and carrying on the functions of a state? If such is the fact, we are justified in recognizing that government as the lawful government of the state. It is not necessary to wait until the parent state recognizes the new government; neither does it make any difference how long a new government is in existence. The question simply is, Is there a government there in substantial control and recognized by the people of the state as a government such as it is? What such a government is to be recognized as a question to be determined by the Executive in his own wise discretion. Recognition is an executive and not a legislative function.

It has been correctly stated here that whether we wait five minutes or five days or five years before we recognize a new government [illegible]

Mr. President, in my opinion we do not need to resort to the novel principle of international eminent domain, or to strain any other principle of international law to justify our conduct during this revolution. Every act of our Executive, every order given to the commanders of our vessels of war during and after this revolution, has been justified by our treaty of 1846.

The treaty, entered into in 1846 with the end in view of the construction of a canal or railroad across the Isthmus, as is shown in President Polk's message, in article 35 provides:

> [illegible] embarrassed in any future time while this treaty exists.

This treaty was made in 1846 and still continues in full force. It has survived a number of revolutions. New Granada has become the Republic of Colombia. One revolution has succeeded another, different parties in control, but the treaty has remained and has been recognized by every succeeding government, and the United States [illegible] its right under Article XXXV [illegible] as will be seen by the language and discussion of precedents, and as will be seen by reference to the digest in Wharton's Digest.

The treaty of 1846 continues in force even though the State of Panama has seceded from the Republic of Colombia. No longer binding upon Colombia, after [illegible] over the territory to which Article XXXV refers, it is now binding and its rights and obligations have succeeded to the new Republic of Panama. In other words, the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846 is binding and descends to any government which exercises sovereignty over the Isthmus of Panama.

The treaty of 1846 is what is known in international law as a "real treaty."

Mr. President, I have here extracts from some decisions and from law writers on this subject which I will not take the time now to read, but which I will have inserted in my remarks. I desire to say that these extracts have been quoted already two or three times by distinguished Senators who have spoken on the subject.

Wharton, in his work on International Law, says:

> Treaties are divided by text writers into personal and real. The former pertain exclusively to the persons with whom they are immediately concerned, and treat as a contracting party the person to whom such sovereign and his family. They expire on the death or incapacitation of the sovereign. The latter, or real treaties, relate to the establishment of a condition of independentcy of the persons of the contracting parties. They continue to bind the state whatever intervening changes may take place in its internal [illegible] or in the persons of its rulers. The state continues the same, [illegible] such change, and consequently the treaty relating to [illegible] objects remains in force so long as the nation exists as an independent state.

Taylor, in his work on International Law, in section 166, speaking of the rights which belong to the new state which has forcibly separated itself from another state, says that—

The new state is entitled to property within it of a local character and to [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] or a part [illegible] the right to navigate streams passing through other countries from its frontiers.

Mr. Taylor makes this statement on the authority of Hall on International Law.

From these authorities it will be seen that this treaty is binding upon the State of Panama and the United States. We owe to the Republic of Panama the same obligations under it as we owed to Colombia. The Republic of Panama has a right to expect and demand that we shall fulfill our obligations under that treaty.

Under this treaty of 1846 we guarantee the neutrality of the Isthmus and the free transit over it from sea to sea. We are bound to see that it is not interfered with. We are bound to protect the railroad. In doing this we must necessarily prevent, if we can, actual hostilities along the railroad. If we permitted warfare to be waged on the Isthmus it would necessarily result in obstructing the free transit from sea to sea. At other times our military forces have been used for the purpose of keeping free and open this transit, and, as an incident [illegible] the Government of Colombia in suppressing [illegible]. Now things are different. Without our aid the people of the Isthmus have declared and regained their independence and have set up a government of their own; no warfare exists, and peace prevails. Under these circumstances it could not be expected that the United States would forcibly overthrow this new Republic or would permit a civil war to be waged on the Isthmus. Such conduct would be contrary to our own policy and history.

The instructions given to our naval commanders are thoroughly in accord with the treaty of 1846. They are as follows:

The instructions given by our Government were in accord with the treaty of 1846. It will be noticed that in almost every message the main consideration was "keep the transit open." "The Government is responsible for maintaining peace and keeping the transit open across the Isthmus." "Maintain free and uninterrupted transit." The transit of the Isthmus must be kept open and order maintained.

"Keep the transit open" is what has been insisted upon in every communication. There is nothing here to show that there was any interference on our part in this revolution. We were simply running our treaty obligations, regardless of who it affected.

I do not know that the United States has actually or forcibly prevented the landing of Colombian forces on the Isthmus, but I contend that the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846 would [illegible] with a hostile intent, in any part of the Isthmus of Panama.

Read the very terms of the treaty itself. It says:

That treaty does not limit us to the protection of the actual line of the railroad. It is broad enough to cover the whole Isthmus. The purpose of the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846 was to [illegible] the Isthmus of Panama neutral ground for the benefit of the commerce of the world. The purpose of the thirty-fifth article of that treaty was to prevent hostilities on the Isthmus. The protection of the Isthmus was not only for the benefit of the United States, but of the world.

Under the spirit and terms of the treaty of 1846 I believe that we would be justified in preventing the landing of the forces of Colombia or any other Government with hostile intent in any part or port of Panama.

Now that Panama has regained her independence and has been recognized by the nations of the world as an independent republic, Colombia stands in no different relation to her from that of any other foreign nation. We are as much justified in protecting the Isthmus of Panama and the transit thereof from Colombian forces as we would be in protecting that Isthmus from the forces of any other government.

That portion of the thirty-fifth article of the treaty which I have quoted, providing for the neutrality of the Isthmus, is the most important provision of the treaty and was so recognized by its negotiators.

That provision was expressly inserted with the end in view of the construction of the canal and railroad.

President Polk transmitted the treaty of 1846 to the Senate on February 10, 1847, with a special message of some length. President Polk's message, with the exception of two short paragraphs in connection, is devoted to the provision of the thirty-fifth article, which I have quoted, namely, that the Government of New Granada proposes to guarantee to the Government of the United States the right of passage across the Isthmus on condition that the United States shall make a similar guaranty to New Granada of the neutrality of this portion of her territory, etc.

President Polk also refers to the Isthmus of Panama being the shortest and the most practicable for the construction of the canal. He discusses this provision in connection with the interoceanic canal and railroad.

It is true that the treaty of 1846 was a treaty of peace, amity, navigation, and commerce, but the thirty-fifth article was recognized by President Polk as being the important article of the treaty.

The forces of the United States on many occasions have been landed on the Isthmus of Panama to protect American interests and to keep open the transit under the treaty of 1846.

In September, 1856, when Panama was a sovereign federal State of New Granada, a disturbance arose in the legislative assembly of the State and a revolution was attempted. The acting governor of the State sent our consul a message asking the commanders of the Independence and St. Mary to land a force, which request was complied with, and 160 marines were landed.

On September, 27, 1860, another outbreak occurred. Commander Porter of the United States sloop of war St. Mary and the commander of a British war vessel landed forces to protect the lives of the foreign residents. The joint occupation of Panama by the British and American forces continued some time. This landing was with the sanction of the Panama authorities.

In May, 1861, request was made by the intendente-general for the State of Panama to have the United States forces landed in case an expedition, then fitting out at Cartagena, should invade the Isthmus. This request was based on the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846.

In March, 1865, another revolution having broken out, at the request of our consul at Panama and Colon, marines were landed for the protection of the consulate and the railroad property. Permission was obtained from the president of the State.

In May, 1873, hostilities were in progress in the State of Panama. At the request of the United States consul and a number of influential Americans and other citizens, a force of 200 marines and sailors and 4 pieces of artillery were landed. Another landing was made on September 24 of the same year. These forces were withdrawn on October 28, except a small detachment of thirty men. These forces were used to keep open the transit.

All along in our history since the treaty of 1846 the United States has regarded it as its duty and has complied with its obligation as the United States understood it, and on every occasion when it was necessary to do so it has landed troops, without any request whatever on the part of the Colombian Government, for the purpose of protecting American citizens and to keep open the transit.

In January, 1885, our forces were landed from the United States ship Alliance, the President of the State of Panama informing the general superintendent of the Panama Railroad that he was unable to afford adequate protection to the railroad property or the transit.

In April, 1885, a battalion of marines was organized, and men from Portsmouth, New York, and Washington sailed on the City of Para from New York, arriving and disembarking on the Isthmus on the 11th. Transit across the Isthmus was kept up by a detachment on every train. A second battalion of the United States marines was landed at Colon on the 15th. The total force of sailors and marines landed from the ships of the Atlantic and Pacific squadrons was 685 officers and men. This force was relieved the latter part of May. This force was used to keep open the transit. The sovereign State of Panama was in revolution, and the revolutionary general was in control in Panama, and he was notified of the landing of these troops. The revolutionary general in command protested against the landing of the second battalion of troops.

Yet the battalion was landed, the transit was kept open, and American citizens were protected. Nobody ever heard a word against it. Everyone believed it was the duty of the Government to do it as it has done time out of mind, or at least as long as the treaty of 1846 has been in force.

In November, 1901, and again in September, 1902, as we all remember, our marines were again landed on the Isthmus to keep open the transit. I believe in both cases the governor of Panama was previously notified.

Prior to the constitution of 1886 the State of Panama was designated as a sovereign state, had considerable self-government, and on some occasions a president. The landing of our forces on the occasions I have designated, with the possible exception of the last occasion, was in most cases at the request of the local president or governor of Panama, the central Government of Colombia not being consulted.

I do not know whether it is questioned now that the recognition of the Republic of Panama by the United States is not a complete recognition of independence.

The recognition by President Roosevelt of the Republic of Panama was as full and complete a recognition of the independence of that Republic as could be given.

Phillemore, Pomeroy, and other writers on international law divide recognition into recognition of belligerency, virtual recognition, and formal recognition. Recognition of belligerency, they say, admits a community existing capable of carrying on war; virtual recognition admits a community existing having commercial relations and capable of maintaining them for the time being; formal recognition admits a society as existing which is in fact independent and sovereign.

Formal recognition is evidenced by the making of treaties and the sending and receiving of ambassadors.

The recognition of the State of Panama by President Roosevelt was a formal recognition. It is formal recognition of independence because he received a minister from that State, and because the President appointed and this Senate confirmed an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Panama.

It has been suggested that a de facto government has not the right in international law to cede territory. I do not admit that this new Government of Panama is merely a de facto government. It is something more. It has become the lawful Government of that State. But, admitting for the purposes of argument that it is a mere de facto revolutionary government, I contend that such a government has the right to alienate a part of its public domain. Now, let us see what the law or the authorities say:

Taylor says, on the authority of Grotius and other writers on international law:

A revolutionary government may also during the period of its authority alienate the whole or a part of the public domain. Upon a revolution [illegible] private property not confiscated and the public domain belongs to their former owners, and [illegible] they revest upon the establishment of a legitimate government. [illegible] * * * When a foreign government or the ruler who has been acknowledged head of the State, or a government de facto [illegible] and thus acquires part of the public domain [illegible] after the revolution, such a grant, though [illegible] be considered valid by the lawful sovereign on his restoration. Wheaton, 246.

Wheaton, in his work on International Law, says:

But if the [illegible] has been [illegible] the public property confiscated by [illegible] the State. The question as to the validity of such transfer [illegible] of conquest.

In the case of inherited [illegible] to foreigners and foreign governments [illegible] property belonging exclusively to the nation; and the Senate, under ordinary circumstances, would be entitled to the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary as to whether, under existing conditions, the United States can forcibly appropriate territory which, by the treaty of 1846, it guaranteed in Colombia, at least against all foreign nations, including the United States.

It is evident, however, Mr. President, that no such inquiry as this will be permitted by the majority here, and consequently I ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to its withdrawal.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

to Colombia as a rental for the use of the necessary territory for the railroad an annuity of $250,000, which she has since received. By that contract it was also agreed that the Panama Railroad should revert to Colombia in 1966.

In 1878 Colombia made a concession to Lieutenant Wyse for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Under that Wyse concession it was agreed that Colombia would have a right to participate in the gross receipts of the canal, in amounts ranging from 5 to 8 per cent, and which should amount to no less than $250,000 in any one year. It was also agreed in this Wyse concession that the entire canal property would revert to Colombia at the end of ninety-nine years.

That Wyse concession is the basis of the rights of the Panama Canal Company. That concession was extended in 1890, again in 1893, and again in 1900, on each occasion the company paying to Colombia very large sums of money. Under the extension of 1890 10,000,000 francs in gold were paid to Colombia and 5,000,000 francs in the shares of the New Panama Canal Company.

Colombia must have received millions of dollars in cash from these canal and railroad concessions.

In my opinion all of the rights which Colombia enjoys under the Wyse and railroad concessions are now the property of Panama, as the new Republic of Panama succeeds to the sovereignty over the territory to which they relate. The canal zone being in the State of Panama, that State, on its separation from Colombia, succeeds to the rights which Colombia might have under any concession relative to the canal zone.

Hall, in discussing the rights and obligations which go to a new state on its forcible separation from the mother country, says, page 96:

On the other hand rights possessed in respect of the [illegible] treaties relating to navigation and [illegible] with relinquishment of it alone, and property which it transfers to the new state.

That clause has been quoted, I think, a time or two before.

It would be absurd to say that Colombia after Panama had separated herself from that State and been recognized as independent by the world, should continue to enjoy the large pecuniary profit and rental from the canal zone to which she had lost all title.

It must be assumed, then, under any treaty negotiations between the United States and Panama, that Panama lawfully possesses all rights formerly enjoyed by Colombia under the railroad and canal concessions.

The principal points made by the opposition in this debate are:

Every act of ours pertaining to this revolution is justified by the treaty of 1846, which I have commented upon. We have, under the authority given to us by that treaty, declared that Colombian troops shall not land and carry on hostilities on the transit of the Isthmus. Panama gained her independence without our help, and since the regaining of her independence we are bound to protect the transit through that Republic from foreign invasion, and necessarily we are bound to prevent the landing of Colombian troops.

So, Mr. President, I do not see what principle of international law has been violated.

Neither has the President violated the Constitution of the United States in the messages given to our naval forces, as has been contended here.

It is true, as we know, that under our Constitution war can only be declared by the Congress of the United States. But the orders given to the commanders of our naval forces do not amount to a declaration of war against Colombia.

I have commented on these orders at length. They were in accord with the treaty. Those orders insisted, in various ways, that the transit of the Isthmus must be kept open.

The President, in charge of the executive functions of this Government, has a right, and it is his duty, to execute our treaties as well as our acts of Congress. He is in charge of our foreign relations. The treaty of 1846 gave us the right to protect and keep open that transit. President Roosevelt was performing a proper executive function in sending our naval forces there to keep the transit open. He was doing only what many of his illustrious predecessors did before him. I have given the various instances in which other Presidents, both Republicans and Democrats, have sent troops to the Isthmus. The last Democratic President, President Cleveland, sent troops there in 1885 without authority from Congress.

No act of President Roosevelt in respect to this revolution can properly be construed as a declaration of war against Colombia.

There has been no violation of the treaty of 1846, as has been contended, but, on the contrary, the President has acted thoroughly in accord with that treaty. While it is true that the treaty has sometimes been construed to mean that the duty rested on the Government of Colombia to keep the transit open during domestic disturbances, still its practical operation has been that the United States has repeatedly sent troops there, and in no instance that I now recall in which troops were sent was there any threat of a foreign invasion, but merely local disturbances or revolutions. And in this case Colombia did not ask to send troops to the Isth-

Mr. President, I have presented my views on the main questions involved in the discussion now about to close.

[illegible] I have had an intense interest in the subject [illegible] the location of a canal was [illegible] under consideration, after I had the honor of membership in [illegible] French company [illegible] of its property [illegible] tion. There was no question that the United States could secure the Panama route at any price. I was anxious for a canal and was in favor of it at a reasonable point. When the Canal Commission [illegible] least, I followed their judgment, especially as on such investigation as I could make it became my own judgment.

I desire, Mr. President, to say that I have no quarrel with any Senator who may prefer the Nicaragua route. I believe [illegible] I shall not be surprised, as Senators have suggested, if on both routes a canal shall be constructed at some future time. If the commerce of the world needs it both they will be built. The Panama Canal is alone sufficient for the time, and probably for the century. Its construction is the greatest undertaking of any person, or government of this age, and its importance places it above party considerations, and I am glad that it occupies such a position in this Senate.

Mr. President, I hope I may be excused in saying in this presence [illegible] treaty preparatory to the construction of the Panama Canal, the greatest work of the century on the globe, and which, when completed, will carry with it so great benefits and blessing to the people, not only of the United States, but of the nations.

I know that the distinguished Senator from Alabama and others do not manifest the faith in the outcome of the Panama Canal that I have. I believe and hope that they will be found mistaken.

Mr. President, a few [illegible] words. I desire to express my thanks to the President and Secretary of State for the course they have pursued in connection [illegible] ordeal through which it has passed in dealing with Colombia and Panama during the past few months.

[illegible] has been honored by the [illegible] honor [illegible]

powered to grant in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of land and waters in the territory of Panama, with full and complete sovereignty over the same.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the purpose of this resolution has been largely accomplished by its introduction and publication. When it was introduced impressions in regard to it were [illegible] and discussions had been made as to the constitutional right of Panama to separate from Colombia distinct from the inalienable right of revolution, and comparison had been instituted between the act of Panama in this instance and that of the Confederate States in 1861.

This resolution, largely academic and educational, was not offered as a basis for a discussion of the doctrine of secession, and of course I have no such purpose in view now. Following my general design in introducing it, and remembering that the newspaper organs of the Administration in this city, the Assistant Secretary of State, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the President himself have discussed the question, it is not improper, before I withdraw the resolution, to point out in a sentence, as it were, the fundamental difference between constitutional secession in Panama and in the South.

The great controversy of 1861 revolved around the southern contention, that the Constitution of the United States was a mere compact between sovereign and independent States which did not form a consolidated or centralized government, and that its history, its structural provisions, its reservation of State rights, inherently justified secession. No such claim is possible under the constitution of Colombia, for by its very terms all sovereignty is lodged wholly and exclusively in the centralized nation. No logical mind which can approve constitutional secession in Panama can question constitutional secession in the South.

The constitution of Colombia, Mr. President, also expressly provides that the territory and other property belong exclusively to the nation; and the Senate, under ordinary circumstances, would be entitled to the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary as to whether, under existing conditions, the United States can forcibly appropriate territory which, by the treaty of 1846, it guaranteed in Colombia, at least against all foreign nations, including the United States.

It is evident, however, Mr. President, that no such inquiry as this will be permitted by the majority here, and consequently I ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to its withdrawal.

FUJI MICRO SAFETY N

[illegible] grants formerly enjoyed by Colombia under the railroad and canal contracts.

The principal points made by the opposition in this debate are:

First. That the President has violated well-known principles of international law in his action with reference to the new Republic of Panama;

Second. That he has violated the Constitution of the United States in the orders given to the commanders of our naval forces, which it is contended practically amount to a declaration of war against Colombia;

Third. That he has violated the treaty of 1846; and Fourth. That he has violated the Spooner Act.

These allegations, first, second, third, and fourth, were all made by some Senators on the other side.

In the debates which have already taken place the several counts contained in this indictment against the President have been ably met and answered by Senators who have spoken on the subject, especially in the great speeches made by the senior Senator from Wisconsin.

Just what principles of international law it is contended President Roosevelt has violated is not very clear.

In my judgment President Roosevelt has not violated any recognized principle of international law, either in recognizing the new Republic of Panama or in any action he has taken in reference to either Panama or Colombia.

He did not violate any principle of international law in recognizing the new Republic. While early in our history there may have been some doubts expressed by statesmen as to whether recognition is an executive or legislative act, I think it is now well settled, and has been since Secretary Seward's time, that the recognition of a new republic is purely an executive act.

As I stated in the beginning of my remarks, in recognizing a new government all that the Executive authority must look to is the fact. If a new government has sprung into existence, which is recognized by the people (as this new Republic of Panama was promptly and enthusiastically recognized by her people), the President is justified in formally recognizing such government as the lawful government of the state. When such a government is to be recognized, how long it is to be in existence before being recognized is a question entirely within the discretion of the Executive.

The question of intervention is not involved here. We all know, of course, the rule is peaceintervention, but, nevertheless, a recognition of a new government is moral intervention, although clearly not an act of war. We have not intervened in behalf of Panama. [illegible] I now recall in which troops were sent was there any threat of a foreign invasion, but merely local disturbances or revolutions. And in this case Colombia did not ask to send troops to the Isthmus to keep the transit open, assuming that she was under obligations to do so. She wanted to land troops on the Isthmus in order to wage a war in Panama, resulting in an interference with the transit.

The President has not violated the Spooner Act in negotiating this treaty with the Republic of Panama.

That act provides that he shall negotiate a treaty with the Republic of Panama for a right of way for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus. But we must look to the intent of the act itself; we must construe it as a whole. What was the main intent of that act? The intent of Congress in passing it was that a canal should be constructed over the Panama route, if that route could be obtained. The section of that act providing for a treaty with Colombia was a mere incident to its main purpose. The act is [illegible] complied with if a treaty is made with the Government having the sovereignty over the Isthmus of Panama. The President did not have time to turn to Nicaragua after the treaty was rejected by the Colombian Congress. The treaty was only rejected by the Colombian Congress on October 18, but there was a possibility that the action of that Congress might be reconsidered until it adjourned, October 31. On November 3 Panama became independent. In other words, but three days elapsed between the time that all possible hope of the ratification of the treaty with Colombia was abandoned and the successful revolution in Panama. The President very properly entered into the treaty with the Republic of Panama for the construction of a canal, thereby following the intent and spirit of the Spooner Act.

Since regaining her independence Panama has adopted a constitution, elected a President, and has now a complete constitutional Government. When a canal is constructed that State will be one of the great highways of the world's commerce. With the large annual rental paid by the United States for the use of the canal zone she will be in an enviable position among the Central and South American States. At the same time the United States under the treaty will have all necessary authority for the maintenance and operation of the canal. Our relations to that new Republic, which will be necessarily very close in the years to come, will be far more satisfactory than if we were compelled to build and operate the canal under a treaty with Colombia, whose Government, far removed from the Isthmus, would have very little interest in the canal except as a source of revenue.

[illegible] in dealing with Colombia [illegible]

The nation has been honored by their statesmanship and honorable course. No effort has been spared to find evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the Administration, but such effort has been in vain. They stand before the country and the world as among the [illegible] of their time.

I have known all our Presidents, beginning with Abraham Lincoln, whose name and fame are wide as the world, and I say, without [illegible], that I have never known a Chief Magistrate of our great Republic more conscientious in the discharge of [illegible] duties, more fearless in his efforts to enforce the law than Theodore Roosevelt.

His course in dealing with the situation growing out of the secession of Panama has been within the law and our treaty obligations, and I feel sure if he had raised to recognize Panama as an independent state, and finally had failed to make a treaty with it under which, when ratified by this Senate, the work on that great, long-waited-for canal shall begin, there would have been [illegible] doing.

POWERS OF COLOMBIAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Illinois, that the session to-morrow will be largely devoted to executive business I desire to call up, in order to dispose of it, a resolution which I introduced some time [illegible] Panama subject. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 22, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, ever present in the hearts of men to inspire, uplift, sustain, and guide, we bless Thee for the truly great and noble men who have been susceptible to the heavenly influence and who have builded wisely for time, they knew for succeeding generations. Our minds turn to-day to him whom we delight to call the "Father of his Country," and a nation will pour out its gratitude to Thee for his character and his deeds as a citizen, a soldier, a statesman, and follower of the Jesus of Nazareth, and every lover of liberty the world round will sing his praise, whose name has become the synonym for wisdom, purity, and goodness.

Help us, we beseech Thee, susceptible to that same influence, to go forward to larger life and grander achievements; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF LAW IN RELATION TO TAXATION IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CODWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 8690, to amend the law relating to taxation in the District of Columbia, be re-referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that House bill 8690, now on the Calendar, be taken from the Calendar and re-referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a motion to adjourn. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Clerk read the Farewell Address of George Washington, and that immediately upon the termination of the reading the House adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the motion. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent, if the gentleman desires that to be submitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Would it not be in order to move that at the expiration of a certain time the House adjourn? Then if that be true, is it not in order that at the expiration of a certain contingency the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER. There are these motions: To adjourn, to adjourn to a day certain, and a motion to take a recess.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do adjourn. Pending that, I submit my request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent standing by itself; but nothing is in order when the motion to adjourn is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was merely anxious to get the two together if I could, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I ask unanimous consent, this being the 22d day of February, that the Clerk may read from the Clerk's desk George Washington's Farewell Address to the American people.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that George Washington's Farewell Address be read at the Clerk's desk. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Would it be in order to put into the shape of a motion what I have asked unanimous consent for?

The SPEAKER. Not against the demand for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will move what is in order. I move that in memory of George Washington this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. [Laughter.] It is in order to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn; and the country will understand the issue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 66; noes 85.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I now call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it be in order for me to read a motion that was made by a Democratic Speaker from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] in the second session of the Fifty-third Congress on the 22d day of February?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 93, nays 104, answered present 10, not voting 175, as follows:

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 12220, the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have we had for general debate on this side, how much is there left on the majority side, and how much is there left on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. There is one hour and five minutes remaining on the side of the committee and one hour and twenty minutes on the opposite side.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat surprised to observe in the public press that the Secretary of the Navy, in his address at the Lincoln banquet in New York a few days ago, seemed to treat the support of the Navy in a partisan way. In the course of his address he said:

> A few days ago I should not have considered that the policy of naval progress was at all open to partisan discussion.

And further on in his remarks:

> I have not lost hope that the policy of increasing our power upon the sea will be continued, whatever party may be in control of the National Admin-

[illegible] I confess that I look with apprehension upon the observations [illegible] the most powerful leader of the Democratic party [illegible] When the Senator from Maryland was returned to the Senate to [illegible] the Senate his party associates conferred upon him [illegible] ment of making him their leader in that [illegible] in public affairs, and unquestionably [illegible] party [illegible] consideration and respect.

The Secretary of the Navy did not favor his auditors with the observations of the Senator from Maryland which have caused him to be so apprehensive that he had almost lost sleep. It is at first sight somewhat strange that the Secretary of the Navy should be apprehensive on account of these observations by the Senator who, he says, is easily the leader of his party. These apprehensions of the honorable Secretary, I suppose, can be accounted for upon the theory that he sees a probability in the near future a combination of the two great political parties, and, with his prophetic eye, he sees that this Senator, who, he says, is easily the leader of his party, may be selected as the standard bearer, and then he foresees that within a few months more we are to have a general election, and, with the same prophetic eye, he sees that this standard bearer at the head of his great party will be easily successful at the polls.

Mr. Chairman, in this view, in view of the fact that he may be transferred from a forum where he is in the minority to a forum where he would be in a position to direct to some extent the policies of the country, the observations of the Senator from Maryland do become of some consequence to the country, and, as the honorable Secretary did not give them, I will ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD of the dates of February 3 and February 4 the observations on the naval establishment as made by the Senator from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows from the RECORD of February 3:

It may be that, now that we have entered upon the control of islands 8,000 [illegible] we may be [illegible] from the Secretary of the Navy [illegible] and [illegible] of $[illegible] for a naval establishment in the far Pacific [illegible] and coaling stations upon those islands and the seas and upon war ships which we have upon those seas now [illegible] thought necessary to maintain the Monroe doctrine and protect our interests in every part of the globe.

We will always maintain the doctrine that we will prevent any foreign nation from interfering with the republics south of us. A small navy has protected them in the past. Our present Navy would do it now. [illegible] these republics. [illegible] and commerce with us, and there is not a nation on the face of the earth that would attack any of them.

I am an advocate for a navy sufficient to guard our interests. But you have entered upon a point of having as many battle ships as Germany, half as many as Great Britain, and your expenditures of the Navy Department have run up from generation to over a generation. The Navy is costly, very heavy. There are too many men, too many officers, too many [illegible]. We have as ships enough to protect us and guard all our interests on every sea upon the round the globe. Let war wait and let commerce be protected.

And as follows from the RECORD of February 4:

The Senator from Massachusetts [illegible] although I am sure he did not intend it, said that I have [illegible] of an increase of the Navy and intimated that I was possible [illegible] that are of the service so necessary to protect us upon the seas of the world. [illegible] ignorance of necessities more than opposition, which is one of the things [illegible] I am prompted [illegible] the Navy. From boyhood of my story into [illegible] with the gentleman from Maine Mr. HALE and with [illegible] us for the [illegible] Navy [illegible] be proud [illegible] Appropriations [illegible] continuance of our Navy [illegible] Appropriations [illegible]

I have [illegible] and I have [illegible] that we should, as it appears the Administration [illegible] but have a navy [illegible] of vessels and number of men. Our conditions are not such as to require it.

I am opposed to a navy for display. Our navy so far as I [illegible] what we do [illegible] the waters for the protection of the Government or citizens of our country. Now I desire to make a substantial [illegible] Appropriations [illegible] time of peace unnecessary for that purpose, merely for display. I need economy.

I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that while a navy is necessary [illegible] was transferred to great [illegible] our Navy was [illegible] experiment [illegible] that I knew of is that of torpedoes [illegible] $[illegible] a year.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to regard that as the position of the Democratic party in regard to the Navy.

The Secretary of the Navy need give himself no apprehension as to the position of the Democratic party on the naval establishment. The Democratic party stands for a navy and for everything else that is necessary to enforce the Monroe doctrine in the Western Hemisphere. It stands also for a navy and for anything else that is necessary to protect American interests and maintain respect for our flag throughout the world.

This bill carries over $96,000,000 for the support of the naval establishment for the year 1905, and with Senate amendments it will be easily a round one hundred millions. The estimates sent in by the different bureaus amounted to over $150,000,000, but these were cut or scaled down by the Secretary and the Naval Committee. The present bill is fourteen millions more than for 1904.

At its present rate of increase we may expect the annual navy appropriation bill to carry $150,000,000 within the next ten years.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee may well announce to the House, as he did the other day, that the revenues for 1905 would probably not be sufficient by forty millions to meet the appropriations for that year. What may we expect in ten years at the present [illegible] expenses due to the expansive and expensive imperialism of the present Republican Administration?

With this bill we lay the foundation for a great naval station at Guantanamo, Cuba, to cost, according to the estimates, over $12,000,000. A coaling station at that point to cost half a million dollars is all that is required. Costly naval stations we now have along our own coast, at New Orleans, La., Pensacola, Fla., and Charleston, S.C., and there is no earthly necessity for another in foreign territory so close to our own shores.

The bill also provides for the establishment of a naval station at Olongrapo, in the Philippine Islands, estimated to cost by different naval boards all the way from thirty millions down to ten millions, though Admiral Dewey says that $800,000 should establish all the station we need there.

Expansion is indeed a stirring theme with which to fire the national heart, but in practice it is expensive.

For this great Navy Congress is now urged to provide a general staff, the theory, I suppose, being that the Secretary of the Navy should be further advised or, as I believe, controlled.

The Secretary of the Navy now has as his advisers and assistants an Assistant Secretary, eight heads of bureaus, all admirals, a Construction Board, and the General Board of thirteen members, of which Admiral Dewey is the president. This muchly advised Secretary, it is thought, needs further advice, and therefore a general staff of many more admirals is to be added in Washington to this already top-heavy fighting arm of the military service.

Instead of expanding in this direction we should, in my opinion, consolidate.

I remember the urgent recommendation of ex-Secretary Long that at least three of the bureaus should be consolidated, but this instead of [illegible] less in Washington, and of course his recommendations fell stillborn.

His insistence of the need of reform was almost plaintive. "It is not the case," he said, speaking of the bureau system, "of one tail wagging the dog, but of eight tails wagging one dog." If [illegible] with eight admirals, what will be the condition when the Secretary has a general staff with many more admirals?

In a material way the greatest beneficiaries and, to some extent, the greatest advocates for this ever-expanding Navy are the contractors, and chief among these are the armor-plate manufacturers and shipbuilders. In regard to these, the many millions of dollars which they have received have not always been well or economically expended. Without going into too great detail, a few instances will show this. A few years ago the lowest price at which Congress could secure armor plate from the Bethlehem and Carnegie plants was $[illegible] per ton, and it had been as high as $671. The Democrats in Congress insisted that this was excessive, the manufacturers insisted they could not make it for less. The result of this contest, however, was that the manufacturers took the Government contract for armor plate at $[illegible] per ton, instead of $[illegible] and agreed to find the Government [illegible] of $[illegible] on this one contract.

From that time to the present the Government has gotten the benefit of this reduction, brought about almost entirely by the [illegible] of the Democrats.

The point, however, is still [illegible], as the following circumstance shows:

Since the convening of Congress the Secretary has awarded contracts for 10,000 tons of armor. The old firms, the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, who have an agreement on prices, as stated by the Secretary and Admiral O'Neil, and the old firm, while the Midvale company, a new concern, bid $55 less per ton, and of the 10,000 tons 6,400 were given the lowest bidder and the other 10,000 tons divided equally between the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies at the loss of $55 per ton, or $550,000 altogether, to the Government.

It was proved by Admiral O'Neil that these two companies—the Bethlehem and the Carnegie—have an agreement, that they are in concert, that they have a combination; and it was also proved by the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Moody, who stated in his testimony that it was as plain as the sun that they had a combination to control the prices.

Now, I want to ask what is the use of this Government passing laws denunciatory of the trusts and combines and appropriating $500,000 to prosecute them, when here in Pennsylvania, the State of the Attorney-General, there is a trust and combination to control the price of the armor plate which the Government must buy.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What explanation does the Secretary of the Navy give for awarding contracts to the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies at $455 a ton when he could have been supplied with the armor plate at $398 by the Midvale Company?

Mr. RIXEY. The Secretary of the Navy stated that there was no one else from whom to get this armor plate, that under the proposition of the Midvale Company it could not furnish all the armor plate within the time that the Department wanted it, and that he felt compelled therefore to give these contracts to the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies. When asked:

[illegible] $50 a ton less a sufficient reason to [illegible]

He replied:

No, sir; there is no [illegible] bids. Who would bid? There is nobody who makes armor except the [illegible] and Carnegie.

Virtually the Secretary says that the Government was in the power of this trust and combination; that it had the Government by the throat.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now, I would like to ask this additional question: Was there not a provision in the last naval appropriation bill requiring the Secretary of the Navy to take steps to erect an armor plant in case he could not secure the armor plate at a reasonable price?

Mr. RIXEY. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. And in the face of that provision he makes a contract for 10,000 tons of armor plate at $55 a ton more than what a certain other company had bid?

Mr. RIXEY. Upon examination I find that the provision referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky was carried in a former bill, but not in the last.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to know why the Attorney-General of the United States, with this extra fund which he has for the prosecution of trusts and combines, has not instituted some prosecutions against the Bethlehem Company and the Carnegie Company. I can give him as witnesses, and the record shows it, Admiral O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, and the Hon. William H. Moody, Secretary of the Navy.

Instead of starving the trusts this Government is feeding them. Instead of prosecuting them this Government is rewarding them. You appropriate $500,000 to prosecute all the trusts in the country, and you give to one trust a bonus of $550,000 on one Government contract. In the face of this fact the Naval Committee would not place a limitation upon the price of armor plate, but when the bill is read under the five-minute rule I intend to offer an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Navy shall not pay for armor plate more than he has contracted to pay to the Midvale Company, which is $398.

As further proof of the exorbitant profits made out of the Government contracts by this Bethlehem company, whose recent performances in the New York shipbuilding trust are so notorious, I give the following extracts from the hearings before the committee.

Captain Pendleton, now superintendent of the Washington Navy-Yard, said:

We went to work with the Bethlehem Steel Company and made a big contract, which authorized them to put up a plant and make armor. We all knew that it [illegible] and paid for their plant and made fair profits, but they made [illegible]

And again:

[illegible] years, in which the Government paid for the plant, we are paying them interest and depreciation on that same plant on the present contracts.

Admiral O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, on page 5 of his annual report, says, speaking of some guns ordered from the Bethlehem company, that $2,000,000 contract for guns cost the Government 36 per cent more than if the Government could have done the work in its own Gun Factory. This it could not do because of overwork. And in his hearings, page 153, said the work done in the Government Gun Factory was better and the guns of superior quality.

Captain Pendleton, in his testimony, page 67, said:

Why should we pay these private companies to increase their plants when the Government could do the work at 30 or 40 per cent cheaper than anybody else can do it? Why should we pay them the interest, insurance, and depreciation on their plants after we have paid for the plants, and then not control them?

If all this is true in regard to the steel supplies and armor plate, does it not justify the representatives of the taxpayers in insisting that the Government should have its own gun factory (as it has) and its own armor-plate factory (as it has not), do its own work, and be independent of the steel-trust combination?

An armor-plate factory owned by the Government would long since have paid for itself many times over.

I can not agree, Mr. Chairman, that it is either necessary or expedient at this time to add 3,000 more men to the Navy, as this bill provides. We have, with the 3,000 men now provided for, 34,000 men, and about 7,000 men in the Marine Corps, making a total of 41,000 in the naval establishment besides commissioned officers.

Admiral Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in his testimony, page 184, said that 26,000 men would man the ships in active commission for the next five years, and on page 169 said we would lack 797 officers for the ships to be completed by 1907 and 357 officers for the ships he supposed we would have ready by 1911, and this notwithstanding the last Congress provided for doubling the number of cadets at Annapolis.

Truly, the Government is rushing headlong in its race for the greatest navy of the world!

I submit there is no necessity for this increase of 3,000 men, and I shall not support it.

We now have complete and in commission 12 battle ships, 2 armored cruisers, and 2 protected cruisers, besides a large number of smaller vessels of war, as monitors, auxiliary cruisers, torpedo boats, and submarine boats.

Admiral Dewey, in an interview published in the Washington Post, March 28, 1903, said, referring to the recent Caribbean maneuvers:

They were the greatest object lessons of that kind, probably, that the world has ever seen. It was an object lesson to the Kaiser more than to any other person. Think of it, fifty-four warships, including colliers and all. Germany could not possibly get a fleet over here that could fight such an aggregation as that.

In addition to the ships then in commission we now have under construction the following: Twelve battle ships (including the Missouri), 8 armored cruisers, 8 protected cruisers (making 28 war ships proper, which more than doubles what we already have), 2 gunboats, 2 training ships, 1 training brig, 6 torpedo boats, and 2 steel tugs, a total of 41, on which we still owe $82,000,000.

Will any conservative man, who has no ax to grind, say that this is not sufficient?

Why should we go on as is done in this bill and authorize contracts for other ships to cost $3[illegible] Why not first complete and pay for the ships already authorized, and then consider our ability to support the naval establishment as it will then exist?

If we stopped now and neither built nor authorized another ship prior to 1907, we would then have the third strongest navy in the world, and who is it that thinks it necessary that we should be either first or second?

The report by the chairman of the committee on this bill shows that if all the vessels now building were completed the United States would rank third, with only Great Britain and France ahead of her. Below I give table:

Relative order of war-ship strength [illegible] be the case were vessels building [illegible]

Nation.	Tonnage.
Great Britain	[illegible]
France	[illegible]
United States	[illegible]
Russia	[illegible]
Germany	[illegible]
Italy	[illegible]
Japan	[illegible]
Austria	146,883

For years past it has been a favorite topic for the Navy expansionist to insist that we should keep abreast of Germany. Now, France and Germany are building six battle ships each; we are building twelve. Germany is building three armored cruisers; we are building eight. Germany is building no protected cruisers; we are building eight. We have under construction three great ships 100,000 tons more than Germany. We are building more rapidly than any other nation on earth except Great Britain, as the following table, taken from the report of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, shows, the estimate being in tons displacement:

Vessels building January 1, 1904.

Nation.	Tonnage.
Great Britain	351,000
France	160,000
Russia	142,000
Germany	118,000
United States	322,000
Italy	70,000
Japan	10,000
Austria	56,000

This [illegible] large part for the increase in cost of the naval [illegible] 00 in Cleveland's Administration to [illegible] 00 in the present.

[illegible] a battle ship at least one year. [illegible] would be [illegible] the provision for the three great battle [illegible]

The [illegible] of keeping a battle ship in commission in time of peace [illegible] and $[illegible] a year, and on the Asiatic [illegible] a year. An armored cruiser costs [illegible] a year, and a protected cruiser [illegible] a year.

[illegible] were proportioned to the number and class of the Navy [illegible] as to whether ships should be kept "in commission" or "in ordinary" [illegible] and properly cared for, and what would be the [illegible] of the ships.

The [illegible] that the ships would depreciate less [illegible] "in ordinary" than when "in commission" [illegible] a year to keep [illegible] in commission, it could be kept in as good condition [illegible] "in ordinary" at a cost of from one-fifth to one-[illegible] of its [illegible].

I [illegible] the following as making for economy, without lessening [illegible] of the Navy:

First. Let some of the ships go out of commission, or "in ordinary" as it is called, with sufficient crew to keep them in good condition and ready for service on twenty-four hours' notice. In this way several millions can annually be saved without detriment. Great Britain does this. Why should we not follow her example when it makes for economy, as well as when it makes for [illegible]?

Second. Eliminate the provision for 3,000 men provided for in this bill. We now have more men than is necessary to man ships that will be ready for several years, and sufficient men to keep in commission or send "in ordinary" all ships now authorized.

Third. Let the building programme for the three great ships, to cost $[illegible], go out, certainly for this year.

Fourth. Cut out the provision for the great naval station in Guantanamo, Cuba, to cost $12,000,000, and provide only for a coaling station at that place.

These reforms would result in a saving of $30,000,000, probably more, and without in any way affecting the efficiency of the naval service. This great sum saved from this one source could be spent to better advantage in the internal improvements of our country.

With one hundred million for the Navy, one hundred million for the Army, and one hundred and fifty million for pensions, we have for the military establishment the appalling total of $[illegible] annually—one-half of all the revenues of the Government. It has been stated that the agricultural districts contribute at least one-half of the $[illegible] annually collected for the support of the Government. What is returned to them? Large sums have been expended on public buildings in the larger cities and on the great rivers and harbors along our coast.

Besides this, Congress by law has taken the proceeds of the public lands belonging to all the people of the United States and applied them to irrigating the arid lands of the Western States.

It is no wonder that there now goes up a cry from the agricultural classes for relief. In the building of the great transcontinental railways. Why may it not annually contribute a few million dollars to assist the States in building the important highways over which the United States mail is daily carried? It is not a new proposition. In 1811 the Government undertook the building of the national turnpike from Cumberland, Md., to St. Louis, Mo., a distance of 700 miles, and expended on it about $7,000,000.

It is not questioned that Congress has the power. Is there any direction in which the Government can turn its energies and apply a small per cent of its revenues which would so benefit the agricultural classes of the people as in good roads? Instead of the present proposition for an appropriation of a lump sum of about $[illegible], I would suggest at least that amount be set aside every year for ten years, and the States in building roads.

Twenty-five millions is only about one twenty-eighth of our total revenues, and surely the people who pay one-half of seven hundred million dollars revenue can reasonably ask and expect this direct appropriation for their benefit. The fund should only be paid over to the States when they duplicate it. In this way each of the forty-four States would have an average of $[illegible] road fund a year. The property around the farms would give us good roads; farming lands would be more desirable, their value enhanced, and the condition and enjoyment of the agricultural classes greatly improved. These twenty-five millions can be saved from the one hundred millions for the Navy, and yet its efficiency not be lessened.

Let the people demand economy in the matter of the Army, Navy, and pensions, and [illegible] applied to internal improvements which more [illegible] country districts. I am not a sectional or [illegible], but when favored interests are growing fat upon the favor and smiles of the Government, I favor an insistence by the great agricultural interests, stretching from ocean to ocean, of some respect and consideration for their happiness, their prosperity, and perhaps their very existence. Without good roads, farming is not attractive, and our young people leave it. Make it attractive, and thus keep our young people on the farms.

Let the farmer prosper and the balance of mankind will not suffer. Had the hundreds of millions spent upon Cuba and the Philippine Islands been spent in improvements within the continental limits of the United States it is perhaps not too much to say that every great thoroughfare within the United States could have been made [illegible] of the magnificent roads of Rome and Greece of ancient times and of France in modern times. Let the people demand less of imperialism and Asiatic expansion and more consideration for and investment of the conditions of the taxpayer at home. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana——

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to have me proceed?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifty minutes of the time remaining to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK].

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, before beginning my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, I will further ask that I may be allowed to proceed without interruption, as I have a line of argument that I should like to follow, and my time is limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted during his remarks.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, in the Fifty-seventh Congress the Senate passed what is commonly known as the "ship subsidy" bill. It then came before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for consideration.

After many hearings and much discussion that committee refused to report the measure, thus ending its consideration so far as that Congress was concerned.

However, in the last campaign in my State it was announced by the Republican leaders on the stump and given out through the press that the bill was to be passed in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and that there was to be no let up on the fight until it had been enacted into law.

On the convening of Congress, however, it is made known, through the utterances of the Republican leaders, as published in the press of the country, that there will be no important general legislation during the present session of Congress. No doubt fearing the result that such legislation might have on the coming national campaign, the party adopts a policy of delay.

But now a majority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries report to this House a bill to create a commission, which, we are told, shall be "to investigate and to report to the Congress on the first day of its next session what legislation is desirable for the development of the American merchant marine and American commerce."

There can be no doubt as to the intention of the majority to press a subsidy bill similar to that adopted by the Senate in the Fifty-seventh Congress just as soon as Congress shall convene after the national election. There can be little doubt as to what will be the report of the commission to be appointed, for the majority in their report on the bill to create that body practically say that any other form of legislation except subsidy is futile, and the Senators who are to have a place on the commission will be appointed by the father and most ardent advocate of the subsidy bill adopted by the Senate in the Fifty-seventh Congress. I therefore take it that that bill will be the basis of the subsidy legislation offered as the result of the labors of this commission. I had the honor to be a member of the committee in the last Congress which rejected that measure.

The reasons that then impelled me to join with the majority of the committee in the defeat of the Senate bill I believe still hold good, and inasmuch as I have not given the Republican party action and the subject is again before the House, I desire at this time to offer the reason why I am opposed to subsidy legislation, and in doing so I shall, therefore, confine what I have to say on the subsidy question to the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate in the last Congress, believing that that bill will be the basis of any new legislation proposed on the subject, and a fair [illegible] of what can be [illegible].

The necessity for the restoration of the merchant marine of our country has been apparent to the people for many years. Its cause has been pled with so much force and eloquence by the leaders of my own party for the last quarter of a century that I must confess at the outset that I feel almost any course would be justified that promises the restoration of the American flag to the high seas. As early as the year 1884, having just become a voter, I remember there came into my hands a speech made on this subject in this House by the Hon. S. S. Cox, of New York. The clear statement of the case made by this eloquent orator, of the advantages to be gained by my country by possessing a merchant marine commensurate in size with its population and wealth, an argument which I believe has never been surpassed, left a lasting impression on my mind which has become more fixed by the passing of years.

[illegible] I find men so widely experienced in business and legislation, whom I know to be honest and patriotic in their devotion to their country, whom I am confident devoutly believe that they are about to accomplish by subsidy legislation that which so many of the wisest and best of my own party have so often asserted to be a necessity. I repeat that it is with the utmost [illegible].

It is true that the [illegible] party have demanded the restoration of the merchant marine to the high seas, and for twenty-five years and more have advocated measures which seem to them to promise this end. While they have been persistent in endeavoring to attain this object, they have never believed that it could be [illegible] by voting them a bounty from the public Treasury. Our leaders have held that a safe regard for precedent and the simplest rules of equity and justice forbid taking the money which has been raised by taxation on the whole people, representing, as it necessarily does, the fruit of the toil, which they have willingly yielded up as a sacrifice for the benefit of a just and equitable Government, and bestowing it on any single class that its business may be favored and advanced at the expense of all.

The arguments made in favor of such legislation are made up in the [illegible] future the advantages and blessings that will follow the flag when it becomes a daily visitor in the ports of the world. This appeal has accompanied every measure and every argument for the restoration of our merchant marine. It describes the situation. It enforces the necessity for relief, but I submit neither a description of the depths to which our carrying trade has fallen, the necessity [illegible], nor a fervid and eloquent picturing of the end thus to be attained give any convincing proof that the payment of a subsidy will reinstate our country among the leading [illegible].

[illegible] Is there a [illegible] Are its provisions just [illegible] we as a republic afford to establish the precedent [illegible] ment will bring about? Will it accomplish [illegible] claim for it? That is, will the payment of [illegible] in a [illegible] owners at the expense of the taxpayers and permit those owners to form a trust that will [illegible] from the public Treasury? These are [illegible] must be answered by the friends [illegible] the bill as it [illegible] into three heads: [illegible] in su[illegible]

[illegible] for carrying mails on American [illegible] between ports of the [illegible] mail service to be equitably distributed among Atlantic, Mexican, Gulf, and Pacific ports, and said contracts to be made with the lowest responsible bidder.

All vessels must be American built, owned, and officered; first two years, one-fourth; next three years, one-third, and remaining time at least one-half of crew must be American citizens.

[illegible]

First. Vessels over [illegible] and 20 knots or over, 2.7 cents per [illegible] per gross ton.

[illegible] 19 knots and less than 20, [illegible] per gross ton.

Third. Vessels [illegible] knots or over, 2.3 cents per 100 nautical miles sailed per gross ton.

Fourth. Vessels over [illegible] tons and 17 knots and less than 18, 2.1 cents per 100 nautical miles sailed per gross ton.

Fifth. Vessels over 5,000 tons and 16 knots and less than 17, 1.9 cents per 100 nautical miles sailed per gross ton.

Sixth. Vessels over [illegible] tons and 15 knots and less than 16, 1.7 cents per 100 nautical miles sailed per gross ton.

Seventh. Vessels over 2,000 tons and 14 knots or over, 1.5 cents per 100 nautical miles sailed per gross ton.

That all of the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth classes shall be constructed with reference to conversion into auxiliary cruisers.

That all such vessels shall take as cadets or apprentices one American boy under 21 years of age for each 1,000 tons gross register, and one for each majority fraction thereof, to be educated in the duties of seamanship.

The second title provides for the payment of a general subsidy to our merchant marine engaged in the foreign trade, and is in substance as follows: The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay, subject to the provisions of the bill, to the owners of American-built vessels engaged in the foreign trade, on each entry, not exceeding sixteen in one year, both sail and steam, 1 cent per gross ton for each nautical mile sailed. By Senate amendment this compensation is confined to vessels of over 1,000 gross tons on each entry, not exceeding sixteen in one year.

On each vessel of over 1,000 gross tons made and registered after the passage of the act for a period of five years after registration one-fourth of 1 cent per ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed in addition to the foregoing 1 cent per gross ton.

The compensation shall not be allowed—

First. To a vessel whose voyage is less than 150 miles from her port of departure from the United States.

Second. To a vessel on a voyage less than one-half of the whole length of which shall have been on a sea between a port of the United States and a foreign port.

Third. To a vessel which shall not be of the class A 1.

Fourth. To a vessel of which less than one-fourth the crew shall be American citizens or within the provisions of section 2174, Revised Statutes.

Fifth. To a barge or canal boat.

Sixth. To a foreign-built vessel.

Any vessel before receiving compensation, if required, shall carry the United States mails free.

Such vessels before receiving compensation, if required by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall carry apprentices as provided in title 1.

The owners of vessels receiving compensation shall agree that the United States shall have the right to take or employ the vessels at any time it may deem necessary upon compensating owners.

[illegible] shall be paid to owners of vessels engaged in the deep-sea fisheries three months in the year, if one-third the crew be citizens of the United States, $2 per gross ton per annum, and to citizens engaged as crew three months in a year $1 per month during time employed.

We find, therefore, that the first of the titles into which it is [illegible] is, in effect, [illegible] act of August 1, 1891, under which our present contracts were made with American ships for foreign mail service.

The act of 1891 divided ships into four classes:

First. [illegible] less than 8,000 tons, with a speed of not less than [illegible] per hour.

Second. Ships of not less than 5,000 tons, with a speed of not less than 16 knots an hour.

Third. Ships of not less than 2,500 tons, with a speed of not less than [illegible].

Fourth. Ships of not less than 1,500 tons, with a speed of not less than 12 knots an hour.

The compensation received by the various classes of ships for carrying the mails was:

First class, [illegible].

Second class, [illegible].

Third class, not to exceed [illegible].

Fourth class, not to exceed [illegible].

We have [illegible] led to enact the law of 1891, which provided that the compensation paid to the St. Paul, a ship of the first class, should be [illegible], made under the provisions of the act of 1891, for a trip from New York to Southampton, amounted to $[illegible], and that the rate of compensation paid for the same service under the Senate bill would be $[illegible]. Under the present contract we pay the Philadelphia and New York for each trip from New York to Southampton at the rate of $14,556 per trip, while under the Senate bill this compensation would be increased to $[illegible] for the same trip.

I shall not undertake to give the exact figures showing the increase in cost to the Government of maintaining its present foreign mail service under the proposed legislation upon the expiration of the present contracts, but the figures already given show conclusively that the service, taking no account that to be established, would be increased fully one-third in the cost of its maintenance. This increase is more formally set forth in a table used by Senator [illegible] in his argument against the bill in the Senate during the Fifty-seventh Congress, which is as follows:

The author of the measure said that it will increase the amount paid for carrying our foreign mails from $1 [illegible] to $4,700,352.

I am in no way opposed to paying [illegible] for ocean mail service for the United States. It is admitted by everyone that England and Germany have in many instances received material benefit from pursuing a liberal policy toward the carriage of their transoceanic mails; but the main already provisions of this bill are in no way patterned after the policy [illegible] pursued by Great Britain. England's colonial possessions have within their borders over [illegible] people. To these colonies have gone from the mother country some of the best blood of the British Isles. Here they have settled and made their homes, are cultivating the lands, and building up vast commerce [illegible], and it is absolutely necessary for political reasons that England should maintain almost hourly communication with her colonies.

It has been the maintenance of these relationships, such as a mother would keep up with her children, that has brought about England's great political strength, yet the assistance she has rendered her shipping industry by way of mail subsidy has, in the main, been for the purpose of encouraging and building fast to the close relationship with her colonies. In 1891 the present Commissioner of Navigation investigated this subject and verified the truth of these statements. He then said:

The object of the British Government in paying steamship companies to carry foreign mails is [illegible] the commercial interests [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The conditions asked for by Mr. Roach have been brought about. Every thing needed in the building and equipping of ships for foreign trade has been exempted from the burden of tariff dues. It is true that when this statement was made by Mr. Roach England had no rival in the manufacture of iron and steel products. At that time she had so fully developed her iron industries that she was able to furnish the materials necessary for the construction of a steel ship at figures that could not be approached by any other country in the world. This condition no longer exists. We have opened and developed the richest iron and coal mines in the world. The splendid genius of American manhood has applied itself to this great problem and has solved it with the same success that it has every other problem that has been submitted to it for solution.

In 1890, when Mr. Roach was lamenting our inability to produce iron in competition with England, our annual product only amounted to one and a half million tons, while Great Britain was producing 5,000,000 tons; yet in 1890 we passed our rival in the production of pig iron, and every year since that time have maintained our supremacy in the production of this article which is the basis of steel ship building, reaching in the year 1900 the unrivaled position of producing an output of over 14,000,000 tons.

It must be remembered that the argument of the payment of superior wages applies with the same force to this industry as it does to shipbuilding, and if carried to its logical conclusion would prevent our people engaged in this industry from selling their products in foreign markets in competition with European manufactures.

Is it true, then, that because we pay higher wages to the laborers engaged in this trade that their product can not be sold in competition with that of the English manufacturer, who pays his men far lower wages? On the contrary, we find that the American producers of iron and steel and their various products, after supplying the home demand, have pushed their trade right into the countries of low wages, and have there sold their goods at a profit. In 1900 the makers of iron made, exported, and sold to foreign countries raw pig iron of the value of $4,654,582. And yet this is only the beginning of what has been done. In the same year we exported products of iron and steel, such as steel rails, sheets and plates, hardware, saws, machinery, nails and spikes, and other articles manufactured wholly from steel and iron to the value of $20,653,189, and for the year 1903 to the value of $[illegible]. These articles were all made by the best-paid labor the world has ever known. According to the argument used by the friends of this bill, the makers would have been absolutely prohibited from making sales in competition with English manufacturers who paid less wages.

Another Senator, in discussing this subject, says that from the ore in the earth to the finished product every process and step is labor, and nothing but labor, and therefore, he says, a ship can not be built by American builders and sold in competition with those who pay their laborers less wages. He could say the same thing with equal force of any of the products I have named that went to make up the $[illegible] of exports of iron and steel manufacture. But when made and applied to these articles his arguments must fail to the ground for the reason that these figures demonstrate to a mathematical certainty that these products are being sold in open competition with the world. Is it not clear that the size of the wages paid does not control the ability to sell as cheaply as those who pay less wages? The truth is the American business man is so progressive and the mechanic the American laborer is so intelligent, that we are able to manufacture these articles with so much economy that we are capturing the markets of the world, notwithstanding we pay our workmen the highest rate of wages. This energy is just beginning to be directed to the shipbuilding industry, and it promises to accomplish without government aid the same results that have been brought about in other branches of the steel industry.

This progress is well described in an article printed in our consular reports for 1900, from which I quote:

> Gradually the Americans are pushing their way into the British colonies. The last [illegible] export the power and machinery [illegible] Colony. Egypt has [illegible] hundred [illegible] land of the Pharaohs, and [illegible] Harrisburg to connect Cairo with the Pyramids. [illegible] against the competition of American goods. Russia, France, Germany and Italy [illegible] power with machinery and electricity. Notwithstanding the [illegible] industry has been dominated by Britain. It would be frivolity to remain indifferent to the expansion of this American people.

If, therefore, American manufacturers have demonstrated that steel rails, locomotives, railroad coaches, electrical machinery, bridges, steel plates, steel wire, hardware, nails, structural steel, and raw iron itself can be made with American labor without subsidy and sold in competition with English and German products of like character, I maintain that they will accomplish the same results in our shipbuilding industry.

But the advocates of subsidy ask why this has not been already accomplished. Why have we not built up a merchant marine? I believe these questions can be easily and truly answered. And the reason will not be found to be the payment of higher wages to American workmen engaged in the shipping industry. Shortly before the war between the States, England, whose iron industries were then well developed, began the building of steel vessels. Our merchant marine was then composed of wooden ships, in the building of which we far excelled other countries, owing to the cheap and abundant supply of timber.

England possessing the advantage of having her iron industries developed to such a high state of perfection, on the advent of the steel vessel, which proved to be far superior to our wooden ships, began at once to supplant us in our control of the foreign carrying trade. I call attention to the following table, used by Senator Vest in his argument on this subject before the Fifty-sixth Congress:

Total imports and exports in vessels.

Year ending June 30—	Value in American vessels.	Value in foreign vessels.	Total.	Per cent carried in American vessels.
1850	$239,272,065	$90,764,954	$330,037,038	72.5
1851	318,167,326	118,506,711	436,612,943	72.7
1852	[illegible]	[illegible]	417,055,221	70.5
1853	[illegible]	[illegible]	498,934,804	69.5

1857	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	70.5
1858	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1859	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	66.9
1860	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	66.3
1861	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	65.2
1862	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	59
1863	241,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	41.4
1864	184,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	27.7
1865	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	27.7
1866	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	32.2
1867	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	33.9
1868	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	35.1
1870	352,989,401	638,927,488	991,836,889	35.6

This table shows that the decline began with the appearance of the steel ship in 1850. While we were then carrying 72.5 per cent of all American exports and imports in American ships, the percentage had declined to 65.2 per cent in 1861. This decline was greatly augmented by the civil war, as our merchant carrying trade in imports and exports fell off from 65.2 per cent in 1861 to 27.7 per cent in 1865. During this time our vessel owners, to avoid the dangers and hazards arising out of the war, either sold their ships or placed them under foreign register. The extent to which we were affected during the war period is shown by the following table:

Year.	Lost.	Abandoned.	Sold to aliens.	Sold to United States.	Total decrease.
	Tonnage.	Tonnage.	Tonnage.	Tonnage.	Tonnage.
1861	[illegible]	7,994	26,[illegible]	.....	[illegible]
1862	41,432	14,882	117,[illegible]	73,200	[illegible]
1863	52,041	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1864	64,851	[illegible]	[illegible]	12,[illegible]	[illegible]
1865	47,033	4,[illegible]	133,[illegible]	.....	185,[illegible]
1866	36,863	2,170	22,117	.....	61,186
1867	28,041	14,868	9,088	.....	52,037

This table shows that in four years we sold to aliens American ships amounting in tonnage to 774,652 gross tons. These were all American ships, constructed in American yards by American mechanics. The same necessity for a merchant marine then existed as now. The same party that urges the subsidy legislation was then in power, yet no effort was made to secure their return to the American flag.

When the war was over and our people once more turned to the pursuits of industry, a new factor was dominating the ocean carrying trade. The steel ship had proved itself in every way so superior to the wooden vessel that it at once became the master of the seas. Our people had excelled in the making of wooden ships and by this means had been able to control their share of the foreign carrying trade, but while we had been engaged in war England had most rapidly developed her iron and steel industries and perfected her methods of constructing ships from these products. Our own iron and steel industries, as I have shown, were as yet in their infancy.

The political party in power refused to alter, change, or relax the navigation laws which had been adopted at the founding of the Government, as has been so often shown, by means of a compromise between the shipping interests of New England and those desiring to prosecute the slave trade. In short, the decline in our carrying trade was due to the following causes: The vast superiority of steel over wooden vessels; the high state of perfection to which England had developed her iron and steel industries; the undeveloped state of these industries in our own country, and refusal to grant to our citizens the right to purchase English-made steel vessels. By this means we would have familiarized our mechanics and builders with the materials out of which they were constructed and the manner in which they were made and at once established yards for repairs and the building of smaller vessels, a policy so successfully used by the German nation. These were the causes that led to the unprecedented decline in our foreign shipping.

There were many other pursuits that seemed to promise our people better hope of success than following the sea. Our internal country was undeveloped. Furnishing its various sections with means of transporting their products, and intercommunication promised labor hunting employment and capital seeking investment the largest returns. The most perfect system of railroads in the world was a necessity. A most rich and fertile country lay along and contiguous to the Great Lakes. It was yielding vast crops of immense value, the transportation of which by the way of the lakes was sure to yield the largest profits to ship builders and owners. Our people were most progressive and intelligent and demanded for their necessities, their comfort, and convenience every labor-saving device, every manufactured product that science and ingenuity could devise. And this field of enterprise promised untold riches to adventurous capital.

We had millions of acres of the richest soil, such as that described by the late Senator from Kansas, where "you tickle the ground with a hoe and it laughs with a harvest." The people of the Old World needed and were asking for the products of these lands to supply them with bread. With a most liberal hand the Government bestowed these lands on her citizens, and thousands of them found free homes and busied themselves with the development of agriculture, our greatest industry.

So the pendulum swung back. The people, lured by such bright hopes and prospects, left the pursuit of the sea and devoted themselves almost wholly to the development of our domestic industries, which in time, as I have shown, have reached a high state of perfection. Capital invested here no longer yields such enormous returns. Our country has been covered with the most complete system of railroads that the world has ever seen. The carrying trade of our lakes is the pride of our country and the wonder of the world. Our manufactures have passed those of all the world in excellence, so that they not only supply our own country with what it needs, but have reached out until in 1903 they sold to foreign nations a product valued at $421,453,915. Our farms—I need say nothing of these, for they have been so well developed and the value of their products is so great that when undertaken to be expressed in figures it can not well be comprehended by the human mind, reaching, in 1903, a product valued at $913,584,571.

All these fields of industry have been developed, and we are once more turning our attention to the sea, and our capitalists have become so eager that, notwithstanding our navigation laws prohibit the sailing of foreign-made ships under our flag, they are every day reorganizing the lines belonging to other countries and making them the property of American capital. On June 30, 1901, as shown by the Commissioner of Navigation, American citizens owned foreign vessels of 672,000 gross tonnage. Vessels not included in this list by the Commissioner, but owned by Americans, and purchases made since that time would no doubt swell the list of foreign ships owned by Americans to over a million tons. This shows that the American people are once more turning their attention to the sea, and I maintain that the present course, reinforced with American intelligence and business ability, with the advantages this trade already possesses, will ultimately lead to the same result attained in Germany.

While therefore it must be admitted that the American manufacturer is able to compete with all his rivals in other branches of industry, the advocates of subsidy say that this is impossible in shipbuilding. All argument and reason is laid aside and the whole case is based on letters received by the Commissioner of Navigation from the Atlantic Transport Company, of Baltimore, written by its president, Mr. Baker. In this letter it is claimed that this company purchased four ships at Belfast and four in the United States. That the four built in American yards cost his company one-third more than those constructed in British yards. And the friends of this kind of legislation immediately say that the whole case is proven and that nothing remains to be said. Can it be possible that an argument based upon such premises can be conclusive? This company is on the anxious seat. It is a most earnest advocate of subsidy and will be one of the beneficiaries if this act becomes a law.

No one knows the conditions under which these contracts were made. There are many reasons other than the ones on which the fathers of this bill rely that might influence the difference in cost in this case. Because some ardent advocate of the payment of subsidies paid more for an American than he did for an English vessel I submit ought not to be proof enough to convince any man that such ships can not and are not built as cheaply in American as in English yards. On the other hand I contend that the melancholy frame of mind in which the Commissioner of Navigation finds himself, when considering the prospective growth of our merchant marine, is due to the bitter reflections that harass his conscience when he contemplates the sore straits to which he is driven to invent argument to controvert the position he formerly maintained with so much force and persistence, rather than to any logical conclusion that can be deduced from the figures given in his report.

It is true that our business men are as keen, active, intelligent, and farseeing as any in the world, and it goes without saying that you will not find them so influenced by sentiment as to find them buying in a market where their purchase will cost them one-third more than they can obtain it for in another market. It has never been charged, and if claimed has never been proven, that the Standard Oil Company is actuated by sentimental motives in its business transactions. It is an axiom that when this company lets go of a dollar it is sure to get value received for the investment, and, like the man from Missouri, must be shown full value before it parts with the dollar. Yet I find in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1901 this important news. He says:

> The [illegible] are the [illegible] ships, [illegible] company, [illegible] abroad similar vessels for the same purpose.

And on the same page of the report, in speaking of the ships in course of construction, he says:

> [illegible] nearly, if not quite, to [illegible] The strike [illegible] work [illegible] would [illegible] for the Pacific [illegible] two years and [illegible] last day. Two of these, [illegible] the finest yet designed by any nation for trade with Asia, have been launched.

The last two were built by the people who control the recent combination of western railroads for the use of these roads in the Asiatic trade. These people are well known to be the shrewdest and most capable financiers in the United States, and yet you would have us believe they are willing to squander over $2,000,000 for the sake of sentiment; neither can it be contended that the commencement of these vessels was commenced in the hope of the passage of subsidy legislation, for the builder, Mr. J. J. Hill, in a speech before the Chicago Board of Trade, said that he was building them in American yards because they could be built more cheaply there than abroad. These are the ships that the Commissioner of Navigation described as the finest ever designed for the Asiatic trade.

When we find the business judgment of such institutions as the Standard Oil Company and these financiers, and the absolute word of such men as Mr. Hill, reenforced by the conclusion that must necessarily be drawn from the fact that we are successfully competing with our rivals in every other line of industry, I ask is it fair to ignore all this because Mr. Baker happened to write a letter to the Commissioner of Navigation? Everything shows that our shipbuilding industry is working out its own salvation.

The Senator from Maine, in his argument in favor of a subsidy bill, claims that Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, and Spain pay large subsidies to their merchant marine, and I presume by this he means to argue that for this reason we must do likewise. He does not, however, show that the only two countries named that can show any material prosperity in this industry are England and Germany. We have already shown that the mail subsidy paid by England is paid for the purpose of keeping in close touch with her colonies; that this pay does not amount to as much in proportion to the mail carried as that now paid by our own country under the provisions of the law of 1891.

The Commissioner of Navigation informs us that barely 3 per cent of the British mercantile marine receives public funds in any form. Great Britain has built up her vast foreign trade and become mistress of the seas through her tramp ships, which do not receive a single penny of Government aid. This great fleet of commercial ships has been built and maintained and is now carrying more than one-half of the trade of the world without even the hope of governmental fee or reward. And yet gentlemen are so bold as to point to this splendid example of what has been done without subsidy as an argument for such a measure.

Many also claim that the splendid progress made in recent years by Germany in her shipping industries furnishes proof for the [illegible] contained in such a measure. I believe a careful study of the [illegible] which have built up the merchant marine of Germany offers a most complete answer to the arguments offered by the friends of subsidy. The German people, as soon as [illegible] that there had not been [illegible] the recommendations I have here [illegible] the policy for the time being [illegible] in the building of good vessels. The Government at once allowed her citizens to go [illegible] market and buy their ships. As a consequence, the people [illegible] seen become familiar with the kind of ships [illegible] manner in which steel ships were built. At first [illegible] sprung up for the repair of vessels. The Government adopted a liberal policy in permitting business to [illegible] repair of the building of new vessels. The result was that these shipyards began to grow up, the work being confined by way of repairs. And [illegible] the shipyards as the purchase of European ships [illegible] have increased until now they are building ships in open competition with the world.

The increase in her shipping has been drawn from every possible source. She has been England's largest purchaser. This is shown by the following quoted from Lloyd's Register for 1903:

And the following from Lloyd's Register for 1903:

[illegible] has been built to the order of [illegible] tons of shipping has been built in Germany for foreign owners. [illegible] Greece with [illegible] tons.

It is true that she paid to several of her lines for carrying the mails in 1903 nearly $4,000,000, but this has been paid on the theory so that paid by Great Britain for [illegible] she did not before receive. What effect [illegible] has not brought about the growth in her merchant marine I have shown is made by [illegible] the American system of subsidy legislation. I call attention to the following letter written by the director-general of the Hamburg-American Line to the editor of the London Times and reproduced in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1903:

THE GERMAN MERCHANT MARINE.

[The following from the London Times of Saturday, August 31, 1901.]

To the editor of the Times:

[illegible] and its development into the largest shipping [illegible]

I have, sir, your obedient servant,

ALBERT BALLIN,
Director-General Hamburg-American Line.

HAMBURG, August 27.

The policy pursued by the German Government has been to extend and apply to the lines to the Far East, to places with which she had no former communication, such as China, Japan, Australia and the German possessions in the Pacific Ocean. The ships that received this aid are compelled to be built in German yards. All others can be bought in any market in the world. It is this liberal policy that has increased the net steam tonnage of the German Empire from 81,994 in 1870 to 1,506,039 net tons in 1901, and the total net tonnage from 982,355 in 1870 to 2,093,033, and there is nothing contained in the German policy of free ships and the establishment of particular mail lines to insure direct communication with their colonies and [illegible] to [illegible] in the Far East that Congress may [illegible] the provisions contained in such legislation which provide for a [illegible] to all American [illegible] America [illegible] and for a [illegible] to all American ships engaged in the foreign trade.

Norway, which gives no subsidy whatever and gives to her vessel owners less than $150,000 for carrying the mails, has increased her steam tonnage from 13,715 tons in 1870 to 482,247 tons in 1901, and is the only country that has not suffered a decrease in her sailing tonnage, having about 44,000 tons more in 1899 than in 1870. On the other hand, the two largest subsidy-paying countries, according to their fleets, are Italy and France, and these two countries have failed to show such an increase in their merchant marine as would warrant any country in adopting their policy. Italy gave a subsidy in the [illegible] increased from [illegible] tons in 1870 to 434,711 tons in 1901, while she suffered during that period a decrease in her total tonnage from 1,012,164 in 1870 to [illegible] tons in 1901. France began the system of granting bounties and subsidies to owners and builders of ships as early as 1881 and has been the most consistent nation in following our this policy. She has increased the pay from year to year until in the year 1899 it reached the largest amount paid by any country in the world.

With a total tonnage of 977,755, she paid as total Government pay to her ships in per cent more than England with a total of 10,750,000. What has been the effect of the payment of these subsidies and bounties? France has given the system its fairest and best trial, but the result as established give promise that the [illegible] such a bill will be realized? On the other hand, the Italian system shows that while Italy has given it a most thorough and persistent trial, her efforts have [illegible] and have resulted in failure. Since 1870 Norway has increased her net steam tonnage from 13,715 to 482,247 tons in 1901; Germany from 81,994 tons to 1,506,039 tons; England from 1,111,[illegible] tons to 1,[illegible] tons; while France has only increased her steam tonnage from [illegible] tons. The following table shows the amount of her tonnage from 1889 to 1899 and shows clearer than words can express how vain has been the struggle.

These figures show that notwithstanding the payment of such [illegible] from 1889 to 1899 but 12,806 tons. The present Commissioner of Navigation sums up the case in his report for 1894 in the following true language:

[Report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1894, page xxi.]

In France and Italy the advocates of the system maintain that if the conditions [illegible] the purpose [illegible] the purchase of higher priced domestic shipping. But this alternative [illegible]

[illegible] to them, the French and Italian flags would doubtless have disappeared from the seas and French and Italian shipowners would have resorted to the use of the British flag, as is the custom, under our registry law, of the leading shipowners in trans-Atlantic trade.

This is a brief review of the amount of aid rendered by European countries to their shipping interests and a discussion of the purpose for which this aid is extended by the various countries. The failure that Italy and France have experienced with the subsidy policy I believe fully warrants the conclusion that the policy pursued by the countries of Europe offer no inducement or argument for the adoption of subsidy legislation and give no promise of the results so confidently claimed by its advocates.

The advocates of such bills often refer, however, in glowing terms to what has been done by European countries through the payment of subsidies. I have yet to hear a single one of them refer to our own experience in this line. The chapter in our own country which relates this experience, which describes the scandal over the attempt to increase the subsidy in 1872 to the Pacific Mail, is passed over in silence.

The story is familiar to every student of American history. At various times we granted bounties to various lines and the system was tried in each case for a number of years. The Collins Line received $385,000 per year; the Pacific Mail, $500,000 per year. The Brazilian Line received a subsidy from 1866 to 1876. In no case did we materially increase our commerce through this course or add to our merchant marine. In each case it proved a failure, and each case only led to demands for increased aid, and so flagrant and bold was the attempt to secure larger bounties that the corrupt and bold methods used by the parties interested to secure larger subsidies threw suspicion on many of the Members of Congress and brought about one of the worst scandals ever connected with American legislation.

The reason for the adoption of such legislation as is proposed, as expressed by the Senator from Maine, is one, and only one—American wages. That is, he claims the wages paid to our laborers, mechanics, and sailors in the construction and operation of ships practically prohibit us from taking any part in the carrying trade of the world. I shall not claim that the wages paid to American mechanics engaged in shipbuilding and to our sailors on vessels engaged in the foreign trade do not exceed those paid to foreigners engaged in the same lines. But I do assert that the difference in amount paid to sailors engaged on American vessels and those engaged by other countries is largely exaggerated, and for myself I believe that many of the figures given out are padded for the purpose of affecting legislation.

It must be remembered that the laws do not require American shipowners to obtain their crews in American ports. Section 4915 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides, "Every master of a vessel in the foreign trade may engage any seamen at any port out of the United States, to serve for one or more round trips from and to the port of departure or for a definite time, whatever the destination." It is a matter of common knowledge that the crew of our merchant marine engaged in the foreign and coasting trade are composed almost wholly of foreigners.

Referring to this matter in his report for 1894, the Commissioner of Navigation says that:—

Only a small part of the crews of the Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and of the Pacific Mail steamships engaged in foreign trade sail from New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and San Francisco, and that is the rule of their being shipped at Liverpool, Antwerp, and Hongkong.

That the shipping interests go into the market and employ the cheapest labor obtainable is conclusively shown by a hearing before the Senate committee in the Fifty-seventh Congress, which shows that in the Asiatic trade two-thirds of the crew employed are Chinese and are paid only $7.50 per month. I maintain, therefore, that the people who are engaged in the foreign trade are exercising the same ability exercised by every other class of business men and will employ their labor where it can be employed cheapest, as long as the law permits the American shipowner to engage his sailors in any port of the world, in any place that they can be engaged the cheapest.

This was also clearly proven to be true by the testimony of the only two sailors that have appeared before the Committee of the House in the Fifty-seventh Congress. Mr. Forsythe, who represented the Seamen's Union, comprising 12,000 sailors, said that the sailors objected to placing the necessity for subsidy legislation to be an alleged difference in wages paid in the foreign trade, for the reason that there was none, and the experience of his people, with whom he was in close touch, was that they received no more pay when engaged in the foreign trade than the sailors of other countries.

That the law of the port and not the law of the flag governed the scale of wages. Mr. Campbell, an ex-sailor and an ardent advocate of subsidies, in answer to questions, repeatedly asserted that when an American and a foreign vessel were lying in the same port seeking to ship a crew, his experience taught him that the American vessel could invariably obtain a crew at the same wages at which one was shipped by the foreign vessel. It has been claimed that in disputing this point we have relied on argument only. But here is the actual experience of two sailors, and added to this is the experience of a whole union, always alert and active to secure any legislation that will better their condition or increase their pay, speaking through their representative and declaring that the law of supply and demand and the port, not the flag, governs the wages paid to sailors engaged in the foreign trade.

To maintain, therefore, as some do, that there is such a wide difference, is to charge the American shipowner and master with imbecility—a charge that can not well be maintained against a class of citizens who have shown as much good sense, thrift, and economy as the American business men. When the shipping bill was pending before the Fifty-sixth Congress, the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries made a report to this House, in which they discussed very fully this question of the difference in wages of seamen employed on vessels of American register and those of foreign countries. And taking the wages as given out by the shipowners themselves, which the committee was compelled to do, as they were the only figures accessible in comparing the wages paid on the American liner St. Paul with the fast Liverpool passenger liner Campania, they found that the difference in wages paid to the officers and skilled employees did not materially differ, but that in the common laborers there was a difference which in the course of a year would aggregate about $15,000.

To compensate for this difference under the provisions of the bill it was proposed to give to her owners each year a subsidy of $278,334. Under the contract made with her owners under the law of 1891 she received as pay for carrying the mails each year, provided she made fourteen trips, the sum of $203,896. Thus we see that the pay to a single vessel would be increased under such a bill about $75,000 per year for carrying the mails, although there has not been a suggestion that the present contract can not be renewed.

It must be remembered, too, that there is but very little difference in the pay of the officers and skilled workmen, so if the bill should ever become a law there will be no rise in the wages, although the subsidy would seem to warrant it, for the part of the crew that must be American citizens will be the officers and mechanics, and the places of the common laborers will be filled by foreigners, and they will be hired in the cheapest labor market that can be found, as is now being done in the Pacific trade.

In a hearing before the committee of the House on the shipping bill pending before the Fifty-sixth Congress, Mr. Clyde said the sum that the American line ships would get under a similar bill would be no more than sufficient to compensate their American owners for the addition in cost of furnishing ocean transportation with that type of ship, as compared with furnishing it under the British, Norwegian, or other foreign flag in the same type of ship. We have seen that the difference in cost of labor on one of the American ocean liners does not exceed that on a British liner by more than $16,000, yet the subsidy proposed to be paid was $278,000. How can such payment be justified?

The Coast Seamen's Journal say:

Wages are equal on the vessels of all nationalities when shipping crews in foreign ports. In other words, it is the rule of the port and not the flag of [illegible] wages. The usual statistics on this subject are grossly misleading.

And says the Commissioner of Navigation in his report for 1894:

Unlike the manufacturer, whose labor market is to a degree at least restricted, the shipowner is at liberty to employ labor in any quarter of the globe, on account of its abundance, its quality, or its cost, he finds it for his advantage to do so.

Indeed, it would seem to be quite unnecessary to quote from these persons whose research and experience entitle them to speak with authority on this subject; for inasmuch as the same source of employment is open to all nationalities engaged in the foreign trade, it follows as a logical conclusion that it is not reasonable to assert that there can be such a wide difference in the wages paid as to entirely prohibit one nationality from engaging in that pursuit.

And in concluding what I have to say on this subject I desire to quote briefly from one of the most distinguished men who has ever been a Member of this House, one who gave the subject the most careful and painstaking study and research, one whom I have heard my friends on the other side of the Chamber eulogize so eloquently and so often for his wisdom and knowledge. I refer to the late Nelson Dingley, jr., of Maine, and I quote from a speech he made in this House, and these are his words:

It is claimed that the fact has developed [illegible] that the only reason we [illegible] more wooden vessels for the foreign trade is that they can be built [illegible] and run them as cheaply as our foreign competitors.

Why, sir, it has been said that the question of wages of seamen is one that meets us here and can not be overcome. I wish to show you, Mr.

Speaker and gentlemen, that in the foreign carrying trade the question of [illegible] nature of the [illegible] enough to [illegible]

It, however, does not be proven that the amount of wages paid to [illegible] of a country to [illegible] This is no new argument. On the other hand, it has been often asserted on this floor that the average of wages [illegible] privilege of [illegible] gentlemen who favor [illegible] the maintenance of a [illegible] who [illegible] And so healthy and steady has been the [illegible] year, growing [illegible]

[illegible] of our exports [illegible] country, [illegible] only in[illegible] year, and [illegible] 4 tons in 1870 to 874,054 [illegible]

This argument has never been answered and never can be answered. [illegible] other [illegible] of wages paid [illegible] [Applause.]

[illegible] of a country in public vessels of her own from [illegible] in a summing up of the case, use the [illegible]

[illegible] owned so small a percentage of foreign shipping our export trade [illegible] in the history of nations. [illegible] per capita in 1868, had increased to $17.96 per capita in 1900, and [illegible] 1. In 1860 the [illegible] amounted [illegible]

[illegible] exports, 63 per cent in value and a far larger percentage in weight and bulk are farm products, and yet the vessels [illegible] to secure the smallest rate of subsidy. If the purpose of the friends of this legislation is the promotion of commerce, why should this be the case? In an appendix I give the manifest of the George for [illegible] Times for February 20, 1900, in so far as they relate to farm products. The St. Louis is a 20-knot steamer of 11,626 tons, and would receive the highest [illegible] bill, to wit, 2.7 cents per ton per nautical mile. This voyage is a freight [illegible] of 10,000 miles [illegible] and 12 knots and will receive the highest rate of subsidy, or 1 cent per 100 nautical miles sailed per ton.

This shows that the St. Louis carried no real farm products and only about 400 tons of partly manufactured products, of which [illegible] bill to receive the smallest rate of subsidy carried about 7,000 tons of raw farm products, enough to fill the freight space on the St. Louis twice.

The total value of our domestic exports for the year 1903 was [illegible] 1903. Of that sum [illegible] or 62 per cent of all the [illegible] country. [illegible] It was pointed out to the [illegible] Congress, in the hearings, that [illegible] carry small [illegible] 4 tons in 1870 to 874,054 [illegible]

[illegible] pending in the Fifty-sixth Congress contained a provision [illegible] that [illegible] as well [illegible] rs. At [illegible] to r[illegible]

Is there any just hope that the adoption of the proposed policy [illegible] of subsidies other than for services rendered is [illegible] in freight to our manufacturers [illegible]

On the other hand, during the period when our people have [illegible] er, that in the event that two of the powerful European nations should engage in war we would have no means of transportation for products, and some one in the heat of debate has said that "if the war lasted long enough the products of the American farm and the American shop would stand [illegible]

This is a favorite argument with the advocates of this system. Is it at all likely that any such result would follow a European war? It is asserted in all soberness and candor that such result would follow, but with all due deference to the gentlemen who make such assertions, I for one shall ask higher proof than naked assertion. In either peace or war the European peoples must eat. In times of war their home industries will be somewhat disturbed. At all times they must look to the surplus of the American farm for their sustenance, and though war may come, [illegible] supply their wants from the surplus [illegible]

If war [illegible] it would not be long until the vessels of the [illegible] would seek protection under the [illegible] flag [illegible] as it did during the civil war. And [illegible] is now owned and controlled by American capital. [illegible] to all this, our tonnage engaged in the [illegible] in the ocean trade if it should be [illegible] products from rotting and save the [illegible]

[illegible] I hear one [illegible] that because two of the maritime nations of Europe happen to be engaged in war the products of farms and factories will be allowed to rot for want of means of transportation. I [illegible] that at the heart of debate has [illegible] of the American people to carry to a successful issue any enterprise that may be necessary. To preach such doctrine one must close his eyes to the history of the most complete triumph that the world has ever witnessed. In place of the dire results [illegible] show it to be true beyond dispute that [illegible] European war would stimulate and rebuild our merchant marine. Such a war would add more to its strength than a century of subsidy. [Applause.]

If the advocates of the subsidy policy were truly in earnest in their claim that one of the first objects sought to be attained by the bill is the building of ships in American yards, why did we not find in the bill the provisions contained in the bill introduced in the Fifty-sixth Congress, whereby the owners receiving subsidy were compelled to build new vessels equal to 25 per cent of the tonnage of the vessels receiving aid under the terms of the act, and the provision that American citizens having their capital invested in foreign vessels should be entitled to procure an American register of their boats and to receive one-half the regular rate of subsidy, provided they build other ships of equal tonnage in American yards?

The promoters of this measure must know that if any subsidy [illegible] at all is enacted, these two provisions or similar ones would stimulate the building of ships in American yards far more than any or all of the provisions contained in the measure, and yet they were ignored and turned down without any [illegible] Who can then wonder that it is claimed that the promoters of [illegible] were far more anxious about giving aid to the owners of [illegible] ships now engaged in the foreign trade than they were to stimulate the shipbuilding industry in American yards? If [illegible] is to be adopted, [illegible] for the omission of these two provisions already mooted to encourage American shipbuilding.

It seems to me that it is therefore clear that there is now no necessity for such legislation, for the following reasons:

1. Our shipbuilding industry enjoys many advantages not [illegible] It has [illegible] passed the experimental stage, is developing, and, without further aid, in a very short time will construct vessels in competition with the builders of all the world.

2. The history of the development of our steel industries in which the same high-priced labor is employed, proves beyond dispute that we can attain the same degree of perfection in shipbuilding.

3. The law of the port and not the law of the flag governs the wages of [illegible]

4. We [illegible] control the power of a people to own and operate [illegible] the business ability, [illegible] of the labor, and the giving of [illegible] to that particular pursuit.

[illegible] of England and Germany of granting mail [illegible] in freight to our merchant marine, [illegible] business for political purposes is not the cause of [illegible] of our merchant marine and affords no argument [illegible] such policy.

5. The only [illegible] policy followed by European countries has been that of free ships, and whatever prosperity they have enjoyed can more logically be claimed to flow from this policy than any other.

7. The war vessels being constructed at present are so much more fleet than vessels of the merchant class that the auxiliary cruiser feature promises no material advantage to our Government in case of war.

8. It will neither increase our export trade nor lower the rate of freights.

For these reasons I believe that such a measure, if enacted into law, would fail to bring about that [illegible] claimed it will [illegible]

I believe that the [illegible] asure is founded is unjust. [illegible] by reason of [illegible] you [illegible] lead? W[illegible] you claim his [illegible]

[illegible] years of failure, disaster and [illegible] When the farmer was unable to support [illegible] and some of his people proposed that the Government extend him its aid by way of a governmental loan on his products for security, you said such [illegible] Populists and intended to bankrupt the Government. [illegible] tablish this policy, and who can define the limitations, who can tell what the harvest will be?

What reason can be urged that during periods of financial distress the miner, the merchant, the mechanic, and the farmer should not become public wards, be the recipients of a subsidy or bounty? I [illegible] so long [illegible] people of equality before the law, carrying with it equal and only equal advantages to every man engaged in business or enterprise to receive only equal aid from the taxes imposed by his Government, has been obsolete. Yet I maintain that a strict adherence to this time-honored [illegible] will bring the greatest good to the whole people, and offers the only safe and sure guide to just legislation.

Here is the paternalism which gentlemen who advocate such legislation have so persistently opposed. I know that the [illegible] revenues are now at high tide and a small gift of from $5 [illegible] to some manufacturing or commercial industry may cause no great alarm, but you must remember that you have been dispensing the people's money with a most liberal hand. It is wisdom in the hour of plenty to prepare for the day of famine. It is by no means certain that we will always be able to collect such enormous revenues with such ease. A just regard for the future forbids lessening the public revenues in order to benefit a single class or industry.

We are all dazed with the picture of the day when the shout of the American sailor will become a familiar cry to the ear of the maritime people of the world; when the American flag, floating on the masthead of an American vessel laden with American products, will always greet the alien eye gazing seaward. We maintain that this end can never be attained as long as liberty is denied nor be brought about by a narrow and selfish policy of paternalism.

Kingdoms and empires may forget or ignore that which is essential to our national existence. Equality and justice are the corner stones of the foundation of our Government. No commercial advantage, however great, is worth enough to be gained by the slightest sacrifice of these principles. I appeal to you in the name of justice, in the name of equality, take the step, give no vote, enact no law, that will not leave every industry, every American citizen stand equal below the law. [Loud applause.]

Thus the St. Louis carried no real farm products and only about 40 tons of partly manufactured farm products, of which dressed beef is the principal item.

The Georgic, with a gross tonnage considerably less than that of the St. Louis, and which would get only one-half as much subsidy per trip, carried of farm products [illegible] times as many tons as did the St. Louis twice. Of these products [illegible] tons, or enough to fill the St. Louis twice. Of these products [illegible] tons.

Of farm products and partly manufactured farm products the Georgic appears to have carried at least twenty times as many tons as did the St. Louis. Of farm products carried [illegible] St. Louis would receive about forty times as much subsidy as would the Georgic.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the naval programme exemplified by this bill. I oppose it because I believe it involves a departure from the fundamental principles and policies which are alike the bulwark and the honor of this Republic.

It involves great extravagance; but that is, after all, a minor consideration. We can in no way illustrate the growth of our naval establishment so well as by referring to certain figures.

In the years 1886 and 1887 there was expended for the Navy respectively $13,187,000 and $15,141,000. The expenditures for the year 1903 were $82,000,000. The present bill carries a total of $[illegible], almost seven times as great an amount as that expended in 1886, and more than six times as great as the amount expended in 1887. What is the need of this great Navy? What nation on earth is attacking us or threatening us?

In 1895 the Executive insisted that Great Britain should settle a dispute with the little Republic of Venezuela by arbitration. The demand was complied with. In 1898 we insisted upon the independence of Cuba—that it should be wrested from a country which had held the island for nearly four hundred years. An attempt was made to form a combination of the nations of Europe against us. That effort failed, and failed utterly. About the same time a European statesman sought to make an economic combination or alliance of the countries of Europe against us, so that there might be retaliatory tariffs against the United States. That effort failed.

What country is questioning our control in the Philippines? What country held back when our President insisted that Panama be independent of Colombia? Certainly there have been opportunities enough in the last six or seven years for the nations of the earth to combine or intervene against us and cause us difficulty; but every time we have been allowed to pursue our course as we pleased.

The fact is, we do not need a great navy unless there is a combination of all European powers against the United States, and what is more unlikely? If there were a combination of all these powers we could not provide a navy which could cope with them without such a change in political, social, and economic conditions as would be absolutely appalling to us. Indeed we could not build a navy greater and stronger than that of Great Britain alone, without changing the whole framework of society in this country.

Why is it that the navy of Great Britain is so prominent, and why is it that it is maintained at its present standard in size and efficiency?

It is different with that country because of the great number of people engaged in shipping and fishing, the insular nature of the country, with its vast possessions over the sea, which it is necessary to protect and foster. The very large amount of capital invested in the merchant marine, and its very great prominence in the carrying trade, in itself furnishes the recruiting field for the navy, and at the same time a reason for the protection of British interests in all parts of the earth.

Again, a not insignificant feature, in which they are not superior to the United States except in the longer record of years, is the great traditions of the English navy. It is thoroughly appropriate when they select names for their battle ships which are built to belch out fire and smoke that they should name them as they have. His Majesty's war ships, the Colossus, the Powerful, the Thunderer, and the Terrible. That which would be empty bombast in another country is entirely appropriate when we consider the magnitude and strength of the English navy.

What is the reason, then, for this great expenditure of $[illegible]000, an amount approaching the total that is expended for the strictly civil side of the Government, bearing in mind that the Post-Office is nearly self-sustaining? It means that we are inviting the nations of the earth to attack us. It means that we are declaring to the world that we are going to enter into a field entirely different from that which we have occupied in the past; that we are striving to dominate political affairs in other portions of the earth. Is anybody afraid of the Monroe doctrine? In ten years we have had instances enough to show that that doctrine is admitted by all nations to be an established fact in the diplomatic policy of the world. It has been strained at times, in the opinion of some of us, without awakening any opposition whatever, so there is no cloud over it. Our supremacy in this hemisphere is adjusted, and that supremacy will rest upon the strongest foundations while it is exercised in justice and with the desire to promote honesty and good faith between these republics and all the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. Calhoun said the Monroe doctrine did not mean that we are to uphold one of these South American republics if in the wrong. President Roosevelt in our day said it does not mean that we are to shield them from paying their honest debts. The Monroe doctrine is not a doctrine of oppression of injustice to other powers. Rightly considered it means that in this hemisphere republican government must prevail, and that weak nations shall be protected against the strong. It is one which is in itself so manifestly just that no power of the world will ever dare attack it when properly maintained and when it is kept within its reasonable limits.

I remember a gentleman of this House, speaking a few days ago, said that Germany would soon attack us. What hobgoblin disturbed him in his dreams? [Laughter.] There is just about as much chance of war with Germany as that by some great cataclysm part of the Eastern Hemisphere will slip over here, so that one of her capes will abut against our country. The nations of Europe respect us; they honor us, and, so far as fear is salutary, they fear us. We have an economic advantage as compared with any part of the whole world. They know that in war our friendship is necessary. War is not a matter alone of battle ships, nor of men and cannon, but of resources and of staying qualities, of ability to provide for the strain and distress of a great struggle. What nation of Europe, if it were engaged in war, would desire to lose our friendship and good will?

There is another very important phase of this question. The tendency of the present time is toward peace. The situation is new such in the Old World that no country can go to war without grave reason, at least without incurring the condemnation of the rest. Since 1815, during which time, as it would seem, the world has grown in inventions and in the improvements which come with civilization more than in all the centuries before, the nations of Europe have tried to maintain peace and amity, because they knew that war, with its devastation and bloodshed, brings unhappiness and calamity to all the nations of the earth.

So the nations are warned they must not go to war unless they have the most weighty reasons. Now, here is our country, one which should most of all set an example which shall look toward a better day of peace and amity, that is spending six times as much for its Navy as it did seventeen years ago. We have nothing to do with their rivalries and quarrels. Almost as much as by our republican institutions and the push and energy of the American citizen we have gained our present standing among the nations of the earth by our splendid isolation. We are remote from wars and conflicts. Shall we declare to the nations of the earth that we will depart from those old policies, that new ambitions inspire and actuate us? Shall our battle ships line up with the battle ships of the countries which for centuries have been maintaining an extensive and depressing military establishment?

If so, the indication does not look toward peace; it looks toward war, and we will be taking a backward step. "My art, it was but justice," were the words the dramatist put in the mouth of Cardinal Richelieu. Our art and our glory, they are but justice. [Applause.] And if we stand for the triumphs of just diplomacy rather than by those of cannons and guns, we will gain the respect of the world. Oh, but some one says, it needs war to test and maintain our manhood. There are enough opportunities for heroism in this world, with its tragedies and difficulties, without war. I have listened here sometimes to men who fomented conflict by their utterances. I have washed there was a rule in this House that when a man talked in favor of war it should be settled that in case war ensued he must stand in the most conspicuous place on the firing line for at least the length of time he consumed in his speech. [Applause.]

"They are the men behind the guns," says one of our humorists. "Yes, I see men behind the guns and willing to be farther." [Applause.] We can not afford as a country to allow our example to be exerted in the direction of war and great military establishments. It is not alone the first expense, which will increase far more than we can realize, but we must consider that probably for every dollar invested in a battle ship, in a short space of years $10 will be required for the maintenance and equipment of the ambitious naval establishment which is projected. You must have dry docks and you must have naval stations; you must have coaling stations and colliers, with all the incidents which belong to a great navy. Nearly one hundred millions will be expended now and far more in the early future. But far more important than the expenditure of money is the threatening prospect for the future which this policy affords.

I wish that the words of him whose birthday we celebrate today could be heard again. His heart was always for peace. He was ready to fight and to die for his country, but he left in his Farewell Address that which is a priceless heritage, the injunction to cultivate and maintain peace and good will with all nations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He set forth principles which will be immortal because they are immortally right. I wish I could with some degree of force so much as whisper in the ears of men those words of William McKinley:

Let us ever remember that our interest is in concord, not conflict; that our true glory rests in the triumphs of peace, not those of war.

Oh, but it is said, "This is merely a defensive measure; the best way to secure peace is to be ready for war, and so build up a great navy." How similar to that are the words of Uriah Heep when he said: "We know that we are humble, but we are afraid that other people that are not humble will get the start of us." The best way to secure peace is to promote every means for an amicable settlement of national controversies by an international tribunal like the courts which render judgments between individuals, so that its judgments may be sanctioned and enforced. The strongest sanction that can be given as the years will go by, a force as strong as a despotism for the enforcement of its decrees, will be that of public opinion, which is the controlling force in our own country at this day.

Every step that you take to build other battle ships and to increase the Navy is another influence against settling disputes in this way. Is there no voice to be raised among us in favor of making advancement in settling the world's controversies in an amicable manner? Are we to go even ahead of the other nations in our naval programme? I want to call attention to this report to show that in comparison with us France and Germany and other powers are abating in their efforts for a greater navy. It is the United States that is going ahead with the greatest rapidity; it is the United States that is saying we must be prepared for war; it is the United States that is saying, in effect, if not in words, we are to be ready for war, which means that we invite war.

I want to call attention briefly, for this is a matter which presents some political considerations, to several paragraphs in the Democratic national platform of 1900. That platform says:

We are in favor of extending the Republic's influence among the nations, but believe that influence should be extended not by force or violence, but through the persuasive power of a high and honorable example.

Now, did you mean it? Was it merely an idealistic dream on that hot day at Kansas City, or was it an expression of the policy of the party? Has that idea outlawed since 1900? If so, how long does it take for the declaration in a party platform to outlaw? Is it three years or is it four years? Will that clause, or one similar to it, be repeated by your convention in 1904? In the face of that, are you going to vote for a $100,000,000 naval bill to-day?

I say this not with any accusation that this plank was mere buncombe in that party platform. I say it because I think this question should be viewed from the broad standpoint of statesmanship or what is best not for a political party or organization, but for our common country. It might even have been less important whether we elected McKinley or Bryan in 1900 compared with it as it was, in comparison with the great questions that might arise affecting the whole future of the Republic.

Again it was said in that platform:

We oppose militarism.

Well, is not a navy a part of militarism? Is not the desire to be second in the nations of the earth with your Navy an upbuilding of militarism? Has anyone from that side filed a minority report on any naval bill that has come into the House within the last three or four years? If not, why are these planks in your platform, if there if you are in favor of this large programme, this extended expenditure, this declaration to the world that America is to be a military power? Are these declarations to be repeated when you meet at St. Louis, or wherever you meet? We should cry halt on every issue that looks toward war or the preparation for war. This should not be a party question.

One gentleman, as I understand, opposed this bill because the material for the Navy was made by the trusts. That shows how, when a man gets a fad in his mind, he will go astray. You will never attack the naval programme with any such popgun as that by saying that the material that belongs in the ships is made by a trust. There is a broader and higher ground, and that is its effects upon the future of this great nation, upon civilization here and everywhere. Shall our statesmanship, with its aspirations, its forecast of the future, look toward peace and amity and good will, or shall it look toward the bloody days of war? For one I want to say that I am unable to vote for a bill that carries so large an amount as this. I am unable to vote for a bill that declares that the United States, which should be the herald of peace, the leader in all great movements of civilization, is going to double and treble and quadruple its Navy, all under the statement that we claim that it is in the interest of peace.

Gentlemen, you are not going to make the world think that it is in the interest of peace. I doubt whether, if you reflect upon it in your own inner consciousness, you believe that these battle ships and cruisers and torpedo boats mean that. They mean, rather, the gratification of a desire that we shall enjoy the triumphs of war upon the land and the sea again. I would not detract from the glories of the American Navy. I believe it is an efficient naval force, one which, as ex-President Harrison said, man for man, gun for gun, shall be the best in the world; but this bill means something very different from that. This is a programme far more ambitious and emphatic. It seems to display a desire that the future policy of this country shall be one of conflict. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much of my time remaining to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] as he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for forty minutes.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I shall take but a very few moments. Since I have been a Member of this House I have taken great pleasure in following the magnificent leadership of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] who has just taken his seat. I have recognized in the gentleman great learning, great ability, and great leadership. I have seen him bring onto the floor of this House a bill carrying an appropriation of from fifty to sixty millions of dollars for internal improvements and carry that bill through and defend it perfectly to the end. I remember that something like twenty years ago one of my predecessors was defeated for what was called his vote for a river and harbor "steal," and yet it was a bill which carried an appropriation of only fifteen or twenty millions of dollars.

Still, under the educating influence of my friend from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to-day the American people thoroughly believe in the improvement of our rivers and harbors, and no man in my district could be elected to-day who did not vote for a liberal appropriation in favor of such internal improvements. But I have recognized to-day in the speech of the gentleman from Ohio what seems to me to be a false note. I have recognized in that speech a want of that spirit and broad-mindedness which has characterized his career since he has been a Member of this House. If I understand correctly his proposition, it is that the time has come when the United States can well afford to abandon its Navy and disband its Army, and yet I bear in mind, as you do, that it has been less than six years since the treaty of peace between this country and Spain, coming after a war that was carried on and won by the magnificent spirit and conduct of the United States Navy.

I want to ask my friend from Ohio what could we have done for Cuba if we had been in the condition which the United States Navy was in twenty years ago? We could not have carried on a war which we claimed at that time and which we claim now was in the interests of humanity. But let us look at the world at large. To-day the United States has a navy which ranks fifth in magnitude among the navies of the world. Great Britain stands first, with a navy which has a tonnage of 1,516,040. France comes next, with a navy having a tonnage of 576,108. Then comes Russia, with a navy having a tonnage of 416,158; then Germany, with a tonnage of 387,874, and the United States, with a tonnage of 293,405. In this table accompanying the committee's report will be found the comparative strength of the United States when the ships which we are now building are completed.

It will give us a navy having a tonnage of 616,275, and make us rank as the third navy in the world, and in efficiency at least the second. To-day, while this bill is under discussion, two of the great nations of the earth are engaged in war: one a nation representing 140,000,000 of people of the Caucasian race, and the other a nation representing 40,000,000 of people of a different race. So far the war has not been upon land, but has been upon the seas. While Great Britain, and France, and Germany, and all the nations of Europe are increasing their navies, what right have we to say that this nation, with the greatest seacoast of any nation on the face of the globe; bathed, as it is, by the Atlantic on the one side and the Pacific upon the other—what right have we to say that we are secure, unless we have a navy that compares favorably with the navies of the great nations of the earth?

During the past fifteen years there has been a large amount of discussion with reference to the origin of what is known as the "new" or "steel" Navy. There has been more discussion as to whom the credit is due for originating this new method of construction. Men high in office and in the councils of each political party have at different times been credited with the honor of being the author or father of the new Navy.

I have before me the report of the House Committee on Naval Affairs presented at the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, in March, 1882, which would appear to settle this much-mooted question at once and for all time. This report, which contains more than 200 pages, was prepared by the Hon. Benjamin W. Harris, a Member of Congress from Massachusetts, who was at that time chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs. Mr. Harris is still living, at the age of some four score years, and still in perfect possession of that splendid mental vigor and equipment which rendered him a man of large influence while serving in this House. I am not aware that he has ever complained because a deserved credit fairly due him has never, up to the present time, been accorded him, nor am I aware that he has ever made complaint when the credit has been given to others, which he has so well earned and fairly belongs to him. This report ought to settle the question without further discussion.

It sets forth the weakness of our Navy as it existed in 1882, showing that we had at that time only thirty-eight vessels which could be of any possible service in naval warfare, most of which were second-rate ships, not one well adapted for service, and many of which were built during the civil war, and even prior to that time. The total tonnage of these thirty-eight vessels amounted to some 37,000, about the equal of the tonnage of two of our large battle ships at the present time. They carried only 357 guns of all calibers, none of which were of high power or breech-loaders.

This report, after pointing out the great naval strength of other commercial nations goes on to state that long delay in king to the building up of our Navy would not only be a folly but even a crime.

The report, in taking up the question of material for the construction of the Navy, says that the first question involved is whether steel or iron shall be used in the construction of vessels recommended to be built. The report then goes on to state the arguments in favor of the adoption of steel, reaching the conclusion that steel is the best possible material for ship construction, and says that the committee unhesitatingly recommends its adoption. And the committee, in this report, recommends the construction of the larger types of vessels to be built of steel to be the most effective, both in speed and power.

The report concludes by saying that the report made by the committee is entirely unanimous, and that no question of politics or party interest has for a moment divided it, and closes with the following language:

We see the country which we love and honor with equal zeal, a country which [illegible] to lead the world as [illegible] from its [illegible] to become the equal of the same he goes on the seas to regain [illegible] without [illegible] to be [illegible] for so [illegible] the beginning of a policy which may lead up to the hoped for results.

Mr. Harris has lived to see the fruition of his hopes, the building up of a great navy, which will stand third in tonnage and second in efficiency among the nations of the world, when the ships now under construction are completed.

No one can read the vigorous language contained in that report without fully comprehending that the Naval Committee of the Forty-seventh Congress, of which Mr. Harris was chairman, believed in the building up of an efficient navy, not for the purpose of warfare, but as a safeguard for peace. The committee reached this conclusion not as Republicans, not as Democrats, but as American citizens, more interested in the safety and development of the country than in the success of party ambition.

Mr. Chairman, what do you suppose was our naval strength in 1882? That is only twenty-two years ago; yet in 1882 we had but thirty-eight vessels, many of them built during the civil war; a few small vessels built directly after the civil war; and the total tonnage of our entire navy in 1882, twenty-two years ago, was 37,000. To-day we build two great battle ships which have a combined tonnage nearly equal to that of the entire navy in 1882. The total number of guns on those thirty-eight vessels was 357; and there was not a single gun that was known as a breech-loading, rifled, long-range gun on any one of those thirty-eight vessels. We built between 1865 and 1882 a number of small vessels, of which the total tonnage was only 11,400.

But in 1882 the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House came forward with a proposition to build up a steel navy, and we commenced soon after that the building up of this great navy which is the pride of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I deny that we are building up a navy to-day for the purpose of warfare. I deny that we are building up a navy to-day as a challenge to any country on the face of the globe. We are building up this navy for what purpose? For the purpose of our own defense and the defense and protection of American commerce. Go back in American history and see what has been the result when we have not had a navy. At the close of the Revolutionary war we practically had no navy, and what was the result? The first we knew there commenced reprisals on our commerce in the Mediterranean Sea. The pirates of Algiers came out and demanded tribute of the United States. And what did we do? We were at their mercy. We [illegible] what many other nations did at that time. We paid them a [illegible] amounting to more than $1,000,000 for the protection of our commerce in the Mediterranean and adjoining seas. And why did we do it? Simply because we had no navy to defend our commerce. And then France, seeing our weakness, brought on the naval warfare which followed. Great Britain, seeing our weakness on the sea, brought on the war of 1812. Then the American people—a maritime people, a commercial people, for our people have come from the great maritime races of the world, from Portugal, from Spain, from Sweden, from Great Britain, and from France—took measures to [illegible] themselves. We then built up a navy and fought our three wars of [illegible] upon the lakes and upon the sea in a manner that reflected great credit upon the American seamen.

Suppose we had had a great navy at the opening of our civil war. It would have averted war. But now we have reached the time when we are building up our Navy. And why are we building it up? We are not building it up for the purpose of being the greatest nation upon the seas, but we are building it up for the purpose of keeping peace between ourselves and the rest of the world.

[illegible] says that we are an isolated nation. That may [illegible] years ago, but it is not true now. That was true in 1897, when the House Committee came out in favor of a strong and large Navy. But it is not true to-day. The American flag now floats over Porto Rico. It floats thousands of miles to the westward, near the scene of the great conflict that is going on to-day. American commerce is whitening the seas, and American commerce must be protected.

Take about the expense. I admit that this bill carries a large amount, but suppose Mr. Chairman, that some naval power were to blockade for a month or two the port of New York, what would be the expense to the American people?

[illegible] Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of this House to vote the [illegible] that is now called for. In voting that appropriation I believe that we vote in accordance with the sentiment of the American people. I am aware that the American people are [illegible] of the [illegible] they are at variance [illegible] the question of [illegible] and for [illegible] I know [illegible] the American people are [illegible] on the question of [illegible] I am [illegible] that the American people are [illegible] and to American [illegible] [Applause.]

Mr. [illegible] I ask unanimous consent that I may [illegible] that I be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to [illegible] the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to [illegible] word.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMSON] said some things this morning that I [illegible] e. He spoke with his usual deliberation and his usual sound judgment in great part. [illegible] He [illegible] lie up at their w[illegible] rot; that American [illegible] the Amer[illegible] I now [illegible] of things [illegible] ary, or at any rate [illegible] the world with a chip on its [illegible] r, and it h[illegible] for a row, [illegible] Now, when [illegible] a-world-powering," if the [illegible] r, she [illegible] ate it. The [illegible] need not doubt that for a [illegible]. I am not only, like him, [illegible] expenditures, but am, like him, willing to go [illegible]

Here is [illegible] five millions, a naval bill [illegible] hundred and sev[illegible] ittee on Rivers and Harbors [illegible] river and harbor appropriations for the purpose of [illegible] re, but of investment, [illegible] in [illegible] that are needed, and they are investments, because they save rent wherever they are built.

I say this much—I go this far with the gentleman—that when you propose upon this bill new and unnecessary expenditure in order to carry further and beyond the ships already provided for, contracted for, or for which provision is made by law, then we can stand with him, some of us, and some of us can not, just as that will be the case on that side of the Chamber, and why? Because [illegible] not and can not be a party question. It becomes a question for each representative to decide in his own mind as to whether he thinks a particular battle ship, a particular cruiser, a particular naval station, started for the first time in this bill and not requiring merely clothing and food and equipment for those taking care of an existing situation, is necessary or is unnecessary. That is a question of business, of common [illegible] Member to decide. Now, I am glad to hear a voice raised on that side, which means logically, whatever it may have meant to mean otherwise—means, when carried to its last [illegible] [illegible] are beginning to awaken to the [illegible] to "world-powering"—"world-powering" with chips upon our shoulders as bullies in the arena of the nations—the less money there is left to make us really strong and great and powerful and rich at home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, as a substitute for my previous motion I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, it is not in order for the gentleman to make that motion at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I ask unanimous consent to occupy five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to occupy five minutes more. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is not a dollar that you put into a vain—aye, vainglorious—old Roman or modern land-grabbing national policy that does not subtract a dollar somewhere from a schoolhouse, from a good road, from the comfort of home, or from river improvement or harbor deepening, or from a public building in the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to add that the most defensible of all these appropriations are the appropriations for a navy. I do not see why this country needs more than 25,000 to 35,000 soldiers at the most. I do not see why she needs all this money being appropriated for fortifications. I believe that the adviser who it was given by the oracle to Themistocles and the other Athenians who asked it in the ancient days was good for them, and with a change of language is good for us. The reply of the oracle was that "the best fortification of Athens was wooden walls," and when they went back they construed that to mean ships—at that [illegible] and of all things [illegible] you are going to spend for military preparation and national defense the money best spent is that spent in steel and iron ships—iron walls. [Applause.] Instead of waiting until the enemy lands to destroy your shores and to kill you or be killed by you, you should, as far as possible, sink him at sea.

[illegible] I shall be glad to cooperate with the gentleman on the other side in cutting down the Army of the United States to 25,000 or 30,000 men, that are needed for the most part for police supervision, by the way. I would be glad if the money taken from that sort of expenditure and from fortification could be put [illegible] work of home development and some of it into naval [illegible]

Naval [illegible] not offense. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have had some ex[illegible] lately that ought to teach us a lesson in the way of [illegible] a great [illegible] side and twice as many upon the other. What was the experience of Great Britain in the last Boer war? She found that even with the great leviathans of the deep she could hardly transport more than one regiment of men at one time in one ship, with their arms, provisions, and accoutrements. What was the consequence? One [illegible] powerful and wealthy nations, considering its population [illegible], upon the face of this globe found it almost impossible to carry troops enough to guard communication from the seacoast [illegible] ation and otherwise, and put itself upon [illegible] ty, man for man and gun for gun, in the field with a little r[illegible] in the center of Africa.

It will be very hard indeed for any nation in this world, transporting her troops in ships, a regiment at a time, to land upon the American coast a number of men that could not be [illegible] to death in very short order, or bodily su[illegible] by the National Guard and militia of the neighborhood, if even our regular forces could not be gotten up. And then, if, furthermore, the enemy are to run the gantlet of an American Navy at sea, though not of "world-power" and world-conquering proportions, but simply of American proportions for home defense, they would find it a yet more difficult job.

And do you think they do not know that as well as we know it? They know it vastly better.

But you have entered upon this "world-power" arena. You have twisted the British lion's tail; you have, through the newspapers and otherwise, insulted Germany; you have engaged in this rapid-transit business in Panama, and the world would sit [illegible] Why? Because they know war with the United States would be unprofitable from every sort of standpoint.

Gentleman ought not to try to put the Democratic party in the attitude of inconsistency because it has said it is in favor of becoming a "war power" by setting a great example to the world, rather than going around armed as a bully in [illegible] and still does not vote down an appropriation bill to clothe and feed American sailors or to keep ships already in commission afloat and [illegible] with the contracts we already have made. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I certainly did not make myself clear to the gentleman from Mississippi if he has [illegible] from what I said any intimation that I favored [illegible] now under way to remain incomplete or to [illegible] maintenance of the Navy. I did say that I should vote against this bill, and I expect to do so if opportunity offers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You asked us if we would not join you now in the consideration of that platform.

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir. But what it seems to me was clear enough was this, that a material modification ought to be made in this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think so, too. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURTON. That the further construction of battle ships should be abandoned until we are done with those already in course of building, and I really can not see how the [illegible] ing its duty to this House and to the country without raising [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Four years ago the minority filed views against the then pending bill, and, so far as I know, it is the only time that such a thing has been done. We fought all these things over, we called attention to these increases and extravagances. We received no support, as I remember, from that side of the House at all. If we had then had the influence of the gentleman aiding us, we might have accomplished more. We have in every Congress since then protested against these increases. We have given the gentleman and his friends an opportunity here to vote to cut down expenses.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman is making a rather lengthy statement. I am glad to be informed——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The minority have taken the position, as I understand it—certainly those for whom I could speak have taken the position—that the gentleman has advocated here to-day.

Mr. BURTON. I am glad to be informed that at one time a minority [illegible] I was not aware of that fact, but if [illegible] to carry out and make part of the policy of this country the provision of the Kansas City platform, why be satisfied with filing one minority report? Is it not the duty of the minority to maintain that contest, to be strenuous about it to the end, with each bill, not to stop and refer to the RECORD of four years ago, but to continue it from that time to this?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly. I would prefer not to have it too long.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman wish to state to this House that the only way to oppose bills or to undertake to reduce its extravagances is to file a minority report? Why, of course, we [illegible] this bill out here. Nobody is in favor of a [illegible] building for the Navy. We are all in favor of a [illegible] and increase and of a faithful maintenance of what we have, but it is not required of us, I think, to file minority views every time, because it is a matter of judgment upon each item in the bill. We do not oppose the making of a [illegible] appropriation.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman state how many votes have been mustered on his side at any time in favor of a reduction?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I can not state the number, but I can state that a large majority of our side have been in favor of it on every occasion when a test vote has been taken, in my judgment.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman state——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. And I should like to ask the gentleman, how many votes have you mustered on your side in favor of your views?

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman state on what occasions these votes were taken that he refers to?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. There has been a test upon every occasion, as I recollect, in the last five years, and one test here this afternoon.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that the leader of the minority on this committee, the leading representative of the Democratic party on this committee, favored this bill in toto? He, of course, can answer for himself.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman who represents the minority on this committee can answer for himself, but what I have stated is that the majority of the Democratic membership of this House have heretofore taken the position that the minority, with whom I have cooperated, have taken.

Mr. BURTON. I think, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RIXEY. I should just like to state——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. I should like to state to my friend that when this matter was in committee there was a motion to eliminate the battle ship and the armored cruiser upon the ground that the naval estimates were recommended one battle ship, one armored cruiser, and three protected cruisers, and stated in their recommendation that they were to be considered in the order of their importance in the inverse order, that is, the three protected cruisers first, then the armored cruiser, and then the battle ship, and a majority of the minority members of the committee thought that the battle ship and the armored cruiser might be left out of this bill.

Mr. BURTON. However, is it not true that they favored an increase of the Navy by building additional ships at this time?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not to the same extent as the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to amend the request by asking that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. This may be taken as true——

Mr. RIXEY. Do you want an answer to your question?

Mr. BURTON. I should like to be undisturbed for a moment. The enlargement of the Navy has proceeded with the approval of the majority of the minority, and the minority have at least been responsible in the impression created in the country, that this bill with its provisions, with the increase involved, has been framed in accordance with the substantially unanimous judgment of this House. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi makes some remarks in regard to——

Mr. VANDIVER. Will my friend allow a single suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. VANDIVER. I heartily approve the position that the gentleman is so ably championing; but I want to inform him also that he is mistaken in supposing that this position which he is now controverting has been unanimous or even had the support of the majority of the minority either in the committee or in the House.

Mr. BURTON. Then, what is the attitude of the minority? Here is the plain platform of 1900, on which the minority do not agree. [One of the most [illegible] and [illegible] provisions in the platform. How could that minority if it ever wished to seek the approval of the citizens of the country who oppose the enlargement of the Navy claim that they made effective opposition to it? Here is the plank of the platform. He who runs may read. It is as clear as anything there; and this confession is made. We do not agree in supporting that plank of the platform. If that be the case, how does the country know that you will agree if ever it should happen that you should get into power? Were these mere appeals to be observed and regarded by you or utterly disregarded, as you should choose?

Mr. VANDIVER. If the gentleman will allow me, I merely suggest——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, if he desires to interrupt, will address the Chair.

Mr. BURTON. I shall have to decline.

Now, mention has been made of the omission to pass a river and harbor bill at this session. It is probable that the responsibility for that rests very largely with the committee, and, of course, if there is any blame it will rest upon its chairman. I am perfectly willing to take that responsibility.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not want you to think that I think so.

Mr. BURTON. Thirty-eight millions of dollars are now lying in the Treasury available for river and harbor improvements, nearly twice as great an amount as was ever expended in a single year. The sundry civil bill will carry probably an additional amount of $[illegible], making in all $[illegible].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is the gentleman able to state the amount of money that will be carried in the sundry civil bill for the purposes of public buildings?

Mr. BURTON. That I am not posted upon. I can not state that. I have no doubt it is a large amount.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that it will be much larger than ever carried by any public-building bill except that of last year?

Mr. BURTON. I should presume so, but I am not accurately informed upon that question.

That makes $46,000,000 to be expended the coming year, more than twice as much as was expended in any single year since the beginning of river and harbor improvements. What does that show? That it would be futile to pass a river and harbor bill with this situation. If there is any lack of promptness in the prosecution of that class of public work, the blame rests with the machinery of the executive department, which carries out the will of Congress. It is our intention to bring in a bill carrying an amount sufficient to maintain the work not expressly provided for. Thus if any reproach can rest upon this side of the House, or upon anybody, I am willing to take the reproach myself, because, as it seems to me, it was a sensible thing to do under the circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misunderstood there. I hope the gentleman does not think I am blaming him?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am blaming the system and the necessity for it.

Mr. BURTON. I think the system is wrong. The work, as prosecuted by the engineers engaged—not from their fault, but because of the insufficient number of them—proceeds tardily. It should also be said that the delays in preparing the plans and the time required by the Attorney General's Department in condemning necessary property are factors in the situation.

Now, something has been said about our being a world power. I do not see what blame can rest upon the Republican party in that respect. We took possession of the Philippines because we supposed our intervention over there was just as necessary as in Cuba. Whatever the decision may be, one thing is certain, whether it was well for the United States or not, it was well for the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands that we should take possession, and the Republican party proposes to administer that trust and maintain order and advance civilization if it can possibly be done. [Applause.] I do not want to be understood as a nonresistant. A great deal has been said in favor of withdrawal from the Philippines. Suppose in the face of brigandage and rebellion there the flag that went proudly into Manila Harbor should come down. Suppose the American Army and Navy should do what they have never done in history—give way without a fight in the face of a foe, and our troops sail away. The leaders of the party that brought it about might as well call on the rocks and hills to fall on them to hide them from the condemnation they would receive from the people of this country and from the world. Of that much we may be sure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: Does the gentleman from Ohio now contend that there is a state of war and brigandage in the Philippines now?

Mr. BURTON. I do contend this, that without an efficient constabulary there would be outbreaks, though great results have been accomplished by our control there.

Mr. HARDWICK. One further question.

Mr. BURTON. I hardly see how this applies to the line of argument to which I have been addressing myself.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to draw the gentleman from the line of his argument, but the gentleman was discussing the question of withdrawing or not withdrawing from the Philippine Islands, or whether or not we were under fire there. The gentleman, then, is in favor, as I understand it, of withdrawing from there as soon as the islands are pacified?

Mr. BURTON. Whether there is a firing line there or not it would be a surrender; it would be a withdrawal that would have in it the elements of cowardice. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why so, if resistance has ceased?

Mr. BURTON. Because we took possession there for a purpose and that purpose would be abandoned entirely if we should leave.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly I yield to the gentleman from Illinois and I desire to thank the gentleman from Illinois for giving me time, because he knows I was going to speak at a late hour.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he thinks that we ought to have a fleet in the Orient large enough and strong enough to protect the Philippines?

Mr. BURTON. Why, I presume I should say yes. What is the reason, though, that we need any more battle ships to protect the Philippines? Who is raising any cry against us? Who is threatening to attack the Philippines at all?

Mr. FOSS. In reply to that let me answer him in the words of Admiral Dewey:

"[illegible] happiness after the Navy left"? He said, "six weeks; possibly [illegible]."

Mr. BURTON. Why, Mr. Chairman, that goes on the assumption we are going to have a war, that we will be involved in a quarrel. Now, a quarrel if it arose with reference to the Philippines would require a naval force in excess, if there is a united movement against us, of any you are even proposing to build.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was at some loss to determine whether the gentleman from Ohio in quoting the Democratic platform on the subject on the Navy, did so with an approval——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I may say that there was an implied approval of the sentiment there; but I think the gentleman will recall that I asked the question as to what had been done by the party in pursuance thereof.

Mr. LACEY. I think the Democratic side of this Chamber misunderstood my friend as indorsing their platform and speaking for it with approval. I hope they did. I was at some little loss to understand the position he took. But in order that in the RECORD the statement of the Republican party on this question may be clearly set out, I desire to read what that party says on this subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman does that, will he let me ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In so far as that particular sentiment read by the gentleman from Ohio is concerned, do you not indorse the Democratic platform?

Mr. LACEY. I am going to give you what I believe on that subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to know, as far as that particular sentiment is concerned, if the gentleman does not think that is sound?

Mr. LACEY. What part does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To the one that the gentleman from Ohio read. I will read it to you again.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to have the gentleman read it, because I would like to have the two go side by side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (reading)—

We are in favor of extending the Republic's influence among the nations, but believe that influence should be extended not by force and violence, but through the persuasive power of a high and honorable example.

Now, if the gentleman objects to that he would object to the Lord's Prayer in the Democratic platform. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LACEY. The gentlemen on the other side, and the leader of the Democratic side in particular, indorses the sentiment as being restrictive of the expansion of the American Navy. So far as the moral question is concerned, extending American power by peaceful means is concerned, there is no conflict between the two political parties. But the issue here to-day is whether the American Navy shall be expanded or not. The argument was made that if you expand the Navy you increase the danger of war. But if you have a navy [illegible] to prevent war.

Now, on the contrary, the Navy is preventive of war. The very walls that the gentleman from Mississippi describes as defensive of Athens are defensive to-day, except that they are steel instead of wood, and the position of the Republican party is well stated in the platform, which I will read:

ENLARGEMENT OF THE NAVY

Now, this supplements the doctrine of our Democratic friends. You add the two together and you have something substantial: [illegible] Navy [illegible] and you have a [illegible] Lord's Prayer for the purposes of defending the United States of America [laughter on the Republican side], and that has never proved effective.

The battle ship is the great ocean policeman to keep the peace on the high seas. It is the defense of our seacoast, and our Democratic opponents will not dare raise their voices against voting a liberal appropriation for the American Navy. They will take shelter, if at all, on the ground that the amount proposed is more than is needed. The question after all, on both sides of this House, is as to what would be a just and reasonable amount of increase under existing conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], I think, stated the heart of this proposition. Suppose one side of this House is in favor of a large increase in the Navy, each Member of it might well differ as to what specific increase should be had each year. One man might be in favor of one battle ship a year, another of two battle ships a year, and another of a dozen battle ships a year; and in addition to the battle ships one might be in favor of one armored cruiser each year, and another of two armored cruisers, and another of a dozen. If the other side of the House is in favor of a smaller increase each year, they might differ as to what that increase should be. One might be in favor of one battle ship, another of two battle ships; or one might be in favor of one cruiser, another of two cruisers, another might be in favor of one battle ship and a cruiser, and another might favor two of each.

I think if anyone should take the pains to go back and examine the history of the increase of the Navy for the last six or seven years he would find that while both sides were in favor of an increase of the Navy, while neither side was in favor of "standing pat" on it, yet he would find that the Republican party has been in favor of enormous increase, entailing vastly increased and, in my judgment, extravagant expenses on the people, and that this side has been in favor of a more economical, a more moderate increase. I belong to that class of Democrats who believe that we ought to increase the Navy, but increase it gradually and moderately. I, myself, would not object to having a stated programme providing for a certain number of battle ships and a certain number of armored cruisers to be constructed during a certain period of years. I am not in favor of a "stand pat" policy and declaring to the world that we will no longer increase the Navy.

Why, Congress has in the last few years, in a single session, passed bills authorizing the construction of ships that would cost, when put upon the seas, $50,000,000. Thirty millions of dollars in another year, and this bill will entail a future expenditure of $[illegible]. Suppose we cut that in two and authorize in this bill ships to cost $15,000,000, and hereafter for several years authorize $15,000,000 worth, would not that be a constant and steady increase, and would it not meet the demands of this great country, and would it not appeal to the patriotism and the economical sense of the American people? After the passage of this bill, which carries more than $30,000,000 towards paying for and equipping ships already under construction, we will then have upon us obligations to be hereafter paid of more than $[illegible] to finish and equip the ships already authorized and those carried by this bill.

I have never believed in making this country a great offensive nation to override and intimidate the other civilized powers of the world. I believe in having a navy capable of taking care of our interests when war comes, and I believe in providing absolutely for our defense in time of peace.

I would hope, if it were in my power, part of the amount necessary for the big ships authorized in this particular bill and build torpedo boats, these submarine boats, and I would build a sufficient number of them to put them in every important harbor of the United States. While we may not have the means and while the people may not be willing and should not be taxed to build enough battle ships to go out and destroy the fleets of England, still we can economically build sufficient torpedo boats to keep the navies of the world off our shores. We can do that reasonably and economically. For one-half the cost of the ships authorized in this bill we could build enough submarines to protect every important harbor in the United States. For the price of one battle ship we can build twenty-five submarine boats. No officers of any navy in the world would dare take a ship into a harbor protected by submarine boats. Admiral Dewey stated before our committee in the Fifty-sixth Congress that if the Spanish Government had had two submarine boats in Manila Harbor, and he and his men had known it, the strain would have been too much for human nerve, and they never would have entered that harbor; and there it would be.

No man would risk the lives and no man would risk his own reputation in history by taking a battle ship freighted with a few or a thousand men into a harbor where these submarine monsters lay concealed. Again, I believe that sort of defense to be the cheapest and most effective that human ingenuity can provide for our harbors. I also believe that if it had not been for great corporate interests desiring large ships which require vast tons of steel and armor which they sell, the sentiment of the country would have been more in favor of defending our coast by the smaller boats.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to continue for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Another thing, Mr. Chairman, when you build these submarine boats for defense and put them in your harbors, your great battle ships can go out after them any and will not have to hug our shores to defend us. When you build smaller boats, these torpedo carriers, you liberate your battle ships. The building of the smaller craft eliminates the necessity of having so many larger and more expensive battle ships. I know a navy requires large expense. I know we have to keep up our navy-yards. We must continue the construction of ships and must preserve what we already have. But I believe that with an expenditure of one-half of what we are expending in new construction we can provide a more effective navy for defense against any possible enemy by appropriating a large portion of it to the proper means of defense. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have stated the spirit which has actuated me in my service on this Naval Committee. It has not been my fortune to be on the subcommittee that practically prepared this bill. I have heard many of the hearings. I have gone through these bills carefully session after session of Congress.

I know there is not a man in this House that would feel more humiliated by an American defeat than myself; I know there is not a man in America that would rather see the American Navy overtop all possible rivals than myself, but there are two things to consider—the necessity of what we are doing, measured by the amount of danger from the outside and the great people who have to pay these enormous expenses. We appropriate $85,000,000 by this bill. That means $7 out of the Treasury for every head of a family in the United States—$7 to each family. Where will it end? If you are going to establish great naval stations in the Philippines and in Cuba, and constantly and unceasingly add to the Navy and its expense by such extravagant strides, where will it end? Ten years ago the Navy cost $25,000,000, now near $100,000,000. What will it be ten years from now? The thing to do is to moderate the increase. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn. The gentleman from West Virginia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] here to-day is a most remarkable one. In violation of his own party's platforms, as I will show later on, he has announced his opposition and determination to vote against this bill providing for the naval service and a reasonable increase of its material. He has gone further, and made a direct appeal to the minority side to join him against his own party in this opposition. I congratulate the able and distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] upon his answer to this appeal, and his clear statement of Democratic position touching this question.

It is not, as he has said, a partisan question, and nothing in the Democratic platform, as I read it, can be construed into opposition to the upbuilding of the Navy. A platform of this kind is significant not only for its direct declarations, but also frequently for its omission of direct declarations. In this case the omission of the last Democratic platform of any declaration against the policy of naval building is, under the peculiar circumstances, very significant.

One clause of it does denounce what is called "militarism." It distinctly opposes the existence of a large standing army and insists that a small army with the home guard is sufficient for the country's defense at home. That declaration is, however, significant in the fact that not a word of it can be construed to relate to the United States Navy and to its upbuilding. Therefore, as I said on Saturday last, this is a question upon which it seems both parties can stand—a careful, thorough upbuilding of the Navy for national peace, national honor, and national defense.

So far as I know, the gentleman from Ohio must stand on another and a different platform from that of either of the parties; and I insist that it is a platform that has nothing in it; that is, "neither flesh nor fowl nor good red herring." It is not an American platform; and it is not the platform of the Republican party, which we have a right to stand upon and which has been reiterated time and again in the conventions of our party for the last twenty years.

In order to make this clear I want to read some of these platforms to see how far the gentleman in his appeal to the minority has been seeking to place himself upon the platform of the minority and against the declarations of his own party.

In 1884 the platform of the Republican party demanded this:

> We demand the restoration of our Navy to its old-time strength and efficiency that it may in any sea protect the rights of American citizens and the interests of American commerce.

In 1888 the Republican party proclaimed this:

> We earnestly recommend that prompt action be taken by Congress to the enactment of such legislation as will most speedily lay the foundations of our American merchant marine, and we protest against the parsimony of Congress in failing to make appropriations to work upon our ships so begun and to the wages of those employed in preparing materials such as those directly employed in our shipyards. We demand appropriations for the early rebuilding of our Navy.

In 1892 the same party in its party platform made this declaration:

> We favor the extension of our foreign commerce, the restoration of our merchant marine by honest means, wages and the protection of a navy for the protection of our national interests and the honor of our flag.

And in 1896, when we elected that great American statesman from the gentleman's own State of Ohio whose memory every Republican reveres to-day, and when we swept this country from one end to the other, we stood upon this platform, and the gentleman himself was sent to this House upon this platform:

> The peace and security of the Republic and the maintenance of its rightful influence among the nations of mankind demand a navy commensurate with the position and resources of the country. We therefore favor the continued development of the Navy and a complete system of harbor and seaport defenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] for five minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, we have heretofore stood in this House and seen those who were near and dear to us in party principles get away from their moorings and cross to the other side. If the gentleman from Ohio must go from us, we will deeply regret it. But where can he go for a platform on this question? He can not stand on the Republican platform, nor can he stand on the Democratic platform touching the upbuilding of the United States Navy. The significant clause in the latter's platform denouncing militarism and the omission of any reference to the Navy show that they favor or are at least not adverse to the upbuilding of the naval service, while the gentleman stands in distinct opposition, as I have shown by party declaration, to every principle on which he was elected to this floor.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is time for us to think about these party declarations. It is time for us sometimes to remember that we have reason to be proud of the record of our party when we have gone to the country upon party declarations; and there is no victory that we have achieved that has ever brought us more lasting success and greater good to the country than that of 1896 when we elected William McKinley upon the ringing declaration, amongst others, that we should uphold the American Navy and continue to uphold it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, we are always glad to welcome recruits, but I for one am not willing that a new recruit shall undertake to lecture me as to my duty. [Laughter and applause.] I have nothing to do with the effort on the part of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] to read the gentleman from Ohio out of the Republican party. The position of a majority of the minority members of the Committee on Naval Affairs with regard to the increase of the Navy was that we should not announce that we would never build another ship, but it was that we are now building faster than any nation in the world, with the exception of Great Britain, and it was unnecessary to authorize more battle ships at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That we have more under contract.

Mr. RIXEY. We now have completed twelve battle ships. We have under contract twelve more, so that when the battle ships under contract shall have been completed, our Navy will be then twice the size that it is to-day. In the statement which is furnished by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and which I believe to be accurate, I find that Great Britain is building ships to the amount of 351,000 tons, the United States 322,000, France only 180,000, Russia 142,000, Germany 118,000. We are building nearly three times as fast as Germany; and when the ships already authorized are completed, we will have far outstripped Germany in the number of battle ships and their tonnage.

The position of the Democratic party is that while we owe $82,000,000 upon these ships already contracted for, and while the ships contracted for will double our Navy, it is not necessary at this time to authorize ships to cost $30,000,000. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that we might expect a deficit, why not let the building programme for this year stand until another year and save $30,000,000 here?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Like rivers and harbors.

Mr. RIXEY. They tell us that they have not the money for any internal improvements. Save $30,000,000 here; it will not cripple the Navy, it will not affect its efficiency, and you will have the money. Admiral Taylor testified before the committee—and his statement is in print—that by 1907 we would still lack 797 officers for our Navy as at present authorized. If this is true, and it is true, why go on and authorize ships to be built for which we have not the officers? The position of the Democratic party is not that this appropriation bill must be voted against, and we reject the advice of the Republican Member [Mr. BURTON], who advises us to take that position. We are for a reasonable support of any navy that is necessary for the exigencies of the time. For myself I believe that we are to-day the second naval power in the world. Our ships are new, whilst many of the battle ships and armored cruisers of the Old World are so old that they ought to be relegated to the second or the third line of defense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

I was greatly affected by the powerful appeal made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the leader of the minority on this floor, when he made such a pathetic appeal in regard to the expenditures of the public moneys, or rather the non-expenditure of the public moneys, by the Republican party in the present Congress. He said that these war bills were so absorbing of the public revenues that we could not build public buildings. I infer that a great many people holding office are at present distributing the mails in the open air. He said that we could not dig harbors and rivers, and a sad condition was depicted by him, so that sadness came over me.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] came to my rescue and relieved my mind somewhat when he stated that it was proposed in the coming sundry civil bill to appropriate double the amount of money for the improvement of rivers and harbors that had been expended by the last Democratic Congress. That relieved my mind on the river and harbor question. But still I feared that the public buildings were being neglected, and I instituted a search. I have found very much to relieve my anxiety. I find that in the forthcoming sundry civil bill there will be appropriated $10,545,883.79 for public buildings now under construction and those already authorized by acts of Congress approved by the President and upon which no money has hitherto been expended. Upward of ten million and a half dollars! This in time of practical war, as I now learn; this when the money in the Treasury is being absorbed by the war bills about which we have heard so much.

I thought I would look and see what was a reasonable expenditure under a Democratic Administration in time of profound peace, so I went back to the long session of the Fifty-third Congress, and over against the upward of ten million and a half proposed to be expended for public buildings at this session of Congress I found that the Fifty-third Congress, the last Democratic Congress that we have had and probably the last we will have [laughter], in a time of profound peace, when they had to borrow the money at a high rate of interest, expended $1,126,500 for public buildings.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Ten times as much.

Mr. GROSVENOR. About nine times as much in the present expenditures; and that is about the ratio of all that is great and good in administration existing to-day between the two parties so far as the record goes. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words. I desire to call the attention of members of the committee to the question of the tonnage of our ships which we are now building. Owing to the fact that there have been numerous delays in the construction of our ships, it would appear that we are building a great many ships at the present time. If the contracts had been lived up to, more than half the tonnage to-day which is in process of construction would be built. So it is not a fair statement to take that particular diagram here which shows that we are building largely at the present time unless you take along with it the other statement, and that is this: Take, for instance, a period of years, since January 1, 1898, during the last five or six years, and how much tonnage have we added to the American Navy? Great Britain has added 641,000 tons; France has added 218,000 tons; Russia has added 160,000 tons; Germany, 190,000 tons; Japan, 153,000 tons, but the United States only 117,000 tons during the last six years. Now, take that statement and couple the other with it when you take into consideration the question of how much we have built and how much we are building to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss this question any further at this time, and I call for a vote upon the pending motion, which I believe is to strike out the paragraph on page 15, "depots for coal."

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Before the gentleman takes his seat——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line. I understand that the pending amendment is to strike out, on page 15, the lines beginning with 7; and I understand further that this appropriation which is proposed to be stricken out applies to the coaling station at Guantanamo Harbor. It is to the need of this coaling station that I propose to address myself, as I intend to vote against the amendment. And as I presume I will be somewhat alone on this side, I wish to explain briefly my reasons. In my judgment a coaling station at this point on the southern side of the island of Cuba, controlling as it does the Caribbean Sea, is a most important part of the home coast defense, and is entirely different from the proposition to place defenses in the Philippines or in distant parts of the world.

If one will examine on a map the routes of travel from our large cities, like Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, to South American ports and between Atlantic seaboard towns and the proposed Panama Canal, he will see that ships do not go between Cuba and Florida, but pass the eastern end of the island of Cuba. We need coaling stations for our war ships near this route. The mainland is much too far away. The strategic importance of the Caribbean Sea demands such stations.

As developments at the Isthmus go on during the next decade that route past the eastern end of Cuba will become more and more important, and the proper defense of this route and the control of the Caribbean Sea become part of the coast defenses of the United States and not part of a foreign enterprise. Stations and fortifications half around the world are no portion of our home defense. They will be sources of great expense, and in war with a great power a weakness rather than a help. But coaling stations as outposts for coast defense are right, and such is the location at Guantanamo Bay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Contingent, Bureau of Equipment: For freight and transportation of equipment stores, packing boxes and materials, printing, advertising, telegraphing, books, and medical stationery furniture for equipment use in navy-yards; postage on letters sent abroad, furniture, and emergencies arising under cognizance of the Bureau of Equipment unforeseen and impossible to classify, $5,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Just to illustrate that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is not quite as accurate in figuring at the time as in prefiguring things, he tells us that we are going to make more public building appropriations upon some appropriation bill and more river and harbor appropriations on some other general appropriation bill than we would have got if we had a public buildings bill and a river and harbor bill.

Well, now, there are some things that mathematics can prove to me even read in the confident and hasty manner in which the gentleman reads them, or rather prepared in the hasty manner and read in the confident manner in which he uses them, but it would be very hard to convince me by any kind of figures that we are going to get the river and harbor appropriations we need [illegible] we have this year when the River and Harbor Committee [illegible] not and that it is very hard to [illegible] that we are going to get as many [illegible] as we need to have when you are asked for the Public Buildings Committee to act and bring in a report for new legislation [illegible]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know that the great harbor of New York is wanting for much needed improvements. I know that New Orleans is wanting. I know that [illegible] I know that [illegible] and [illegible] I know that these [illegible] power [illegible] I know that [illegible] because there is a [illegible] way. I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman, that [illegible] me to be from much as a [illegible] You have [illegible] dollars, and we will [illegible] conflict in the next Presidential election that about on time to go in with a deficit, and then you will come along and swear it was [illegible] of a Democratic variety. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have promised to [illegible] you are going to have it, and you will swear I say we [illegible]

I [illegible] of the House up saying, "At the time the Defiant began to [illegible] I [illegible] Mr. Speaker I [illegible] and that you knew [illegible] that the Defiant had the news, and that you are prepared to [illegible] the information upon the part of the [illegible]." I know what you have been saying. I know that you have been saying that you would pass the general appropriation bill and get away from here without any other legislation, except perhaps a tariff [illegible] to tax the South, but as soon as you passed [illegible] the gentlemen from Ohio and I both know—we are [illegible] to know it—that for this year river and harbor [illegible] a great many other useful things are being [illegible] in these appropriations, and perhaps we are [illegible] because of the vast amount of money that has been made necessary to carry on the Government under the present regime with this "world power" policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Yards and Docks: For contingent expenses that may arise in the yards and stations, $[illegible].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute $20,000 for the sum now in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page [illegible] strike out "forty" and insert "twenty."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, in support of that I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that I had presented for contingent funds in the various bureaus, amounting to $[illegible] as follows: Navy proper, [illegible]; Bureau of Navigation, $[illegible]; Bureau of Equipment, $[illegible]; Bureau of Yards and Docks, $[illegible]; Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, $[illegible]; Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $[illegible]; Superintendent Naval Academy, $[illegible]; Marine Corps, $[illegible].

That is over [illegible] Mr. Chairman, in [illegible] provided in various bureaus in the [illegible] bill [illegible] and the [illegible] of the various clerks and [illegible] Now, Mr. Chairman, a short time ago I presented a [illegible] inquiry as to the [illegible] at public expense being used by various officers, and it was [illegible] that it should be stopped from which funds these [illegible] were paid. It developed upon [illegible] the Navy Department [illegible] and charged to the contingent fund of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and so far as I was able to find out, the only reason for charging it to this contingent fund was the fact that the [illegible] had exhausted their [illegible] funds [illegible] be worked [illegible].

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. Chairman, there is no increase in this appropriation this year. It is the same as last year, and it is urgently recommended not only by the Bureau of Yards, but by the Secretary of the Navy. I [illegible] for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desired to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZGERALD] a few minutes ago when the time would come for the Chairman to be out. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to state that we had expended in the last five years 117 [illegible] of war vessels. Now, the question that I wanted to ask the gentleman I will put in the form of a statement. In the last five [illegible] years we have authorized an increase of the Navy to an amount of [illegible] tons. While the amount that we have appropriated in the years past for the Navy is 117 [illegible], and we have [illegible] in the last five years [illegible] tons. I withdraw the [illegible] amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two or three words. Mr. Chairman, I do that at this time simply to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [illegible] the appropriation for Pensacola navy-yard from $1,952 to $7,500 this year.

Now, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] [illegible] made on the naval appropriation bill, and [illegible] was willing to join me in advocating the sale of the navy-yard at New York. I asked him if he was willing to turn over all the work being done by the Government yards to the private plants, and he said he was not. Yet, Mr. Chairman, it appears from the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs this year that the only place on the Atlantic seacoast controlled by the Government at which a first-class battleship can be docked is at the New York Navy-Yard. In this navy-yard were to be disposed of at this time, the only places that a first-class battleship could be docked would be at the shipyards' yard and at Newport News Shipbuilding Company's plant.

I insist that the gentleman's statement, if made in good faith and [illegible] of material benefit to the private shipbuilding plants. I assume, however, that his [illegible] was [illegible] a part of a great deal of cheap buncombe [illegible] by some gentlemen. He states that the value of the yard at New York—the land alone—is some $25,000,000. It is not so easy, even if desirable, to find a purchaser for land of this character [illegible]. According to the hearings before the gentleman's committee, that yard did at least 75 per cent more [illegible] work than was done by any other yard.

I recall the time when the gentleman from West Virginia had an opportunity to join with me in attempting to dispose and to prevent the undue growth of some of the insignificant navy-yards of this country. I recollect in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, when the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] was a conferee on the naval appropriation bill. The conferees at that time brought in a report agreeing to two items in the bill which had been placed there by the Senate—one item was for the removal of Hendersons Point, at the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, which would cost, when complete, $749,000; the other provided for buildings at the Charlestown Navy-Yard which, when complete, would cost [illegible].

The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. [illegible]] at that time stated that [illegible] proposed, even after removal of Hendersons Point, at Portsmouth, at an expenditure of [illegible], the facilities for merchant vessels would be [illegible], and that, in his opinion, it would not at all [illegible] a harbor [illegible].

I [illegible] at the time that discussion was up in the House, and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] did not then seem to be inspired with the same patriotic desire to stop the increase of these insignificant navy-yards. He kept silent in his seat at that time. He now in the [illegible] or the most efficient, the best equipped and [illegible] navy-yard on the Atlantic coast where it is possible to dock a first-class battle ship; and I insist that if the [illegible] were [illegible] that [illegible] be [illegible] upon the Atlantic [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment, without objection, will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval [illegible]: 1 clerk, $1,600; 1 foreman machinist, $1,600; 1 messenger and janitor, $[illegible]; in all, $[illegible].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The [illegible] was [illegible] and the Speaker [illegible] the chair a message from the Senate, by Mr. [illegible], [illegible] that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3317) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant right of way for pipe lines through Indian lands, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if these employees at Guam are the employees that are to be taken care of under the contingent appropriation earlier in the bill, on pages 3 and 4?

Mr. FOSS. These are employees under the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And they are additional employees and those that will be taken care of in the earlier appropriation?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read the next section, and then I will move that the committee rise.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, civil establishment, Bureau of Yards and Docks, $148,700.92, and no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such service.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12220, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

STEAMER BEAUMONT.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for filing the minority views on the bill (H. R. 4570) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont be extended until Friday morning next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to have the time for filing the views of the minority from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on House bill 4570 extended to Friday morning next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hear none.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA—PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CULLOM. As is, I think, known to all members of the Senate, to-day we shall [illegible] on the canal treaty. There is considerable discussion yet desired upon the treaty before [illegible] it if we delay by first disposing of the morning business we shall be quite late in the night in getting through with the treaty.

[illegible] treaty to-day, and to-morrow morning, if not earlier, we shall all [illegible] resolution be [illegible] laid before the Senate, so that those desirous of speaking—as I understand [illegible] Senators wish to speak on a new [illegible] may have that opportunity, and then we will go into executive [illegible]

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 12th ultimo, as modified [illegible] on the 8th instant, as follows:

[illegible] That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate [illegible]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say a very few words. Without any special order of the Senate, and by what may be termed a general tacit agreement there has been by Senators a discussion in the open Senate of the pending Panama treaty, and Senators have on the one side and the other stated the reasons why they will vote for or against the ratification of the treaty. As this is my last opportunity, I desire to avail myself of the privilege which has thus been exercised by Senators to state how I shall vote upon the treaty and to give my reason for it, for I have but one reason.

I shall not enter into a discussion of any of the questions involved, and my only reason in now making any statement is that I do not desire to be misconstrued or misunderstood [illegible] of the vote which I shall cast. I desire that it shall be understood what I intend by my vote, and I still more desire that there shall not be implied by that vote anything I do not intend [illegible] implied.

[illegible] Mr. President, that I [illegible] that so [illegible] are alleged on the part of the United States [illegible] prove of them.

It is a ve[illegible] whether a [illegible] has done so or whether he should be controlled by his own judgment. There are very strong arguments which have been urged upon either side of this question. There are those who think that a Senator should be so guided, and there are others who contend that he should not be; and, as I said, very strong arguments can be adduced and have been adduced in support of either the one or the other proposition.

Of course one necessarily has to consider a question of that kind in the course of his Senatorial service; and it has been a matter [illegible] to me in the past. As the consequence of the reflection which I have given to it I have heretofore come to the conclusion, which I still entertain, that it is the duty of a Senator to be guided by the wish of the people of his State when their wish is indicated in a manner not to leave him in doubt as to what it is. In my capacity as a Senator I stand as a representative, and I conceive it to be my duty as such, generally speaking, where no constitutional question is involved, to vote in accordance with the known wish of the people of my State upon any question of such importance, or where there has been such interest aroused in it as to elicit from the people an expression which leaves no doubt as to their wish.

And, Mr. President, I think that this is very much more so in a case where the measure is one of large scope and where it naturally involves in a [illegible] the material interests of the people.

In this particular case I desire to say that, regardless of my own [illegible] after the most careful inquiry by [illegible] Mr. CLAY] and myself, and through sources of information [illegible] to us voluntarily, there is no doubt left upon [illegible] that it is the wish of a large majority of the people of [illegible] that we should vote for this treaty, and, in compliance with [illegible] and in pursuance of the duty which I conceive devolves [illegible] me under such circumstances, I shall do so.

I [illegible] to say, however, Mr. President, that while I believe, in fact, while I am quite confident, that the majority of the people of my State desire that I shall vote for this treaty, I do not understand by any means that they approve of the recent occurrences [illegible] Panama, so far as they involve any of the alleged actions of the United States in aiding the [illegible] of the revolution. I believe quite the contrary of that.

But, Mr. President, the people of Georgia and of the whole South have been striving for this canal for fifty years, and they are naturally impatient of anything which they think will cause any additional delay in the beginning and prosecution of the work of building an isthmian canal.

They are of opinion that whatever injury has been done to Colombia by the dismemberment of the territory of Colombia can not be remedied by a rejection of the treaty; and they believe that the only practical effect of a rejection of the treaty is to cause a still further delay in the beginning of the construction of the canal.

Now, sir, I know that a very great deal can be said and is said contrary to the correctness of that proposition. Without stopping to discuss it, I only state it for the purpose of giving, as I understand, the position of those who, while they favor the ratification of the treaty, do not approve of illegal actions by the United States in connection with the revolution upon the Isthmus of Panama. If the people of Georgia thought that the ratification of the treaty involved an approval of the alleged illegal actions of the United States in connection with the revolution, as earnestly as they wish the building of the canal they would be [illegible] to the ratification of the treaty.

I think it proper I should further state that, while the people of my State think that whatever wrong has been done to Colombia by the dismemberment of her territory can not be remedied by the rejection of this treaty, they are very decidedly of the opinion that it is the duty of the United States Government to endeavor to agree with Colombia upon a peaceful settlement of all claims and all differences which have grown out of the occurrences connected with the recent revolution in Panama; and I believe, sir, that that view is shared not only by the people of Georgia, but generally by the conservative people in the United States. I have myself been very much impressed with the strength of that view. I have been very much in sympathy with it, and I have very strongly desired to contribute what I could to the accomplishment of that end.

As is known to the Senate, I have introduced a resolution, and a modified resolution, and I have offered an amendment to the treaty, all looking to this end. I desire, in order that these several propositions may appear in sequence in the RECORD, now to read them to the Senate. The original resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate [illegible] responsibility on the part of the United States, or upon the question of the amount of compensation to be made when such [illegible] shall be established [illegible] out of the matters herein recited.

The modified resolution, which I will read to the Senate, intended to take the place of the original resolution, is as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate [illegible] of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal at Panama.

While the original resolution is satisfactory to myself, I have modified it in this way simply to meet some criticisms as to phraseology which have been made by Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

In addition to this change of phraseology, it will be noted that in the modified resolution the provision in the original resolution looking to a submission of the controversy to The Hague tribunal has been eliminated. I would be unwilling that it should be thought I had abandoned the contention that a submission to The Hague tribunal is a proper proceeding in case there should be a failure in the effort at peaceful agreement, but, as a reference to [illegible] is a [illegible] proceeding only to be had when there is a failure at peaceful agreement, that provision may very well be postponed for the present, until it is seen whether there can be such peaceful agreement.

And then, I have offered to the treaty an amendment which has been made public, and which I will now read. The amendment which I have offered is to the first article of the treaty. The first article is one which guarantees to Panama the sovereignty of Panama, and to that I propose an amendment in the way of an addition, which is in these words:

Amend Article I by adding the following at the close thereof:

[illegible]

Under the restrictions which have been observed, although there has been no order passed upon the subject, I do not think it proper that I should offer the proposed amendment in the open senate, and I will reserve it for the consideration of the Senate in executive session.

I will repeat, however, that I think the approval of the resolutions which I have offered in the Senate, and the amendment proposed to the treaty which I have just read, is sought not only by the people of Georgia, but by the conservative and conservative people of the United States, and I believe that a compass the truth of that statement will become more apparent to the Senate and to the people.

It is not the desire, sir, of the thoughtful and conservative people of the United States that Colombia should be treated with any harshness or unkindness and anxiety which would certainly follow if the Government of Colombia has done in [illegible] and does not attempt to seek any redress for alleged wrongs, which, whether [illegible] or not, are [illegible] to Colombia to exist. Nor is it the wish of the conservative and thoughtful people of the United States that the Government of Colombia, in the effort to avoid that disaster, [illegible] and in the effort to redress the wrongs its people have [illegible] shall engage in a war with the United States, however confident we may be of our perfect capacity to deal with that war without any material sacrifice on the part of the United States.

I do not desire to trespass further upon the time of the Senate. In order that my vote shall not be misunderstood or misconstrued, that it may not be taken to imply that which I do not wish it to imply, I deemed it proper to make these few remarks.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I have no intention of making a [illegible] I did not think could this morning that I would say anything. I simply desire to say now, however, that if I believed the defeat of this treaty would [illegible] Colombia a part to the secession of Panama I would vote against it. I do not know that it will [illegible] that consideration. We know that the Republic of Panama has been recognized by the [illegible] United States, and so long as it is recognized by this Government it will remain a republic. If it is not a republic it has the [illegible] and sovereignty to make a treaty with any other country. Therefore [illegible]

If I [illegible] President, that the defeat of this treaty would compel the Panama [illegible] at Nicaragua, as was [illegible] I would vote against it. I would [illegible] we did not know that it will not [illegible] at Nicaragua. He has said so in a public [illegible] We all know that a majority of the Senate and a majority of the Senate probably [illegible] would prefer to build the canal at Nicaragua, where I believe it would have been better, [illegible] have seen the Panama canal treaty so forced as to defeat a treaty with Colombia. But the defeat of this treaty would not [illegible]

I believe that a vote for this treaty could be rightfully construed [illegible] the President of the United States. Then I would vote against it.

But Mr. President, it seems to me when a fact is established which is [illegible] treaty [illegible] the act which brought that nation into existence [illegible] ground.

The same thing that was done in Panama was almost precisely done in Hawaii. The President of the United States used the Army of the United States to change the government in Hawaii. And yet Hawaii has become one of the [illegible] and we [illegible] with it as we do with any other [illegible] thousand of us believed that the manner in which we acquired it was not honorable to this Government and ought never to have taken place. Long [illegible] that case and this. But [illegible]

I do not approve of what the President did. I think the country believes today that he [illegible] down [illegible] Colombia from asserting her sovereignty in a way that he was not authorized to do, and that he was [illegible] not be justified. I believe in the [illegible] made by the Senator from [illegible] House and not to the last [illegible] But we [illegible] It has been done.

I have no particular sympathy with Colombia although I think she has been badly treated. I am frank to say that it is a matter of [illegible] to me whether they have two so-called republics or had a dozen [illegible] It is not that that influences me. Perhaps on account of my early education my natural sympathies would go out to the other party—to the party that revolted and was engaged in revolution. I think if I had sympathy [illegible] would be with them.

But I do not approve the act of the President of the United States, and when [illegible] President stated a truth when he stated that he had not encouraged the revolution. I believe that the parties here who were working in the interests of the revolution had [illegible] from the State Department here that they would [illegible] I do not think any man can [illegible] done, is past and settled. I [illegible] treaty with the people of Panama can be considered as a [illegible]

But perhaps after all, Mr. President, the most [illegible] for me to vote for the treaty is that which [illegible] Senator has [illegible] from which I come [illegible] the canal. I think that when they do not accomplish what was done they think it is done and past and that it can not be remedied by a defeat of the treaty. They believe that the defeat of this treaty will not secure a canal at Nicaragua. They believe that if it is defeated it will [illegible] years the construction of any canal, a subject in which they have such an intense interest.

The people of the Southern States for years have [illegible] some time fear that [illegible] building of an isthmian canal will have a tendency to largely increase the price of cotton, which is their great product. They believe that it will reduce very largely the freight rates in order to transport it to the eastern country, which is their market. They believe that it will have a tendency to build up the southern ports and be of peculiar advantage to the South.

That is what they believe about it, and they are impatient at any delay which prevents the beginning of the construction of the canal. They preferred, as I think, that the canal should have been built at Nicaragua, but if they can not get it at Nicaragua they want it at Panama.

I voted for the Colombian treaty to build the canal at Panama, although I had voted against the Spooner amendment, and voted in favor of the Nicaragua route. Afterwards, when that became impossible, I voted, as I said, for the treaty with Colombia.

This treaty with Panama is more favorable to the United States. It is made with a nation which has back of it much stronger power than Colombia had when we made that treaty with her.

The people of the South want this canal. I believe in the old-fashioned doctrine that it is the duty of a Senator, on a matter of some public policy, to either carry out the wishes of his people or resign and let them send some one here who will carry them out. I believe in that, and I have always believed in it.

I do not mean to say, Mr. President, that I believe in obeying the will of the people when they would have a Senator violate the oath he had taken to support the Constitution. I do not believe in obeying them when it involves the question of a Senator's honor, or the honor of the Government, or the honor of the State which he represents. In all cases of that kind I would not hesitate to vote contrary to their wishes.

Take, for instance, the Paris treaty and the act of this Government in reference to the Philippines. There is no power on this earth that could have made me vote for it or to support it [illegible] I believed that [illegible] was a crime, a disgrace, and a shame, and that it will fix a stain upon this Government from which it will never recover.

[illegible] wholly different. As I said, the people of the South want it, and whatever the people of the South want, I want.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, if no further remarks are to be made in open session, I will move an executive session.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say a word or two before we go into executive session.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate more than a moment, or a few moments at least. I have discussed this question at considerable length heretofore, and I am not going over the old ground.

Yesterday the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] told us that we were about to realize [illegible] centuries; we are to have a water [illegible] the [illegible] and the Pacific. It has never been [illegible] but a dream until [illegible] at time at least. The project of [illegible] canal or a [illegible] of that country is older than the settlements [illegible]

And yet, Mr. President, we are about to build a canal upon a line that has never been examined and never surveyed as an enterprise of this kind demands; and to this hour, when we are about to vote millions and millions of money, some of the best engineers of the world declare that it is an im[illegible] I do not believe that myself. Mr. [illegible] sible scheme, but I do believe what [illegible] and again in the last twenty years, that no man living can say what that scheme will cost.

I have said, Mr. President, and I wish to repeat, that I have been opposed to a canal of this character. I have not believed and I do not now believe that, if the canal is constructed as proposed, it will be of any considerable value to us as a nation or to the people of the world generally. I do not believe that in [illegible] can persuade the commerce of the world to climb a hill and then climb down again.

Mr. President, there has been haste. We are told that we want to begin to dig. If twenty years ago you had built this canal [illegible] sition then proposed to the human race, it would [illegible] lay. If you had built it since we have [illegible] for propositions of that kind, it would be worthless to the commerce of the world.

Mr. President, in my judgment this canal will not be built as now proposed, for I believe the good judgment and common sense of the American people will [illegible] canal will not meet the demands of the commerce of the world. While, I repeat, no man living can tell what it will cost, whether the cost be great or small, the American people, having commenced the work, will unconstitutionally compel us, not in exact [illegible] but in the day of most of us who sit here, but in time to give the commerce of the world a canal such as ought to be built, or one is to be built at all.

I believe—and I have given attention to this question for very nearly a quarter of a century—that we have greatly overrated the advantages and blessings which are to flow from the construction of this canal, whether it be a lock canal or a tide-water canal.

I do not care to go into the question of the wisdom of the construction of this proposed canal, either as a tide-water canal or a lock canal; but I rose to say that, in my judgment, when this treaty is ratified, as it will probably be to-day, and when the ratifications are exchanged it will become a law of the United States, and it will be [illegible] as one of the [illegible] of the United States, and it will be the duty of all of us here to provide for the execution of the [illegible] contained in that law. It will need, Mr. President, [illegible] it will need some details in the way of [illegible] which are not contained, in my judgment, [illegible]

[illegible] of the ordinary [illegible]

[illegible] bonds. We have a law providing for $100,000,000 of bonds. If that were a law which could be executed, I do not believe any Senator [illegible] posed to it, believes that is an adequate provision for building the canal.

In [illegible] in my judgment, [illegible] issue. If we [illegible]

[illegible] would be [illegible] the ratification of this treaty. [illegible]

[illegible] I suppose later Congress would [illegible]

I want to [illegible] the record, Mr. President, a justification of my vote. [illegible] kind. There is [illegible] for one [illegible] no project w[illegible]

[illegible] say ten or t[illegible] is to be, or as to what kind of a [illegible]

Mr. T[illegible]. If the [illegible] had been in the Chamber when I began he[illegible] any reflection upon him. [illegible]

Mr. STEWART. I can [illegible]

Mr. T[illegible]. There are [illegible] that it can not be made a sea-level canal [illegible] as I before [illegible] sible scheme, but I do believe what [illegible] and again in the last twenty years, that no man living can say what that scheme will cost.

[illegible] enough to accommodate the commerce of the world [illegible]

Mr. P[illegible] the French spent two hundred and sixty-odd million [illegible] built, [illegible] lock canal.

Mr. President, I know [illegible] will be said, and said truthfully, that [illegible] of the French was conceived in in[illegible] it could not; but they did not dare [illegible] world that it would cost five hundred [illegible] canal, and would [illegible] the work. When [illegible] they called for [illegible] the French people two hundred and si[illegible] and sunk it in this [illegible] lobbyists who secured the action of C[illegible]

Mr. P[illegible] that there was an element here, a sentiment [illegible] unfortunate Frenchmen a part, at least, of their investment. I for one voted for this canal with the de[illegible] that I voted for it in the hope that some day it might be made a sea-level canal, and not because I believed as between a lock canal on the Nicaragua route and the canal at Panama that this was the better. No sea-level canal could ever be built on any other route, unless it were the one being [illegible] nearly, if not [illegible] if the canal was ever built we would [illegible]

Mr. I[illegible]. I think the first thing to be done after we shall [illegible] ir, and that is to [illegible]

I [illegible] President, of what ought to be [illegible] true that there are obstacles in that region which can not be [illegible]

[illegible] at the Commission say in their report—which I have [illegible] ly unworthy [illegible]

I [illegible] climat[illegible] and I ha[illegible] Mr. P[illegible] the [illegible] all suffer [illegible] and if we do n[illegible] here know.

Mr. Pr[illegible] of which I do not believe, in the nature of things, I can hope to see accomplished.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President [illegible] I will not be long, go into executive session on the [illegible] the treaty itself.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to [illegible] has been deferred until we get through with the treaty. I hope the Senator will not insist on presenting it now.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that if the Senator from Illinois [illegible] being pre[illegible]

Mr. SCOTT. I was not aware of the desire of [illegible] Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and therefore I will [illegible]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I subm[illegible] his Gov[illegible] Panama. I had read [illegible] the President in his [illegible] had [illegible] arms and a reasonable amount of [illegible] to cast their lot with the [illegible] come; that the Panama Canal Company [illegible] powerful factors in Colombia, were actu[illegible] and that three other great De[illegible] Cauca, the most powerful State of Colombia, [illegible]

Bolivar—were in sympathy with the Panamaians and, to a more or less extent, themselves ripe for a revolution.

A[illegible] and other circumstances, tending to show widespread [illegible] in the various Departments of Colombia and the demoralization of its army and navy, were well known and supposed as I thought [illegible] that the insurrection in Panama [illegible] of the defeat by the Colombians [illegible] I have but little doubt. [illegible] our interference I can not [illegible] I do not [illegible] under treaty [illegible] That is what we have [illegible] my mind it is the most regrettable [illegible]

[illegible] I [illegible] the Administration of Panama [illegible] forces of Colombia to suppress the [illegible] to her authority upon the [illegible] ence of Panama [illegible] the President as here and in [illegible] of international [illegible] Mr. President, [illegible] action of the Administration in these particulars [illegible] in the [illegible] the independence of Panama and the other powers of the world [illegible] I remember the fact, whether publicly [illegible] Panama was an independent nation, and we [illegible] with as a separate power.

Mr. DANIEL. Will my friend from North Carolina yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senator from North Carolina [illegible] from Virginia.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. When the Government of Panama was [illegible] as a separate government, [illegible] Government of Panama [illegible] nations, and did we [illegible]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, [illegible] Government of Panama was [illegible] sovereignty of Colombia, over the Isthmus [illegible]

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. We were under obligation to protect the sovereignty of Colombia [illegible]

Mr. SIMMONS. [illegible]

Mr. DANIEL. [illegible] party [illegible] That is the way [illegible] President [illegible] it. That was the [illegible]

Mr. SIMMONS. [illegible] to [illegible] the Isthmus of Panama, and I [illegible] if I [illegible] all of the Senators on this side of the Chamber [illegible] for the treaty. Under these circumstances I [illegible] read in the Washington Post of this morning the [illegible] of the late Secretary of War, Mr. Root, at a [illegible] banquet. I will read a brief extract from that speech. It is as follows:

> The conduct of the United States Government in recognizing the independence of Panama [illegible] as carrying no weight [illegible]
> Unfortunately, Mr. President, to use the phraseology of Mr. Root, sin has been committed in this business, and one of the chief sinners is the ex-Secretary of War himself, for there is reason to believe that he is largely responsible for the reprehensible action of this Government in these matters. Nearly every Senator upon this side of the Chamber, if not every one, whether he intends to vote for the treaty or against it, believes that wrong has been done to Colombia and that reparation should be made for that wrong, and they intend to insist that reparation shall be made. But, Mr. President, those of us who expect to vote for the treaty do not intend by that act to condone the sins of the Administration; and I want to say to Senators on the other side of this Chamber that I understand the sentiments of Senators on this side of the Chamber who intend to vote for the treaty, they would vote with practical unanimity against it and it would be defeated if they thought, as the ex-Secretary of War declares he thinks, that by voting for this treaty they would condone, indorse, or acquiesce in the wrongful action of the Administration toward Colombia.

Mr. President, ours is a government of divided powers. The States have certain powers and the Federal Government has certain powers. Within its own sphere the powers of each are exclusive and supreme. Both in the State government and in the Federal Government these powers are subdivided and distributed into legislative, judicial, and executive functions. It is a fundamental principle of our system that these departments of government shall be kept separate and apart, and, excepting rare instances, where their duties are in a measure by express provision coordinate, neither is permitted to trench upon the other, and each is bound by the action of the other taken in the lawful exercise of its functions. In the judiciary department the Supreme Court is the depository of judicial power; its interpretation of the laws enacted by Congress is final. The only remedy the legislative branch of the Government and even the people have in case of what seems to it and them to be a wrongful interpretation is new legislation upon the subject. This court alone determines the constitutionality of all legislative enactment. If it shall decide [illegible] be by amendment to the Constitution.

In other words, within its sphere its power is exclusive and its decisions are final and binding, not only upon the judiciary department, but upon every other department of the Government and upon the people of the country as well. Long years before the war, when the question of slavery and the status of the negro under the Constitution [illegible] an active question in this country, the famous Dred Scott case, which involved questions [illegible] was [illegible] The decision of the court in that case was one which met with almost universal disapproval in certain parts of the country; indeed, no decision ever rendered by that court has met with such general disapproval in these sections of the country as did that decision. It was [illegible] most and bitterest and most universal [illegible] and acted upon. It [illegible] by the tribunal invested by the Constitution with the power of final adjudication. There was no appeal from it. No [illegible] ent war could reverse it, and it remained the law of the land and was accepted and acted upon as such until it was overthrown and changed by the arbitrament of the sword.

[illegible] ago the question of the status of the Philippines and the Philippines under the Constitution was a burning question. Were they citizens? Could we hold them as subjects? Were they citizens, but not under the Constitution? Whether these people and this country should be dealt with by Congress in the way the Republican party insisted upon dealing with them and it, or in the way the Democratic party insisted upon dealing with them and it, depended upon the decision of the Supreme Court as to the status of these people and this country under the Constitution. If the Supreme Court decided one way, then we could continue to rule them as subjects and not as citizens and to hold this territory under the flag but not under the Constitution. If it decided the other way, it would be necessary to change the whole system of laws and theory of government which the Republican party had planned and to treat the Philippines under the Constitution as well as under the flag. The decision was favorable to the Republican contention; but if it had been different, as much as it would have disconcerted the plans of that party, it would [illegible] the Philippines and a [illegible] munities of the Constitution or have relinquished all control over them.

Now, under the Constitution and the practice of this Government in dealing with foreign nations, in receiving foreign ministers and in accrediting ministers and ambassadors from this to foreign countries, the recognition of belligerency or independence of a foreign government is an Executive function, vested in the President as the Chief Executive of the nation; and when, in the exercise of that function, he recognizes the belligerency or independence of a foreign country, whether that recognition be rightful or wrongful, whether in accordance with precedent or not, whether in accordance with the feelings and sentiments of the people or not, whether it meets with the approval of the legislative and judicial departments of the Government or not, it is binding upon both of those departments and upon the people as well.

Mr. President, in support of this position, I call the attention of the Senate to the following statement of Mr. Wharton, a great writer upon international law, found in Wharton's International Law, second edition, page 551:

> [illegible] which the President has [illegible] a new [illegible] way of [illegible] [illegible] present controversy. (36th sess., S. Doc. 56.)

Also to the following extract from the Commentaries of Judge Storey upon the Constitution, sections 55 and 56 and 55-67:

> But a much more delicate occasion is when a civil war breaks out in a country [illegible] of the [illegible] It has not been invested [illegible] power either to negotiate or act upon them. * * *
> That a power so extensive in its reach over our foreign relations could not [illegible] and firm and exalted patriotism.

Also, to the following extract from Mr. Pomeroy, found in Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, pages 669, 670, and 672:

> All foreign relations are thus confided exclusively to the President or to him in connection with the Senate. * * *
> [illegible] pass resolves in relation to questions of an international character [illegible] more efficient in such matters than a large deliberative [illegible] the initiative; and this step once taken, the challenge can not be recalled.

I also desire to call the attention of the Senate to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Williams against Suffolk Insurance Company, reported in 13 Peters. In this case the court uses the following emphatic language in defining the powers of the Executive in the matter of recognition of foreign governments and the binding effect of such recognition upon the people and the coordinate departments of the Government:

> There can be no doubt that when the executive branch of the Government, which is charged with the duty of intercourse with a foreign nation assumes a fact in regard to the sovereignty of any country [illegible] Congress, [illegible] expenditures which belong to him, it is obligatory on the people and the Government of the Union.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to read that decision on the point that the Executive has the exclusive authority to recognize foreign governments?

Mr. SIMMONS. I read that, sir, to show that where the Executive does, in the exercise of his authority, recognize a foreign government, the courts are bound by it, and every other department of the Government is bound by it, until it is overturned by affirmative action.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from North Carolina of course does not mean to say that that decision holds that the legislative branch of the Government is bound by the Executive act.

On the contrary, I invite his attention to the fact that the decision simply holds, which is the universal rule, that in a political matter the courts are bound by the act of the Executive or the other coordinate branches of the Government having jurisdiction of such matters under the Constitution. But it is a very different proposition, if the Senator will pardon me, to say that the courts feel bound by the acts of the Executive in such instances and saying that the legislative branch of the Government would be bound by it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not of course mean to say that the legislative department of the Government would be bound by an act of the Executive in the exercise of a coordinate function, a function as to which another department enjoys coordinate power with him or as to which it has the power of review.

I cited that case for the purpose of showing that the recognition of belligerency and independence in the first instance is exclusively an executive act. It may be, as Judge Story with [illegible] suggests, that Congress could repudiate that act. It may be that Congress could make that act ineffective to a certain extent by refusing to pay the salary of a minister dispatched to that country from this Government; but that would not militate against the proposition that recognition is exclusively an executive act. Even if Congress possess the power of repudiation, there is now no proposition to do that. To defeat this treaty will not have that effect. If we defeat this treaty, the status will not be changed. We will still have a minister in Panama and Panama will still have a minister here.

Mr. President, on yesterday there was a deliverance in this Chamber by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], recognized by all as one of the greatest constitutional lawyers in this country. No man's opinion upon a legal question is entitled to more weight than his. It is, in the main, in accord with the position I have just taken and with the authorities I have read, and I wish again to call the attention of the Senate to his [illegible] words and to incorporate them as a part of my remarks.

Mr. President, the [illegible] the Congress [illegible] in Washington [illegible] an argument now. I will, however, say a word or two upon two [illegible]

[illegible] the insurgent government which was then literally in the saddle in [illegible]

[illegible] have no [illegible] country. But that question does not arise [illegible]

So it is clear to me [illegible] that for every Administration whether in Congress or out of Congress [illegible] the lawful Government of Panama had been [illegible] by the President. No [illegible] the Senate [illegible] the territory of Panama, and not only the [illegible] last everything so far as our relations with that country are [illegible]

Mr. President, in my judgment, there is but one question before the Senate at this time, and that is whether this is a meritorious treaty—a treaty which the Senate, in the interest of the country and of the discharge of its duties to the world, ought to ratify. The other questions, the question of right and wrong in connection with the revolution in and recognition of the independence of Panama, are separate and distinct questions and should be dealt with separately and distinctly. It may be that they ought to have been dealt with before the ratification of the treaty. I had hoped they would be. I had hoped that the resolution of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] looking to negotiations with Colombia for adjustment of all the questions between it and us growing out of these transactions would be acted upon before the treaty was disposed of. Whenever that resolution comes to a vote I think it will have the unanimous consent of this side of the Chamber. I don't know what fate it may meet from the other side of the Chamber.

It may be that that side of the Chamber would prefer to deal with these questions upon its own initiative, but I firmly believe

[illegible] in the Chamber and in the country, not [illegible] Democratic party, that [illegible] Chinese [illegible] Congress [illegible] Mr. [illegible] I [illegible] to the consideration [illegible] the Senate proceeded to the con- [illegible] doors were reopened [illegible] Mr. [illegible] I [illegible] The Chair has no information that [illegible] Mr. [illegible] I [illegible] by its title, and referred to [illegible] on page 3, line 15, to increase the [illegible] for office of the Secretary from $76,200 to [illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 11, line 25, to increase the appropriation for carrying out the provisions of the act approved May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the act approved August 30, 1890, providing for an inspection of meats and animals, etc., from $1,200,000 to $1,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 2, to insert:

For experiments in animal breeding in cooperation with State agricultural [illegible] stations, etc.

Mr. LODGE. On the amendment which has just been stated I should like to ask the chairman if it is not something entirely new. It seems to me that it is entering the Government on something very new.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is substantially new. There was a very strong application from the noncorn-producing States for a measure of this kind. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] are very much interested in it, and I see neither of them here for the moment.

It appeared before the committee that the cattle from those noncorn-producing States were not fattened there; that it was impossible to transport corn there, and that foreign countries produce beef better than ours on the whole, as I believe they do—the English beef—with no corn at all. The amendment is for experiments in the breeding of animals suited especially to the noncorn-producing States.

Mr. BAILEY. Will not the Senator from Vermont say that he thinks the Government goes as far in that direction as it ought to go when it admits to this country animals for that purpose without any duty? The Government has a right to go that far, I grant you, but it looks to me as if it had gone as far as it ought to go when it relieves the importation of such stock from duty.

Mr. PROCTOR. The law is very strict about the importation of animals free of duty for breeding purposes, and confines it to well-known breeds that are registered, pure blooded. No breed of cattle of any account has been originated in this country, that I know of. We have been depending upon foreign breeds. It was believed by those who appeared before the committee, and there was a very strong delegation before the committee, that a breed might be developed which would be very valuable. I could read the statements of some of those who appeared before the committee, but perhaps it is not necessary. The Senator from Colorado is now in his seat, and can state the case better than I can.

Mr. BAILEY. Even if it were true that we have developed no breed, we have brought to a high state of perfection more than one breed. It is not correct, however, to say that we have not developed a breed. I think the harness horse may well be said to be an American breed.

Mr. PROCTOR. Trotting horses. I will admit that.

Mr. BAILEY. And without any governmental assistance or encouragement. I believe the highest price ever paid for shorthorned cattle was paid in this country, also. They were said to have been the most excellent lot of animals ever offered at public sale, and the first ten or fifteen averaged over $10,000. And all that was done without any further assistance or encouragement than the admission of breeding animals free of duty.

I think when we establish experimental stations and admit animals free of duty we have gone as far in encouraging those things as the Government ought to go. But of course this amendment will stay in. A point of order would take it out if the Senate wanted it to go out.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator that I propose to make the point of order as soon as I can be recognized.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Texas seems to miss a point here. This is to develop a breed of animals that can get along without corn.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it is unfortunately worded. I might be willing to see the Government make an appropriation to determine if they could not fatten cattle without corn. We do now fatten them in the South, in the cotton-growing districts, on cotton-seed meal. If the people of the West can find a product which will fit their cattle for the markets of this or other countries, I might be willing to see an appropriation made for that purpose, for the Government has already entered upon that policy.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The purpose is to determine whether we can not develop a better breed or breeds of cattle and better modes of feeding, so that in the arid regions and in the far West, where we do not raise corn, we may fatten at least so many of our own beeves as are needed for near home or local consumption. We now raise the cattle, but we have to send them to the great corn-growing States to prepare them for the eastern markets, and then for the beef we want for our own table we have to buy the same cattle at Omaha, Kansas City, St. Joseph, or Chicago and ship them back on hoof or in dressed beef in order to get good at beef, especially in parts of the country where the range is no longer fresh. This amendment comprehends that part of the question as well as the matter of preparing stock for general feed shipment.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not an unmixed evil that the various sections of the country fit into each other in that way. If the good people in the West are able to fatten their cattle, it becomes a question, then, what is to become of the corn growers in Iowa and Illinois and the other great corn-growing States. A very large part of the crop grown by the soil and industry of those people goes to this very purpose. They grow the cattle on the cheap lands of the western ranges, ship them to the Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana farmers, and their corn is fed to those cattle, thus making it the industry of one section to raise them where they can raise them cheaply and the industry of another section to fatten them for the market. And just exactly why the people of Iowa and Illinois and Indiana ought to be taxed for the purpose of enabling their friends in the West to avoid having to buy their corn to feed their cattle is not plain to a layman's mind.

Still I am willing to see the Government, by a mere naked appropriation, make every kind of useful experiment with a view to cheapening the feed products of the people of this country. In the way of feeding I have no doubt the Government has experiment stations in the West where these experiments may be conducted. But establishing a breeding farm to raise crossbred animals goes a good deal farther than we have heretofore been asked to go; and if the Government can engage in that business, a storehouse, a bank, a factory, and all these other things will follow. I believe that the farmers of the country generally could well be left to apply such knowledge as the Government supplies them with, and if it can conduct experiments in the articles to be fed to these animals and furnish that information to the farmers the rest, I think, may safely be left to the farmers.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think we would know more about this matter if we would look into the statement made by the Secretary of Agriculture before the committee. I do not know whether or not it has been printed. The Secretary came before the committee, and while I am not a member of the committee I went down to hear what he said upon this subject, because there were two very intelligent gentlemen from Colorado, one a practical farmer and another a professor in our agricultural colleges, who were here urging an appropriation of this sort. The Government has established in every State an agricultural station. Whether or not that was a wise thing to do, that is the policy we entered upon many years ago, and that is, I suppose, what we will maintain.

Mr. SPOONER. It produces good results.

Mr. TELLER. And, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, it produces good results. Nearly all of the States have added to these Government appropriations, so that the States and the Government are acting in conjunction in reference to this matter.

Now, the Secretary stated that he wanted to try not to create a new breed, but to determine what is the best breed for each section of the country.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it seems to me the amendment could be made acceptable to everybody by striking out the words "animal breeding" and inserting "animal feeding;" so as to read:

For experiments in animal feeding.

I myself should have no objection to that.

Mr. TELLER. Just for the moment I do not care to be particular about the form of it. That is a matter of very little consequence, provided it carries out the purpose of the Secretary.

The Secretary said that if he got this appropriation he would [illegible] East, one in the South, one in the northern part of the country, where the climate is the same as in the East, and one in the West.

We have in the West what we call the range cattle. They are [illegible] Nebraska, Kansas, and other contiguous States, and money needs to be spent that we will not continue to [illegible] a very low percentage of what we raise to these markets. We have been shipping our cattle here and having them slaughtered in Chicago and bringing the beef in our western cities, which makes it a very expensive article to our people. We get a very small price for the cattle and pay a very high price for the beef.

A gentleman who owned [illegible] in the country, in the neighborhood of [illegible] feet above the sea, who has been successful in raising fine cattle, fine sheep, and fine horses and who [illegible] at it, was present at a meeting in Denver [illegible] of the country [illegible] College. He was one of the gentlemen who went before the committee and made a statement.

Now, it appears to me, from what I gathered from him and from the [illegible] the best type for our country to breed is the one adapted for the North, and what is the best for the South, and what is the best breed for us in our western country, where if we feed any corn we must import it. We raise wheat and barley and a kind of hay called "alfalfa." It is found somewhat perhaps in Texas.

Mr. CLARK. And in Missouri, too.

Mr. TELLER. But, as far as I know, it is not raised in any quantity east of the Mississippi River, although I understand it is being tried with some prospect of success as far east as the State of New York. That is a crop which is very good and valuable in our part of the country, cutting it before it goes to seed, and feeding the hay from 1 to 2 years in advance of feeding it. It is a cheap food, but it is not a fattening food. You can not prepare on it some cattle for the market so that they will go to the great centers here or Chicago and [illegible] and get a [illegible] price.

I commend to this gentleman, who saw the cattle in Europe, [illegible] as bad to outlive, but if we were [illegible] and barley and perhaps oats and grain of that kind [illegible] which might be prepared, we could do what they are doing in Europe to a limited extent, and ship to a limited extent, because we have to pay the freight [illegible] but the home product at least we might get a cheaper article and a better food.

Now, Mr. President, I do not understand from the Secretary that he proposes to go into what the Senator from [illegible] breeding of stock. It is not necessary that he should do that in our part of the country, for we have been doing the very best [illegible] stock, not only in this country, but we have been importing that kind of cattle from Europe to our western ranges. It will not do to put them out upon the ranges, but by crossing we might get a breed [illegible] on the ranges and we will get a [illegible] of the very best [illegible] and [illegible] stock of Europe.

It does not seem to me that we are entering upon any innovation. We are only [illegible] to do what he has already been doing, but we [illegible] in one place, but in several places. We are doing what the Government station in Colorado has been trying to do, what the agricultural college of Colorado has been trying to do, and what, I have no doubt, other sections of the country have been trying to do.

Mr. President, the amount is not great when you come to divide it [illegible] is an [illegible] of the Secretary of Agriculture. I am not [illegible] but I have been for a long time [illegible] and I have been [illegible] farm. I have owned it [illegible] for food purposes, and I have [illegible] subjects, but I [illegible] Agriculture we are every [illegible] in my judgment, to this country as the present Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. STEWART and others. I say so.

Mr. TILLMAN. [illegible]

Mr. BARLOW. The Senator from Colorado, I suppose, with all his experience, [illegible] that while he is an agriculturist of the best of his professions, that he knows the difference between an agriculturist and a farmer.

Mr. TELLER. I do, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator please let us understand the difference?

Mr. TELLER. The farmers of this country, at least in my part of it, are the men who make money on their farms. The agriculturist, according to my notion and experience, is a man who farms for a living and not to make money, and he rarely ever makes any money. That is about the difference.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will give another [illegible] part of the country.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator asked if what the Secretary said before the committee had been printed. It was not printed, but my stenographer took notes of it, and I will read half a dozen lines. Secretary Wilson said:

As a [illegible] we have produced a trotting horse and a lard hog. We [illegible] do the very best [illegible] with its conditions.

There [illegible] need to repeat what I have said. [illegible] said:

Great Britain and Germany feed very little corn, and they produce a better quality of meats than we do.

Professor Carlyle, another witness, said:

The [illegible] with.

I thought [illegible] to know what the Secretary said.

Mr. TELLER. I am sorry [illegible] the Secretary's statement before the [illegible] I am [illegible] favor of [illegible] into four [illegible] country.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word on another point. It was [illegible], and I wish to say something about it myself. We have [illegible] horse in the United States. I believe it will be admitted that our cavalry [illegible] of any particular class, and that we have no type [illegible] might be called a cavalry horse; it is a horse [illegible] We can raise in the [illegible] such as the Government calls for for [illegible] in proportion [illegible] can be raised in any other part of the United States. It has a better hoof than any other horse I have ever known.

I have had [illegible] I have had a [illegible] or $70 and never had a shoe on. I have ridden it over the country at the rate of 75 miles a day without any [illegible] That can not be [illegible] I [illegible] ought to our part of [illegible] with those native horses in [illegible]

[illegible] can try a [illegible] this appropriation on the [illegible] country. I do not think we do [illegible] for the [illegible] only you have not done so much [illegible] farmer of the West that you need be afraid of a [illegible] inasmuch as [illegible] are not established [illegible] and increase what the [illegible] ought to [illegible] and it seems to me that we ought to have it without [illegible] any [illegible].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think there is but one opinion [illegible] that has been [illegible] Let the very great service [illegible] in his hands would be most wisely and judiciously [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] from the fact that it is a new [illegible] use of expenditure. It is a [illegible] as future. If we begin to ex[illegible] farm [illegible] there is no reason why we should stop there. It will grow year by year. There is no reason that could be [illegible] we should not improve the blood of our horses [illegible] as to the best cattle and the best horses for use in this country. We now admit blooded stock free. It seems to me that this is a small beginning of a very large [illegible]. It is to my mind also clearly out of order. It is general legislation; it has not been estimated for; and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. It has been estimated for.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I hope you will submit the question of order to the Senate, just as you did another important [illegible] day, and not bring in the rule to hammer to death a [illegible]

I [illegible] which have been made by my [illegible] matter, and I want to give a [illegible] experience and observation. I believe I [illegible] about agriculture, as that is about the only thing I [illegible] at.

Mr. PATTERSON. And lecturing?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I do not make any living at lecturing; that is a side [illegible] which comes from notoriety or other sources, [illegible] to my [illegible].

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that under this amendment we can be [illegible] Secretary of Agriculture, what I would regard as a very valuable work.

I intend to offer an amendment to the paragraph, if the Chair does not decide that he is going to stand by the rule and not submit it to the Senate. I propose [illegible]

For experiments in animal breeding in cooperation with State agricultural stations and the importation of new breeds, $50,000.

Now, gentlemen, just listen to me one moment on that subject. In the decade from 1850 to 1860, and possibly a few years prior to that date, some of the wealthy men in my State, men of great learning and knowledge, spent immense sums of money in the search for new breeds of cattle and sheep, and for grasses and other things adapted to our climate. We have in that country now a grass imported by Governor Means from somewhere—I do not [illegible] where—which is a terrible pest to a cotton plantation, but a splendid forage crop and hay producer and a good grazing grass. It is known as "Means grass" now.

Another one of our governors—he was a governor some time in his life—imported some sheep from somewhere in Africa called the [illegible] Broadtail sheep, but it is given up by everyone familiar with that breed of sheep. They have run out and gone. The negroes and dogs and poverty and one thing or another have [illegible] them practically to disappear. That was something very desirable, and the lack would not continue if we could help it. But I know of nobody down there or anywhere else in the South who is able now to go to the habitat in Asia, or wherever these sheep were originally bred, and go to the expense of thousands of dollars to bring them here. There were introduced also from India by one of those men I have spoken of a breed of cattle called the Brahmin, and it was proven by experiment and actual test that the oxen of that breed could pull more and stand more hard usage than any breed of cattle that were ever known of in that country.

Now, if we will just turn our attention, our economical mind, in the direction of saving money somewhere else and not undertake to hamper the present Secretary of Agriculture, in his fine common-sense view of his duties and his practical knowledge of agriculture and of its needs, under the bugaboo that he is going [illegible] and that this or that [illegible] nanism, we can accomplish a great deal with this $50,000 by simply providing that he may be allowed, in addition to this experiment in feeding and in breeding the present breeds, to create by [illegible] a breed of horses and a breed of cattle adapted to the [illegible] tions of our country, and we will have accomplished a [illegible]

[illegible] friend from Massachusetts will take the trouble to read any treatise on [illegible] he will know that in the little island of England, only [illegible] square miles, there are six or seven distinct breeds of sheep which owe their [illegible] and their value [illegible] from which [illegible] the Southdowns, the Leicestershires, the Suffolks, Blackfaces, and so on. I do not remember the other names distinctly. I am a little rusty on my agriculture and I have not lectured at a fair for a good while. I will say to my friend from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]; but there are in England to-day breeds of sheep which, as I said, are worthless in certain parts of the island, while they are the supreme essence of superiority in other parts, just simply because the climate and the grass and the soil and other things make a difference in the feed upon which the sheep live.

Now, I understand my friend from Colorado here [Mr. TELLER] is anxious to have something to do with trying to have a breed of cattle come in the West which will grow fat enough to turn into beef at home and not have to be sent to Illinois or Iowa or somewhere east to be fattened sufficiently to let them furnish grease enough to cook them, having to pay the railroad charges both ways. I honestly think that Senators could economize better somewhere [illegible] than take this [illegible]

If we had a theorist or a man at the head of the Agricultural Department over here who was lacking in common sense and was a [illegible] I would say, "Do not [illegible] him [illegible] money," but this is a [illegible] opportunity to obtain [illegible] the breeds which exist [illegible] and which are [illegible] here, and which I know to have existed in my State, as the African Broadtail sheep, the Brahmin cattle, that I recall, and [illegible] others. These can be imported by the Government and [illegible] here, and we can begin to [illegible] and the benefit that are to come would be very [illegible] in a few years.

I hope the Senator from [illegible] will withdraw his point of order and let the [illegible] which she has [illegible] which I offer—after the word "[illegible]," in line 4, insert [illegible] order that the Secretary of Agriculture may utilize his great common sense and the [illegible] introduced to introduce into the country [illegible] and to the opportunity of your poor farmer to get some recompense [illegible]

I want to say right now to my friend from Colorado that he did not give the right definition a little [illegible] and the farmer. The farmer is a man [illegible] his hands, and the agriculturist is a man who makes a living with his mouth; and there are too many agriculturists in the Senate, I [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I observe that the scope of this amendment has begun to grow already. The Senator from South Carolina wants to add "[illegible]"

Mr. TILLMAN. Otherwise I do not care anything about it.

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor. I merely wish to state that I was correct in saying that this was not estimated for. It is not in the [illegible] Of course, there is a letter from the Secretary, but that is not an estimate. It is not estimated for; it is not reported from any standing committee; it is a new item; it is not to carry out any existing legislation. I understood the Chair [illegible] to sustain the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to say, in regard to the estimate——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I call attention to the fact that that point of order can be made practically against every item of the bill. There is no general legislation in relation to this expenditure. Every paragraph——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I made the point that it is not estimated for; that it is not reported from a standing committee; that it is a new item and is not in pursuance of any existing law.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to state, in regard to the estimate——

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts what Senate rule is violated simply [illegible] it has not been estimated for or has not [illegible] I do not [illegible] prohibits the placing of an item upon a general [illegible]

Mr. LODGE. I think, if the Senator will read Rule XVI——

Mr. PROCTOR. I called the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture to the fact that there was no estimate for this item, and he said one would be forwarded me. He afterwards told me by telephone that it had been forwarded. I have not received it. It takes several days, and we had a holiday. I have no doubt it is on the way.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will turn to the last part of paragraph 1 of Rule XVI, it reads

Mr. PATTERSON. On what page?

Mr. LODGE. On page 16. It reads:

[illegible]

I make the point that the amendment does not carry out the provision of any existing law; that it is a new item of appropriation, and that it is not in pursuance of an estimate of the head of one of the Departments, which is provided in the same rule. I do not think there can be any question about the rule.

Mr. TILLMAN. What was with that point the other day, when the St. Louis exposition question was here?

Mr. LODGE. That is another rule. That is the question of relevancy, which is submitted under clause 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is not a bit of difference. If the Senate thinks it relevant and desirable, the Senate can say so; and I wish the Senator would give us the opportunity.

Mr. LODGE. I do not make the point that it is irrelevant. It is obviously germane to the bill. I make the point of order, as I have stated it. It is not estimated for and it is a new item, all of which are forbidden by Rule XVI.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does it not come from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry? I understood that it came from a standing committee.

Mr. LODGE. It does not make any difference; it is a new item added without an estimate, and is not in pursuance of existing law. But the Chair has already ruled upon it, and I do not care to discuss the ruling.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire only a moment. I have no desire to discuss a question already decided, but I should have been glad of a word, at least, on the point of order before it was decided.

If I am correct, the amount estimated for under this paragraph has not been exceeded, in fact, is yet some $50,000 below the estimate. Furthermore, if I understand the language, the use of this amount of money for the purpose proposed is clearly within the authority of the first paragraph. I am not the author of the language of the amendment, and it may be understood to mean something that the committee did not intend, but placing it in as it is, is really a limit as to how much shall be expended in that particular direction.

For instance, near the top of page 12, under this appropriation, among other things is said:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, in such manner as he may think best, in the collection of information concerning diseases of sheep and other animal products."

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Did I understand him to say that the total is not increased?

Mr. WARREN. The total is not increased.

Mr. LODGE. It is increased from $200,000 to $300,000.

Mr. WARREN. No, you are mistaken. The estimate made by the Department is still $50,000 above the amount appropriated.

Mr. LODGE. This is a new item.

Mr. WARREN. I think it is not a new item. That is where the Senator and I differ.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not think that the Senator from Massachusetts has read all of Rule XVI.

Mr. LODGE. I have read the whole of it a great many times.

Mr. PATTERSON. What I meant was that I do not think the Senator read it upon this occasion to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I did not. It does not all bear on the question before the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. The rule, as I understand the status of this amendment, removes it altogether from the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts. Let us see. Commencing in the middle of the rule, where the Senator did, it reads:

"And no amendments shall be received hereto proposing an appropriation or providing for the same, nor to any general appropriation bill, unless the object of such bill be to carry into effect an existing law, or to provide a new tribunal or agency for the execution of existing laws, or to provide for the payment of claims against the government arising out of or based upon existing laws, or to pay the salaries established by the laws authorizing the same, or to pay the salaries of officers elected by the Senate or House of Representatives, or to provide for the payment of such claims as may be included in a statement of claims transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—"

Mr. SPOONER. "Or"—

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, the rule continues:

"or proposed in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some one of the Departments."

Mr. President, this is clearly an amendment moved by one of the regular committees of this Senate, to wit, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SPOONER. It is estimated for.

Mr. PATTERSON. If it is estimated for. There are two clauses in this rule which would draw this item, if the construction made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether this item is or is not proposed by one of the standing committees of the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. The rule as to an amendment being moved by a standing or select committee treats a standing or select committee other than the appropriating committee. That is perfectly clear from the next clause of the rule.

Mr. PATTERSON. Not at all. The language is, "unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee."

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will read the next clause of the rule, he will see it requires a reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly it does; but at the same time it provides for an amendment, no matter to what extent the item may be increased, provided it has been recommended by any standing or select committee of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. If the Committee on Agriculture had recommended this provision to the Senate as a separate bill or resolution, and had put it on the Calendar, that might have brought it in order; I do not know how that would have been; but the intent of the rule is perfectly clear from the next paragraph that the item would have to be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate and be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts, was not that rule as it is now interpreted by him the rule before the appropriation bills were distributed? The Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with the agricultural appropriation bill. The estimates are sent to the Committee on Agriculture, the bill is considered by that committee, and the Appropriations Committee does not look at or see it.

Mr. LODGE. The Committee on Agriculture is substituted for the Committee on Appropriations, and the amendment has got to come from a standing or select committee other than the appropriating committee. That is the purpose of the rule.

Mr. TILLMAN. How could anyone else introduce an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill more fitly and appropriately than the committee itself?

Mr. LODGE. I think that it was the original practice of the Senate—and I am sure the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who has had large experience, will confirm me in regard to that proposition—that the amendment must be proposed by other than the appropriating committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Colorado will allow the Chair, the Appropriations Committee could at any time make anything under the sun in order which was germane to a bill which had been reported, and so could the Committee on Agriculture make anything in order, if the construction of the Senator from Colorado is the right construction of the rule. The Chair has no manner of doubt about this amendment being out of order, although the Chair is perfectly willing to submit it, if it is desirable, to the Senate.

Several SENATORS. No, no.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, there is some force in what the Chair says, but the rule never has been changed since the distribution of the appropriation bills in the Senate. When this rule was adopted, the Committee on Appropriations had all of the appropriation bills, and the Committee on Appropriations had nothing whatever but appropriation bills. No subject was committed to that committee except appropriations. Now, the Committee on Agriculture is not simply an appropriation committee as to appropriations for the Agricultural Department, but it is a standing committee of the Senate on agriculture. It deals with all the bills introduced here referring to agricultural subjects.

It may be a casus omissus. It may be, and I think it is, true that the rule ought to have been changed after the distribution of these appropriation bills, which I think never should have occurred, and which I think has cost the country a vast amount of money and has not added at all to the efficiency or economy of appropriations. I think it was a mistake, but the rule never has been changed.

The only appropriation bill that is referred to the Committee on Agriculture is the agricultural appropriation bill. That is only one item of the business of that committee. The committee deals with a vast number of bills which are not appropriation bills. Is it not true, therefore, that it is both, as to the agricultural appropriation, an appropriation committee and a standing committee of the Senate on the general subject? No other committee could entertain an amendment of this kind. If the appropriation bills had not been distributed, then the Committee on Agriculture would have reported the proposition for reference to the Appropriations Committee. Now, can the Chair supply by a ruling the [illegible] from the distribution of the appropriation bills without any adaptation of this [illegible]?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he does not see that the province of appropriating money in an appropriation bill is entirely distinct from the general scope of the duties of a committee in any other relation?

When certain bills were taken from the Appropriations Committee and distributed to other committees, those committees become in that end appropriating committees or appropriation committees. They have two functions, the general function of the committee in dealing with subjects intrusted to them that are generic and proper for them, and they are substituted for the Committee on Appropriations on appropriation bills to this extent.

Now, as the Chair has indicated, if all that is necessary is for the Committee on Agriculture—because it is a standing committee—to report a clause in an appropriation bill, they can make anything in order. If this provision had been introduced into the Senate and had been referred to the Committee on Agriculture or to any other committee, and had been reported back as an amendment to the appropriation bill, then, even if the Committee on Agriculture did that, I should not be certain that it might not come under the general head upon which it is sought now to hold this provision upon the bill. But nothing appears to show that that has been done.

The Committee on Agriculture, without this having been referred as an amendment and without its having been sent as an amendment by the Senate to the agricultural appropriation bill, has, so far as I can see, independently, without any such reference and without the Senate passing upon it and referring it as amendment, bodily put it in. If that committee can do that, by the same line of reasoning the Appropriations Committee, being a standing committee of the Senate—it is clearly that—can put anything upon any appropriation bill and take it out of that exceptive clause, which is so important in the running of appropriation bills in this body.

It seems to me that distinction is clear; that the Chair is right; and that it not being a matter of relevancy, of being germane, which is submitted, it is a pure matter for the ruling of the Chair.

Sometimes it has been contended that the Committee on Appropriations, as a standing committee, can put anything on an appropriation bill; but I as a member of the Appropriations Committee, have never advanced that ground and have never maintained it.

The truth is, as a matter of good policy and good legislation, the authority and power of any appropriating committee, whether it be the Committee on Appropriations or Agriculture or Military Affairs or Naval Affairs, instead of being broadened and widened, ought to be hedged in and restricted and kept down, for the temptation is always to put everything upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Even an exposition loan.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator from Maine through?

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator's pardon. I have put rather a long question and, I fear, taxed the Senator's patience.

Mr. SPOONER. The trouble with the Senator's proposition is that he is asking the Chair to take a liberty, I think, with the rules; he is asking the Chair to do what the Senate ought to have done, perhaps.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair has ruled twice already.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not accept the rulings of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I did not intend any rebuke. I simply called attention to the fact that the Chair had ruled.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Chair also said that he would submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. The Chair will call me to order if I am proceeding out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair declines to call the Senator from Wisconsin to order. He is too glad to hear him.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit an interruption, I ask him to read part of clause 2 of this rule, which I think will perhaps give him some additional light as to the purpose of the rule.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not give me any additional light whatever as to the present situation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The second clause clearly intends to apply to amendments which are submitted by direction of a standing committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. And that is what I understood to be the contention of the Senator from Wisconsin—that this amendment was submitted by direction of a standing committee. And the second clause says that an amendment submitted by direction of a standing committee shall be first referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but the Senator only illustrates——

Mr. ALDRICH. So if the Senator wants to follow the rules strictly and not ask the Chair to depart from them, he will have to take that clause into consideration, it seems to me, as well as the last part of clause 1.

Mr. SPOONER. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for emphasizing what I was saying. That was the old rule; that was when there was a Committee on Appropriations whose function was solely to deal with appropriation bills; that was when the Committee on Agriculture could report an amendment to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; but that situation no longer exists.

Mr. ALDRICH. But will the Senator from Wisconsin agree with me that the plain purpose of the clause and the rule, taken together, is that no new items of appropriation shall be inserted in an appropriation bill without the concurrence of two standing committees of the Senate?

Mr. SPOONER. Ah, but, Mr. President, the trouble is (and I think it is a complication) that when the Senate—I repeat, in my judgment, mistakenly—took away from the Appropriations Committee the appropriation bills and distributed them among other committees of this body they failed to change the rules, and they can not now ask the Chair to change the rule or to adapt it to the new situation.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask a question for information?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, whether it would not be now permissible and proper for the amendment to the Committee on Agriculture as the standing committee on agriculture, and for that committee to report the amendment to the Senate, to be referred, under this rule, to the Committee on Agriculture as a committee on appropriations?

Mr. SPOONER. One day——

Mr. McCOMAS. One day before the consideration of the amendment. I ask that in good faith, under this rule.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course the Senator asks it in good faith; but for the Committee on Agriculture to bring back a proposition and report it to the Senate as one which in its opinion should be incorporated in the agricultural appropriation bill, and for the Senate to refer it back to the Committee on Agriculture in order to give that committee jurisdiction to incorporate it in the bill, is working in a circle.

Mr. McCOMAS. It is.

Mr. SPOONER. It involves an absurdity.

Mr. McCOMAS. But would it not still make the rule as it is effective?

Mr. SPOONER. But, Mr. President, the trouble with it all is that the Committee on Agriculture now deals with the agricultural appropriation bill and is at the same time a standing committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator's contention on that point is well taken.

Mr. SPOONER. I am very greatly [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to call the attention of the Senator, who is chairman of the Committee on Rules to the last clause of paragraph 2, as well. I think, the point of order ought to have rested. It provides that

"No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill proposing general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill."

I want to ask the Senator if it is not manifest that this new item [illegible] Agriculture does not come under [illegible] Rule XVI?

Mr. BACON. I do not think that is the meaning of "general legislation" at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was not the point of the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made that point, but he coupled it with other matters that I think were not as potent as that point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The ruling was not on that point.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the first ruling was.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like, if the Senator from Wisconsin will gratify me to that extent, to have him answer the question I have propounded in all seriousness, whether or not, in his opinion, this new provision is not obnoxious to that rule?

Mr. SPOONER. I always wish to be frank. I am not certain whether it is or not. This is the agricultural appropriation bill. It makes a large appropriation to be expended by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. TILLMAN. For one year only.

Mr. SPOONER. It is based on estimates, and this item is estimated for by the Agricultural Department. I am not at all certain

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will allow me to finish my sentence.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not at all certain that this item would fall within the definition of new legislation. If it is to be the rule, under the circumstances which surround this bill, there will not be much, if anything, in these general appropriation bills—I would not put it that way—but there will be a great deal that is important estimated for by the Department in all of these general appropriation bills, naval and all, which must go out.

Mr. HALE. That is true, Mr. President, if the point is made. We go through that experience at every session of Congress. Clauses are reported that are clearly subject to that last provision of Rule XVI, that general legislation shall not be permitted; but they go on, [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Is an appropriation for a new battle ship general legislation?

Mr. HALE. That has been decided. That is not general legislation in any proper sense of general legislation, after a building has been started, to add to that building and make appropriations for it. That question was all fought out perhaps fifteen or twenty years ago, and it was declared that it was in continuation of the service and of the uses of the Department. But there are hundreds of items that are reported by the different committees, and for which appropriations are carried on different bills, which, if any Senator made the point, would go out.

My idea about general legislation—and I suppose it is the idea of the Senator from Wisconsin, who is a good lawyer—is that anything that is not private legislation is general legislation. When we declare, either in a separate bill by itself, or in an appropriation bill, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to import breeds of cattle or horses, which he now can not do, that is general legislation. It applies only to one subject, but it is general legislation.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly; but I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WARREN. If I may be permitted; whatever may be the view taken by the Chair or by the Senators as to the application of the paragraph of the rule which has been referred to, the fact remains that the amendment under discussion provides for exactly the same kind of appropriation as is used in providing for or adding to something that has already been commenced. It is precisely such a case as if a building were under progress and an appropriation was made to enlarge it, by adding to its construction. So far as I know, at the eastern and western colleges, at the experimental stations, they have in a very small way commenced the breeding of live stock.

Mr. BAILEY. They are doing it, then, without authority.

Mr. WARREN. I am stating the facts.

Mr. HALE. State agricultural institutions are not in charge of the General Government. We encourage them by great appropriations of money. I remember it was very well said when that was done that that would be the end of it; but we endowed them, and then we passed under the jurisdiction and administration of the States. We have had no more to do with them since, or ought not to have anything more to do with their experiments than we have with an experiment in a private laboratory or college laboratory at Cambridge or New Haven or Brunswick, in my own State. I confess, I am clear in my own mind that this amendment is subject to the point of order that it is general legislation.

Suppose it had been introduced as a separate bill giving this power that never before was exercised by a Secretary of Agriculture, would the Senator from Wisconsin have any doubt that that would be general legislation? I do not think it would be, although confined to one subject, it would go through statutes as private legislation, but goes into that realm of the statutes that is public legislation. This would be the same.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not at all sure whether this is or is not general legislation. My mind was directed entirely to the other proposition.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I have a very distinct impression that the act of Congress creating the Bureau of Animal Industry would make this item thoroughly germane and an extension of existing legislation. The very object of that act was to improve the breeding of cattle and the care of stock. I am satisfied, from reading this agricultural appropriation bill, that practically the whole body of it consists in providing for these experiments. If the Senator takes that position it will simply encourage further the practice of putting legislation upon the general appropriation bills. There are not two lines of this bill that do not refer to these experiments in stock and poultry and other things.

Mr. TILLMAN. These lines are of amendments to the present law.

Mr. DOLLIVER. There is no general legislation upon the subject.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To save time, the Chair is inclined to submit this question to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think that while the objection may be made under the second clause, there is an amendment which can be properly made upon the third clause. This is not general legislation in the meaning of that term as construed by the courts. Nothing can be general legislation which is in the shape of an amendment upon the same subject as the bill.

The question as to what is general legislation and what is specific legislation has been repeatedly decided by the courts, and without going into it, for I have not the books here and can not call from memory the attention of the Senate to where the decisions are to be found, I will say that I am quite sure an investigation will show that the courts have decided that there is a broad line of distinction between general and specific legislation, and this particular proposed amendment being, as it is, something which relates to the subject-matter of the bill, can not possibly fall under the head or designation of general legislation.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose in an appropriation bill that provides for the salaries of the nine supreme judges—there is the subject-matter upon an appropriation bill—the Committee on Appropriations reports a salary for an additional judge. We can make an additional judge?

Mr. BACON. Yes; but there is where the general legislation would come in—in the making of a judge.

Mr. HALE. I know, but it is on a bill relating to the judges.

Mr. BACON. I know.

Mr. HALE. It is on an appropriation bill——

Mr. BACON. If it was a bill——

Mr. HALE. If the Senator's contention is true, that anything which is put on an appropriation bill which relates to the subject-matter of the appropriation bill is not general legislation, then we have embarked upon the widest and broadest track that I have ever known to be suggested in the United States Senate.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Maine will permit me to state my proposition before he rejoins, I will endeavor to adapt it to the particular question he has asked.

The Senator has asked whether if we had before us a bill fixing the salaries of judges and on that bill we proposed to increase the judge and fix the salary, it would or would not be general legislation. Undoubtedly it would be, because the subject-matter would not be, as the Senator from Maine suggested, the making of judges.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me proceed sufficiently to express my idea.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. BACON. The subject-matter would not be the question of the creation of judges, but the subject-matter would be the question of salaries. Now, if we had before us a bill in which we were endeavoring to exercise the constitutional power to create inferior courts and make judges thereof, and there should be on such a bill an amendment to create an additional judge, that would not be general legislation in the sense of this rule, but it would be a legitimate amendment to that particular subject-matter.

Mr. HALE. Now, right on this point, let me put the Senator another proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Maine will allow me to answer one proposition before he puts another, with his permission. I will yield, if he desires it, however. Go ahead.

Mr. HALE. I was going a little further. Does the Senator think that on an appropriation bill appropriating money for the salaries of judges—the salaries of judges, not the number of judges, which are fixed by general law and general legislation—we could increase the salaries of judges which are fixed by general law? That is certainly pertinent.

Mr. BACON. There would come in the question whether it was objectionable under the second clause, and not whether the amendment would come under the objection of being general legislation.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator think it would be general legislation to increase the salaries of the judges?

Mr. BACON. I do not think it would.

Mr. HALE. Then I do not agree with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. That would come in under the second clause, but not under the one as to general legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The two illustrations made by the Senator from Maine are entirely to be differentiated from this proposition, because the additional judge or judges created would hold for life. It would be a permanent provision of law. It is the same with respect to the appropriation for their salaries. This appropriation dies at the end of the Congress or the year.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. It is temporary.

Mr. HALE. I do not take so much stock in my first suggestion as I do in the second one, and that does seem to me to be very pertinent.

Mr. BACON. As to the amendment?

Mr. HALE. As to a provision where we are appropriating for salaries that are fixed by general law as in the case of the judges of the Supreme Court. Now, to say that upon an appropriation bill we can change that general law and increase the salaries of the judges because it is not general legislation is, if the Senator will allow me, as it seems to me, an absurd conclusion.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I am only sorry to have to differ from him.

I do not think there can be any possible maintenance of the proposition that it is objectionable as general legislation. When you come back to the proposition—because here is really where the crucial point is—whether, under the second clause, as an amendment the rule has been complied with, I wish only to make one suggestion in addition to what has been said by Senators.

The fact has already been called to the attention of the Senate that that rule was made at a time when all appropriations were in charge of one committee, which committee had no general charge of any other general bill, and therefore committees which had charge of bills relating to their particular jurisdiction passed upon the question as one which was of importance to that subject-matter, and under the rule it went to the general Appropriations Committee, which had the decision of the question, so far as recommendations to the Senate would go, as to what appropriations should be made.

The point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is this: Under the changed rule either it must be held that the Agricultural Committee, now having the agricultural bill, has the right to present an amendment, and when it does so it comes within the rule, or else the rule is nugatory as it now stands, and it is impossible that there could be a recommendation by the Agricultural Committee which could be enacted into law by going to the Appropriations Committee. Why? Because the general Appropriations Committee of the Senate has no jurisdiction of the agricultural bill. It has nothing to do with it. The Agricultural Committee has exclusive charge of the question of appropriations for the Agricultural Department, and therefore that committee must act in the dual capacity of a general committee on the subject of agriculture and a general committee on the subject of the appropriation of money for the Agricultural Department, or else the power of amendment by recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture is entirely lost and gone until this rule shall be amended.

I think, Mr. President, that that is a plain proposition; and I do think, if there is any doubt about the question, that this is a matter of such importance that the appropriation ought to be made. The Agricultural Department has accomplished a great work in its investigations, in the experiments it has made as to all branches of agriculture. It is a work upon which it has heretofore never made investigation. It is one which affects every section of this country and a most important industry; and to say because now the Appropriations Committee and the Agriculture Committee have as to this bill been consolidated this rule should be entirely abrogated it seems to me is going too far.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that there was a way in which to make this amendment in order, but that way has not been pursued. If the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Colorado, or any Senator interested in this matter had introduced it as an amendment and it had been referred to the Committee on Agriculture, I do not think the Committee on Agriculture would have been disabled from reporting it back simply because it happened also to report the bill to which it was proposed as an amendment. The purpose, I take it, of allowing an amendment which had been recommended by a standing or select committee of the Senate was not merely to have the judgment of the two committees. Undoubtedly that was a good reason. That reason, however, disappeared when the two functions were united in the same committee. But it also had another purpose. A committee of the Senate has no power over any measure until it has been referred to that committee. I believe that no committee of the Senate could originate any matter, bill, or amendment until the bill or amendment had been referred to it by the Senate. In other words, if the Senate refers to a committee a bill, then that committee has jurisdiction of the bill and can report amendments which are germane under the rule.

But there was no reference of this item. This measure was not introduced into the Senate. It was not referred to a standing or a select committee of the Senate. If it had been, and the Committee on Agriculture had reported it back with the recommendation that it be adopted as an amendment to the general appropriation bill reported by that committee itself, then it would have been in order under the rule. Otherwise, my judgment is that it is not.

But, Mr. President, it is a waste of time and breath to argue a question of order which has been submitted to the Senate. We had an experience on that a few days ago when my distinguished friend the Senator from Maine appropriated on the urgent deficiency bill $4,600,000, and I made the point of order against that sum, reenforced by the statements of those high in authority, that the Treasury was not well able to spare it. But by a vote that was so overwhelming that I did not want to call for the yeas and nays the amendment was retained.

I protest against this as I did against that appropriation. I think it a species of paternalism to be loaning the money to a private corporation for the purpose of exhibiting the products of the country. Here we have a proposition to establish a stock farm in connection with an experiment station. We have gone as far as we ought to go in the feeding of animals. Every State in the Union has established at its agricultural or mechanical college an experiment station of that kind. We have in my own State——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to enlarge his illustration a little?

Mr. BAILEY. I am always glad to be informed.

Mr. TILLMAN. The experiment stations provided for under the Hatch bill, which were given in each State $15,000, do a great deal more than merely experiment in feeding. I am one of the directors or trustees or something of the station in my State.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me do the Senator the honor to say that he is the founder of it——

Mr. TILLMAN. Well.

Mr. BAILEY. For I believe it was established under his administration as governor, was it not?

Mr. TILLMAN. That was the college, for the establishment of which some people gave me credit; but I am speaking of the stations founded first by Mr. Morrill. He was the originator of the idea of such education. Later on Mr. Hatch was the father of an act giving $15,000 to each State for the purpose of experiments.

I want to say that at that station we are experimenting with a great many things besides feeding. We have bought three or four or five of the best breeds of cattle and some sheep, and we are enlarging and trying to give our people the benefit of those object lessons in the use of improved breeds and better blood and mixtures of blood, which are necessary in order to advance the interests of agriculture in our State, and the bill expressly provides for it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina adds nothing to my knowledge by that statement.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. When the Senator says, "We are doing it," whom does he mean?

Mr. TILLMAN. I mean the State of South Carolina, and every other State in the Union, including the one which the Senator has the honor to represent and represents so ably, has an experiment station at which this very thing is being carried on right now.

Mr. HALE. By the State?

Mr. TILLMAN. By the State, with Federal money.

Mr. BAILEY. I personally understand that, but it is necessary to buy in order to feed, and wherever there is an appropriation authorizing an experiment in feeding an animal, it must, by the very force of the term, imply the authority to buy before they can feed.

These stations have performed a very useful work, but, Mr. President, we talk in this body about the propriety of appropriating money for the benefit of this and the benefit of that class or industry, as if we were wholly oblivious of the fact that the Government must take this money from the taxpayers before it can give it back to them. If the special pleas which from day to day are made for the appropriation of public moneys are all to be heeded, then where is the limit to the taxation that shall meet them? We seem to have forgotten the essential fact in political economy that the Government has nothing to give except what it first takes from the pockets of its people, and when we appeal for a gift here, or if you prefer to call it an appropriation here for another and new enterprise and pioneer upon a new farm or unexplored region, where, I appeal to Senators, shall we fix the limit of taxation? The people of this country to-day——

Mr. SPOONER. You ought not to draw the line on the farmer.

Mr. BAILEY. So far as I am concerned, I know no class. I am probably as much interested in the farmer, though not quite so profuse in my protestations in his behalf, as any Senator here, and vastly more interested in the improvement of live stock. I spend all my leisure time, take all my vacation and my recreation, in trying to improve the breed of horses, cattle, and sheep.

I have seen what is, in my judgment, the greatest breed of horses in the world established almost now to a type without even so much of governmental aid as relief from the tariff duty. I have seen the intelligent farmers of the United States continue with their own intelligence and their own means until they have bred a purely American horse which challenges comparison with the world to-day.

The American trotting horse is purely an American product. Only the foundation, probably, which our Virginia ancestors brought here in the shape of the remarkable thoroughbreds imported in the early days of the Republic enter at all into this marvelous piece of horseflesh, and that has been accomplished without the aid of the Government in any particular. I have seen the American farmer breed and perfect the Shorthorn cow until nowhere in the world to-day can it be surpassed. Not even in England, its original home, nor in Scotland, its later home, can the American Shorthorn breeds he surpassed. They have done [illegible]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Presid[illegible]

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would let me go on for a moment. But they do not [illegible] is, as the Senator from Texas has said, a [illegible]

If we set up experiments in the breeding of animals with reference to agricultural products, I do not see why we should not go into experiments in manufactures. Can anyone tell me why if we do this we should not experiment about the kind of shoes that it is best for the farmer to wear, about the sort of vehicles it is best for him to drive in over the roads, or the clothes that he puts upon his back or the backs of his children, and all things that enter into his life?

As the Senator from Texas has said, it is paternalism, the invocation to the General Government to do the things that heretofore have been done by the individual or, at the farthest, by the State. And posterity will find, Mr. President, as the Senator from Texas has said, that there is no limit which can be drawn by the human imagination that will not be exceeded when we embark upon that scheme.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would wait a moment, and then I will be through.

Mr. HOAR. I wanted to ask the Senator a question before he got through.

Mr. HALE. We are appealed to for good roads, for rural free mail delivery, and all the other things. It is said we must do that generally for the people, as though the mission of the Government is to take into its hands all the things that illustrate and enter into the everyday life of the people because an appropriation of money will help them.

I had some thought of making a point of order on the provision upon page 21, where there is lodged in the Secretary of Agriculture the power to prevent and stop importations, but I do not know——

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator if that is not an absolutely different proposition from this one?

Mr. HALE. Yes: it is different, of course, but the same thing will be said for it that is said for this proposition. When that is reached I shall, with some considerable feeling of hopelessness and inadequacy, look to see it submitted to the Senate, and the Senate is quite likely to declare that it is a good thing and, it will be said, in the hands of a good Secretary, and he is a good Secretary, that it will do no harm, and that it will result in a better examination and scrutiny about food products. It may be that I shall venture to make the poin. of order, but, as I said, I shall not do it in a very hopeful way. I do not expect that anything we may do can stop the provisions, whatever they may be, upon the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has alluded somewhat to the increase of this appropriation. The Senator will very soon have in his charge a bill, and perhaps a little comparison of the increases in appropriations might well be made. He will have in his charge a bill the increases on which, for this year over last year, are more than double the entire agricultural appropriation bill, and they are forty-two times as much as the increases the committee have proposed on this bill. I have a table of increases of the agricultural appropriation bill for several years past, and I printed it in the report.

Mr. HALE. I made no point about the amount of money. That is not of the slightest consequence. I make no point on that. It is not worth consideration. The naval appropriation bill, which the Senator, I suppose, refers to, will contain an appropriation of nearly $20,000,000: and now, on the military side of the Government, we are spending larger sums of money than—I will not say our grandfathers, but larger than our fathers ever dreamed was possible. The Senator can read his minutes, but I will admit beforehand that the naval appropriation bill will in amount surpass anything ever expected to be appropriated. I do not raise on this matter the question of the amount of money that is involved. That is not of any account.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I agree in much that the Senator has said in regard to the paternal character of legislation. But this is a peculiar Department, stretching all over the country, and it must necessarily engage in experimentation largely. Individuals can not carry on the necessary experiments for the development of our agriculture. That industry is the basis of our prosperity. Not all the experiments will be successful, but many of them have been successful, a single one of which would more than repay to the country, some of them many times more, the entire expense of the appropriation.

Now, I for one have not favored a large increase. Last year we reported an increase of three hundred and forty-odd thousand dollars, and we saved $130,000—less than 40 per cent of it—in the conference. For one, I do not wish to go before the farmers of this country as a Republican with too narrow appropriations on this measure. I think as we reported them they are very moderate indeed. We have reported about $860,000 additional, and it is, of course, safe to say that not all of the items will be enacted into law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has been speaking very eloquently and forcibly about the scope of this bill, how far it goes and how much farther it is going to go. I want to call his attention to the fact that the Bureau of Animal Industry, of which he speaks, is already in existence, and if he will look on line 6 of this very same page 14 he will find that the aggregate appropriations for that Bureau in this bill are $1,987,880. Now, that is a large sum of money. But let us see what are some of the results of it.

If the Senator will turn back to page 11, he will find that this Bureau has the "regulations for the safe transport and humane treatment of export cattle from the United States to foreign countries;" it has the "inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate and foreign commerce;" and then here comes something which comes closer home to him:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more effectually suppress and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases of [illegible]

I recall (it has not been very long ago) when we had a woeful complaint from New England about the foot-and-mouth disease in cattle, which threatened destruction, desolation. I will not say to the measly stock interests of that country, but in comparison with the West it was measly. Yet Congress voted the $500,000 necessary to stamp out that contagious, infectious, deadly disease there among the farms of New England. I think the Senator ought not to be so hard on the balance of us who have agriculture mainly, as we in the South have, and in the West, who are looking for just a little help from Uncle Sam in the way of aiding us to solve the problems which confront us, and he should be willing to give us a little light, a little assistance, a little paternalism, if need be. We have had a good deal of paternalism of one kind and another, and I think New England has had a little more than her share.

Mr. HALE. The matter the Senator refers to, if he will allow me, I remember very well. It was a matter that was cognate to legislation that we have about a thousand things, where there is something immediate, which spreads consternation, disaster, loss of property and life, and we do intervene. It did not come from the State of Maine; it came——

Mr. TILLMAN. It was mainly in Massachusetts, as I recall the fact.

Mr. HALE. It came from other States. But what was mainly behind that was the pressure upon the Secretary of Agriculture from the West to prevent that disease from being sent by shipment of trains so that it would break out in Western States. That was the strong reason and argument for the interposition of Congress, that it must be put down where it was before it magnified and amplified and went to the four corners of the earth, so far as this country goes. It was not a local matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not treating it as a local matter. It is one of the duties of this great Bureau of Animal Industry, to which I call the Senator's attention, and I merely wanted to remind him that his own immediate neighborhood had been benefited by the scientific supervision and work of this very Bureau which he is—I will not say abusing, because the Senator does not abuse anybody; he does not indulge in that kind of thing; his arguments and reasoning are always very strong and forcible. I realize, as he says, that there is danger of extravagance; but do not let us draw the line on the hard-working farmers of the country and be so liberal with other industries.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from South Carolina resumes his seat, do I understand him to say that he regards this appropriation to experiment in breeding cattle as on all fours with an appropriation to stamp out a disease that would not confine itself to any State, and therefore no State could be expected to incur the expense of protecting the neighboring States?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator wants an answer——

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say that anything which relates to inspection and growth and fostering care and supervision of our great stock industry meets my approval, and when we spend money on one phase of it, we ought to spend money on any and all phases of it which promise good results.

Mr. BAILEY. I am as guilty of objection as the Senator from Maine, and I am hardly willing to allow this to be presented as the same. The difference is that the one proposes to improve the prosperity, we will say, of the live-stock industry. I would say, let the live-stock industry improve its own prosperity. But the other was a proposition to protect innocent owners of cattle from the dangerous infection of cattle coming from other sections. This foot-and-mouth disease travels fast and is destructive. It could hardly be expected that the State of Massachusetts would incur the expense of protecting the cattle owners in Illinois, Indiana, and Texas and South Carolina from that disease.

There was an important instance in which the Government was undoubtedly justifiably intervening to protect the people of some States from injury by interstate commerce coming from other States. I myself as [illegible] voted for the appropriation to ex[illegible] as I ever voted for a public [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. I just said, if the Senator will allow me, that the [illegible] from the great West, which [illegible] of this information. It did not come [illegible] from the country broadly, at large, and that was the basis upon which the appropriation was put at [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. Undoubtedly.

Mr. [illegible]. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. BAILEY. And, very seriously, what was protecting the [illegible] I voted for that very cheerfully, and I would vote for that again.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, it was more largely [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. President—

Mr. [illegible]. If the Senator will allow me, I hope I am not [illegible] I want to give money to that and [illegible] country. That is what I stand here for. And [illegible] Secretary of Agriculture will carry it out.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not [illegible]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 23, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was ill and unable to attend the session of the House. I find in the report of the vote yesterday I appear as paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARNER], and paired against reading the Farewell Address of Washington. I had no such pair, and if I had been here I should have voted to read it. It should be regularly read every day in the United States, at every fireside and in every schoolhouse in the United States. Of course there was not injustice intended by anyone to anyone, but I want this explanation to go in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will stand corrected.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota reported the bill (H. R. 12833) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, which was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves all points of order on the bill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12230, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] New York, N. Y., [illegible] in all, navy yard, New York, N. Y., $71,500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 9, insert after the word "dollars" the words "dry docks, extraordinary repairs, $90,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the items submitted as necessary at the navy-yard at New York for the coming year. The purpose of it is to provide for extraordinary repairs which may perhaps be necessary during the coming fiscal year. It is not intended that this money shall be expended unless by reason of some accident which would require it. From the report of the Bureau of Yards and Docks the following appears in reference to this item:

Dry dock No. 3 at this navy-yard requires extensive repairs from time to [illegible] dock [illegible] a few weeks, if not [illegible] that it has been [illegible] for the purpose.

In the hearings before the Naval Committee it appeared that this dock is in constant use and that by reason of injury sustained by the dock at the hands of the dockmen of the Massachusetts it was necessary to expend $4,000 or $5,000 to put it in condition. The dock is necessary in the work of the yard, and unless some fund is available to meet and make repairs as required serious loss will be occasioned. At this time I desire to call attention to the fact that the committee in making up this bill has cut the estimates for the New York yard out of all proportion to the other yards in the country. In no other bill, perhaps, that comes before this House is "the cohesive power of public plunder" so well [illegible]. From the report of the committee it appears that for the Boston yard $361,800 was estimated and $[illegible] allowed. For the naval station at Sandy Hook $[illegible] was asked and the same sum allowed. At League Island $665,470 was asked and $512,970 allowed. At Mare Island $[illegible] was asked and $[illegible] allowed. At Norfolk $848,500 was estimated, $[illegible] allowed; at Pensacola, Fla., $97,000 estimated, $94,000 allowed; at Portsmouth, N. H., $150,000 estimated, $147,000 allowed; at Puget Sound, Wash., $299,5[illegible] estimated, $[illegible] allowed; at Washington, D. C., $657,744 estimated, $575,[illegible] allowed; at Guantanamo, Cuba, $1,025,000 estimated, $385,000 allowed; at Olongapo, P. I., $[illegible] estimated, and this sum was allowed; at New York $[illegible] was estimated and $371,000 allowed.

Eliminating from the estimates submitted for the New York yard the sum of $1,500,000 asked for the purpose of improving the water front there, the sum asked for other improvements is $575,000. Of this amount, the committee allows $[illegible].

It is a somewhat significant fact, too, that in relation to one of the navy yards of the country, although no estimates whatever have been submitted to the committee as appears from its report, yet the committee has seen fit to allow $271,000 for improvements at that yard.

Personally I have no interest whatever in this appropriation.

It is asked for by the Department in order that when leaks happen in this dock they may at once be repaired with the money available under this appropriation, and thereby greater expenditure be saved.

This appropriation is asked, as I have stated, upon the theory that "a stitch in time will save nine." It appears from the hearings of the Committee on Naval Affairs that the amount of repair work at the New York yard during the past year exceeded that done at any other yard by at least 75 per cent. This is the only yard possessed by the Government upon the Atlantic coast which has facilities for docking first-class battle ships. It is the only yard whose fleets can be sent to, be overhauled and prepared for efficient action, either in time of peace or in war. And I submit, while this money is not asked to be positively expended, but merely for use in case of great emergency, in order to avoid larger expenditures if the occasion arises, that it is the part of wisdom for this committee to place this sum at the disposal of the Department.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from New York I desire to say that if we should appropriate in this bill for all the estimates urged by the Department the bill would carry $106,000,000. The committee has had to go over all these estimates in a very careful and systematic way and has provided in this bill for these appropriations that are the most urgent for the coming fiscal year.

Now, in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, I desire to state that Admiral Endicott, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, appearing before the committee, made the statement that this particular appropriation was not imperative. I read from his own language:

And I shall adapt myself to your pleasure about allowing it.

Now, we had to draw a distinction between some of these estimates. Where the demand was most urgent we put the amount in the bill, and those estimates that were not urgent we left out, realizing of course, that next year and year after, if it should become necessary, we can appropriate at that time.

Now, the gentleman says we have cut down largely the sums for navy-yards. It is a fact that we have done so, but that is very easily explained. There was an estimate here for a million and a half of dollars for the rearrangement of the piers in the New York yard. A number of naval officers connected with the yard were appointed to make examination, and they recommended that improvement. That involved the building of four piers. It involved the cutting off from the cob dock of the New York yard 6 acres of land—nearly one-half of the present landed area of that navy-yard, when we know, when everybody knows, that the great trouble at the New York yard to-day is that we have not enough land there. It not only involved that, but it also involved the destruction of the Whitney Basin, for the dredging out of which we had appropriated thousands of dollars. It cut that out entirely. The committee said, "Before we will go into this proposition we will wait another year, because a million and a half dollars means only the beginning; it does not provide for all the cost of this rearrangement of that yard."

So far as the New York yard is concerned, let me say to the gentleman from New York that he will find if he looks back over the years, that we have appropriated more for the New York yard than for half a dozen other yards put together—$90,000,000, I think, in all since 1823 for the New York yard.

Now, the New York yard has been an important yard—why? Because we have not had any other yards in sufficient shape to repair some of the ships. We have been rebuilding the Boston yard; we have been building up the League Island yard; we have been building up the Norfolk yard, and while we have been building up these yards the New York yard has been doing most of the repair work.

I believe it ought to be the policy of the Department from now on to distribute this repair work. Where so much money is being appropriated out of the public Treasury for repairs of our ships, I say it is good policy that the work should be distributed over the country, that all this work should not go into a single navy-yard.

Mr. Chairman, I can not help thinking, in view of the speech of the gentleman from New York the other day, that he belongs to that classed naval enthusiasts who believe in putting all the Navy on the land and none of it upon the sea. I will tell him that I believe in such an expenditure of naval appropriations as will provide for putting every dollar we appropriate for naval purposes, so far as we can, upon the sea and as little of it as possible upon the land.

Mr. LIND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] has expired.

Mr. LIND. I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. I yield.

Mr. LIND. In view of the statement just made, I would ask the chairman of the committtee how it is that an appropriation of upward of $200,000 was made for a navy-yard in excess of any recommendation or estimate, an appropriation not even asked for by the Navy Department?

Mr. FOSS. What is the item?

Mr. LIND. The preceding speaker [Mr. FITZGERALD] stated that this bill carried an item of upward of $200,000 for a navy-yard somewhere that was not asked for or estimated by the Navy Department.

Mr. FOSS. I should like to have the gentleman designate that item.

Mr. LIND. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, if the gentleman will turn to page 8 of his own report he will find it. I assumed that he knew what was in his report, and in the bill, too.

Mr. FOSS. I do.

Mr. LIND. The question has not been answered, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSS. I ask the gentleman to point out the item on page 8 of my report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can find it if he looks under the items where it shows the amounts appropriated last year, the amounts estimated for this year, and the amounts appropriated for this year.

Mr. FOSS. I will ask the gentleman to point out that item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman can not find it I will not help him, because he knows better than I do what it is.

Mr. FOSS. I do not know what is in the gentleman's head.

Mr. MAHON. Nothing.

Mr. LIND. Do you know what is in your own bill?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; I do know what is in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, if the gentleman——

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will point out the specific item to which he refers, I should like to have him do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will read the last line on page 8 he will find what I refer to.

Mr. FOSS. The last line on page 8, "Naval station, New Orleans, La." Is that the item?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; that is the item.

Mr. LIND. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is a fact——

Mr. FOSS. I will ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], the leader of the minority of the committee, to explain that item.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the item referred to does not figure in the Department's estimate, because originally the estimate made by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks involves the amount of $530,500. Upon consideration of that proposal on the part of the Secretary of the Navy he concluded that it was rather excessive, in view of the many other objects requiring provision, and referred it to the Committee on Naval Affairs for its action.

You will find, Mr. Chairman, in the hearings before that committee that the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Rear-Admiral Endicott, with the sanction of the Secretary of the Navy, presented a supplemental estimate embracing the amounts in part which were subsequently incorporated in the bill and reported by the committee, which was also materially reduced in the interests of economy.

The navy-yard in the city of New Orleans is in process of construction; a considerable amount has already been appropriated and much work performed. A steel floating dock, admitted to be the very best in the world, and capable of docking the largest battle ships of the Navy, as well as the heaviest freight carrier, has been placed there and is doing good work.

The report of the Navy Department shows that already twenty-seven merchant ships have been docked there during the past year and some few war ships. It is admitted that a naval station at New Orleans, the outlet of the great Mississippi Valley, is as well a commercial necessity, and the Secretary of the Navy in failing to incorporate in his estimates any recommendation for an appropriation for that yard had no idea and no intention, so he assured me, of neglecting it, but he said he felt assured that the committee was amply able to deal with the subject, after having secured further information of the progress of the work and the necessities of the establishment.

The appropriations herein incorporated are very moderate. They are by no means what could properly be appropriated for the speedy completion of the station, but they are ample to continue the work of construction for the next fiscal year in a reasonable way.

It is needless for me, Mr. Chairman, to enter upon the question as to the necessity for that naval station. Years ago a commission appointed by Congress to investigate and report upon the best site on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico for such a station. The city of New Orleans was determined upon. The naval station was appropriated for. It was initiated in the Fifty-third Congress, and appropriations were made for the purchase of additional land required. Since that time there have been moderate but steady appropriations made in every Congress for its advancement and availability to perform all necessary work. It is universally admitted that the station at New Orleans, commanding the mouth of the great Mississippi River, is one of the most important in the entire naval establishment. The committee has unanimously incorporated this provision in the bill after careful investigation. If it were stricken out it certainly would be a vital blow to one of the most useful and necessary Government establishments in the United States.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I was very much interested in endeavoring to hear what the gentleman said. I am not sure but that the committee did exceed the estimate of the Secretary here. I think it exceeded it largely.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Five hundred and twenty thousand five hundred and fifty dollars was the estimate originally submitted to the Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Those estimates were reduced by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. He took no action on them, but expressed willingness to submit it to the action of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I believe the committee added to the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy as to certain yards. I believe it was generally understood that the estimates made by the Secretary of the Navy, although the estimates of the Bureau of Yards and Docks amounted to more by over [illegible].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Such I believe to be the case.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question, as I have been unable thus far to get an answer from the chairman of the committee. I will ask the gentleman——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I am not sure I can answer.

Mr. LIND (continuing). Whether this is a fair illustration of the method of constructing your bill, and the principles that guided you in perfecting it?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Now, while it is true that in some instances, this being one, the estimates did exceed the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, estimates made by the different bureaus of the naval establishment amounted to more than $25,000,000. The Secretary of the Navy reduced them considerably. We had a number of hearings by the bureau chiefs, and it was [illegible] which appeared, and [illegible] mendation of the Secretary of the Navy was slightly exceeded. But in no case, I believe, can you, has the estimate of the bureau been exceeded. The estimate of the Secretary of the Navy may have been exceeded. I know in this instance the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy was [illegible] per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 13, after the word "dollars," insert "improvement of water front, $1,500,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is with no hope that this amendment will be adopted that it is offered. It is money [illegible] which the New York yard which have not yet been said.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] seem to imagine that they can [illegible] embarrassment by asserting that I favor building up a land navy rather than building up a sea navy. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the mere fact that I am opposed to the programme which I know has been formulated by the Department for the sea force may be unpopular will in no way deter me from opposing its recommendation.

This item is recommended by a board appointed by direction of the Secretary of the Navy. It is for the purpose of making available the navy-yard at New York for the proper handling of fleets and great ships. Gentlemen of the committee cavil continually at proposed improvements in the New York yard. They say that the people of Brooklyn came to Congress ten or a dozen years ago and succeeded in getting Congress to consent to the sale of some navy lands for the sum of about $2,000,000—$1,908,666; and now that it is proposed to buy lands which would be valuable and useful for the purposes of the yard there for practically the same amount these same gentlemen say that they come here for the purpose of unloading useless lands upon the Department. I am [illegible] lands sold by the Government to the city of Brooklyn, which was a portion of what [illegible] in this House. The land sold was used as a public dump. It was a public nuisance and a menace to the health of the people of Brooklyn. The city of Brooklyn purchased from the Government a part of what was known as the naval lands and land in navy yard [illegible]. The purchased a part of what was known as the navy-yard land proper for $1,208,666. The understanding at that time was that the Government should utilize the $1,908,666 received from the sale of the lands upon the east side of the navy-yard [illegible] the west side, which [illegible] with [illegible] water front and depth of water to be useful to the yard.

Part of the programme was carried out; the other part has never been carried out. In regard to this proposed improvement [illegible] in the hearings before the committee Admiral Endicott was heard.

[illegible] improvement direct[illegible] I think not.

[illegible] done, and he appointed the board?

Mr. Chairman, that is a remarkable assertion for the head of a bureau of the Navy Department to make. In the last session of [illegible] adopted a resolution which directed the Secretary of the Navy to report as soon as possible what improvements are necessary on the water front in the navy yard at Brooklyn for the proper berthing of battle ships [illegible].

The Secretary of the Navy referred the matter to the commandant of the Brooklyn yard and directed him to appoint a board, and this board recommended this plan. This plan is known as the Bowles plan. It has been under consideration in the Navy Department for four or five years. It was originated by former Rear-Admiral Bowles, the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and, I can say safely, and without fear of contradiction, one of the best-equipped men who ever served the Government in the Navy Department, and a great loss was suffered by the Department when he left it.

Admiral Bowles made a thorough study of the improvements required at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard while he was stationed there, and this plan is the one that he finally favored and approved. The only man who opposed this plan was Admiral Endicott, the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks. He had a plan of his own. Admiral Bowles's plan was to cut away a portion of the so-called "Cob Deck," which is an island built upon a shoal in front of the yard, and contains now merely a few insignificant buildings. His plan was to cut away the dock and to bend out into the river a number of piers, so that there would be adequate berthing and slip room. Admiral Endicott proposed to cut into the mainland; to take the land which was being utilized for other purposes and needed for other purposes and make ships in that way. He was the only officer of all those who have considered the proposed improvements for this yard who opposed the Bowles plan; and Admiral Endicott says that he finally consented, because so many men desired to have it done.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I know that the committee's disposition is not to make the necessary improvements at that yard. Necessarily, I am indifferent to what the committee does, but in having an efficient and properly equipped naval station, which is an asset of service and benefit to the Government in the work of repairing its vessels, I am interested. If this yard were located at some other point, if it were equipped as it is now, I would advocate just as strongly those proposed improvements. There is much said by gentlemen who are members of the committee about legislating and doing away with unnecessary yards, and yet my experience has been that those who sing the loudest in that strain are those least disposed to join in any movement to dispense with "the out-of-the-way yards," as Admiral Bowles was accustomed to term them, and they are those who are most [illegible] the Government now has.

The following is the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and the report of the board appointed by him:

[Senate Document No. 165, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

WATER FRONT, NAVY-YARD, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a copy of a report made by the board appointed to take the subject of the water front, to consider and recommend what improvements are necessary, in the water front at the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the berthing of battle ships and boats. February 23, 1903. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 21, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the following resolution of the Senate:

"IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable what improvements are necessary in the water front in the navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the proper berthing of battle ships and [illegible] [illegible] CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

President.

In view of the short time remaining before the adjournment of this present Congress, it has been impossible for me to give more extended information as would be desirable for the consideration of the matter by Congress. I send the facts as found in the report of the commandant of the navy-yard, Brooklyn, which is the only navy-yard New York which is equipped or supplied with officers on duty as the heads of departments of that yard. I have carefully examined the report, a copy of which I transmit herewith, and have personally visited the navy-yard for the purpose of ascertaining what it would be necessary to do in the improvement of the yard.

Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE of the Senate.

W. L. CAPPS,
Naval Constructor, United States Navy.

From the small amount of time I have been able to devote to this subject, I concur in the general arrangement of the plan recommended [illegible] to the greatest extent of any but the most [illegible] permanent construction, each pier so constructed that the heaviest type of traveling crane can be operated on each pier if desired.

I estimate the cost of the recommended plan, on the basis of masonry piers, with tracks for harvest cranes, as [illegible] at $[illegible].

R. C. HOLLYDAY,
Civil Engineer, United States Navy.

The COMMANDANT,
Navy-Yard, New York.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I thought when the gentleman spoke the other day against the increase of the Navy that when we got down to the New York Navy-Yard we would hear from him in advocacy of a large expenditure toward building up that local yard at the expense of the building up of the Navy at sea. It has turned out just precisely as I indicated, or at that time intended, it would turn out. Now, I want to say to the gentlemen of this committee that there are some of us who have not a single interest in the world in naval stations or navy-yards who have sat upon that committee seeking to be fair to all the yards and yet have had the idea that it was highly important that we should have ships at sea, and that navy-yards were nothing but an adjunct to the sea navy; a necessity, it was true, but a necessity only in proportion to the number of ships to be repaired. I want to call attention to the fact that this New York Navy-Yard has been a source of trouble to the committee for a number of years. The gentleman has reminded us that because of the fact that there were docks at the navy-yard it was a menace to the health of Brooklyn and that therefore Congress was induced to sell a portion of this yard.

I want to say to you that the proposition that the gentleman now advocates is to put in five or six slips in the yard at Brooklyn for this very same unhealthy, injurious purpose of docking these ships.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DAYTON. I will yield to the gentleman in just a moment. It is almost impossible to define where the gentleman stands. I know he does want in reference to the navy-yard. Certain it is that the scheme he advocates and refers to was sent to our committee without any request by the Department, and we have not, upon his word or upon the word of a single officer of the Navy Department, incorporated it into this bill. It involves the destruction of several shops already in existence at that navy-yard, and it involves not only the destruction of those shops, but the rebuilding of similar shops at another point in the yard. It involves the loss of about 6 acres of ground and the loss of the basin that we spent out at an expense of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he evidently misunderstood a word that I used. I did not use the word "dock;" I used the words "public dump." This land was used as a place for dumping refuse.

Mr. DAYTON. Used by the Navy Department as a public dump?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it was not used by the Navy Department. It was used by trespassers as a public dump.

Mr. DAYTON. Well, I beg the gentleman's pardon for misunderstanding the word which he used. I call attention to the fact that that was simply a matter of police regulation for the city of Brooklyn. If it allowed its health to be endangered by a [illegible] of that kind, it could have abated it, and it was a [illegible] expense for us to dispose of land for a million or two dollars [illegible] is worth to-day ten or twelve million dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows better than any other Member in this House that the local authorities have absolutely no right to enter on Government land and attempt to regulate what is done there, not in the cause of public health or anything else.

Mr. DAYTON. I know just as well that no man, no citizen of Brooklyn who trespasses upon the Government land for the purpose of creating a nuisance of that kind, could do so without being amenable to the United States statutes as well as to the local police regulations of the city.

Mr FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. The local authorities have no jurisdiction.

Mr. DAYTON. I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of answering any question he might ask. That is a matter that he and I may differ about. If there is any courtesy I can extend to the gentleman by the way of answering any other question, I should be glad to do so, but I do not want him to take up all of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can get all the time he desires.

Mr. DAYTON. I do not want my time extended. I want to say to the gentleman this—in a nutshell: There is no intention on the part of the Naval Committee to discriminate against this yard so long as it is a yard. There has never been any intention to discriminate against it. Now, one word in regard to the question put by the gentleman on the other side, in reference to the way these additional supplemental estimates come in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to him that every item in this bill has been gone over at least twice by the Naval Committee. It has been studied from every point of view. Additional supplemental estimates came in and have been incorporated into the bill. It is so in regard to the items affecting the Louisiana Navy-Yard; it is so in regard to the Norfolk Navy-Yard. For instance, we have been condemning land at Norfolk. We have had a decision of the court since the original estimates were made, and the Secretary of the Navy, in the last hour, sent to the committee a recommendation that we should put in this bill the sum of $400,000 in order to pay for the land that had been condemned by judicial proceeding, and the decision of which reached the Department after the original estimates had been sent in. That does not indicate in any way, shape, or form that this committee has not given the most careful, scrutinizing attention to every item that has entered into the bill.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the explanations by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] and likewise to the explanations by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON]. They would appear satisfactory, and I should be satisfied but for the remarkable fact that the chairman of the committee, when I interrogated him, did not seem to know anything about this item, or, if he did know, he hesitated and refused to answer. It seemed to cause embarrassment, and he laughed and snickered, and apologized for the presence of the item in the bill, and referred me to the leader of the minority on the committee.

I asked the question in good faith. I felt that I had a right as a Member of this House to be informed upon it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LIND. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I thought the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] was more capable of making an explanation of that appropriation than I was, and I therefore yielded to him out of courtesy.

Mr. LIND. But that was after it had been drawn out of the chairman, as by a corkscrew, that there was an item of that character. He did not even deign to answer my question. He referred me to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Then there had to be cross references to page and line before the chairman would answer.

Mr. FOSS. May I say to the gentleman that I did not know what particular item the gentleman referred to and did not refer him to the remark made by the gentleman from New York; but as soon as I found out what item the gentleman was referring to, then, out of courtesy, I yielded to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], who is more familiar with and better capable of explaining that item than I.

Mr. LIND. Let me ask the chairman of the committee a question. Are the items in the bill which have not been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy so numerous that one must furnish a bill of particulars when one would inquire in regard to such an item? Is this the kind of information to appeal to the membership of this House? That is the question that I would ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, League Island: [illegible] To continue retaining wall along reserve basin, $90,000; [illegible] to complete, $[illegible]; sewer system, extensions, $[illegible]; [illegible], extensions, $[illegible]; railroad system, extensions, $[illegible]; dredging and filling in Delaware water front, to continue, $[illegible]; water system, extensions, $[illegible]; underground electrical system, $[illegible]; fire-protection system, extensions, $[illegible]; sea wall extension, $[illegible]; one officers' quarters, $[illegible]; extension of reserve basin, to continue dredging, $75,000; locomotive crane track, extension, $[illegible]; storehouse for naval supplies, to complete, $80,470; in all, navy-yard, League Island, $912,970.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so solely with the intention of asking the chairman of the committee to explain two or three items in this paragraph which would seem at first sight extravagant. In lines 20 and 21 there appears:

Electric plants, extensions, $100,000.

In lines 2 and 3, page 29, there appears the following:

Extension of reserve station, to continue dredging, $75,000.

And in lines 4 and 5, page 29, appears the following:

Storehouse for naval supplies, to complete, $80,470.

Calling attention to the first item, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that $100,000 for the mere extension of an electric-light plant is a very large amount. I would inquire, also, what is the item referring to the extension of the reserve station, to continue dredging, $75,000, and as to whether or not this appropriation completes the work. I also call attention to the item for the storehouse, $80,470, which would seem to be a large amount.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to refer the gentleman to the hearings before the committee, where Admiral Endicott, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, appeared before the committee. As to the first item, Admiral Endicott said:

We need [illegible] money.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. [illegible] You do not need it all. You had $75,000 last year.

Admiral ENDICOTT. [illegible] stitch, and [illegible] We are [illegible] work. [illegible] We have [illegible] yards and the [illegible] Every new building that goes up [illegible] in the [illegible] and it is all to be [illegible] this year. I have a [illegible] as very important.

These are the words of Admiral Endicott, who is charged with the duty of estimating for appropriations necessary to carry on the work of this Bureau. It may be said in reference to the new League Island yard that we have been building up that yard during the last few years. We have found it necessary to do so. We have built a great many new buildings there. The old buildings were built fifty and sixty years ago, and in view of that fact Admiral Endicott finds, I presume, the necessity for a large appropriation for this particular item.

Now, in reference to the extension of the reserve station and to continue dredging, $75,000, I would state that the estimate was $100,000 as recommended by the chief of the Bureau and we cut it to $75,000. Reading in reference to this, on page 312 of the hearings, the following is found:

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The next item is "extension of reserve station, to continue dredging, $100,000."

Admiral ENDICOTT. The full amount of that item ought to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. You can [illegible] $[illegible]?

Admiral ENDICOTT. Yes, sir; but we ought to go on with the other work. You can make it $75,000. I would not like to have it reduced below that.

Now, as the gentleman knows, if he has ever been to League Island, we have there a great reserve basin, a fresh-water basin, really the only great fresh-water basin in connection with our yards; and it is there where we lay up our ships. In view of that fact, and in view of Admiral Endicott's testimony and the hearing upon it, it struck the committee that they could not afford to cut down that item any more, so they cut it down 25 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio may be extended.

Mr. BURTON. Let that be the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That the time of the gentleman from Illinois may be extended in order that he may be able to answer the questions propounded by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend the time of the gentleman from Illinois to such time as he may require to answer the questions propounded. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The Chairman will allow me to say that I think the item estimated for was to complete the building appropriated for two years ago. It has been appropriated for from time to time, and this appropriation is to complete the building.

Mr. FOSS. I have the passage now, and I will read it:

Storage house for naval supplies, act March 3, 1901, to cost $224,840. A contract was made for this building November 1, 1902, to cost $210,000. At the end of the fiscal year 44 per cent of the work had been completed.

The amount now asked to complete the building is slightly in excess of the original estimated cost, owing to unexpected expenses incurred in connection with the construction of the building. This last item is to complete the appropriation for this building, which has already been authorized under a previous act of Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. What is the total cost of this electrical plant, [illegible]

Mr. FOSS. I can not [illegible] what the total cost is. We have appropriated every year for the last two or three years certain sums for the electrical plant, and as the work progresses and the Bureau sees the necessity of further extension we [illegible]

Mr. BURTON. In proportion as power being substituted for steam power in that and other navy yards

Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir, it is, and I presume the time will come when the power at all our navy yards will be [illegible] electrical.

Mr. BURTON. Is there a house electrical plant in all the navy yards?

Mr. FOSS. There is.

Mr. BURTON. Is the gentleman able to state the expense of [illegible]

Mr. FOSS. I am not able to state that now, but I can very easily find out the figures by consulting the Department.

Mr. BURTON. Well, Mr. Chairman, [illegible] this item is erroneous. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 2, page 30, the words "for construction of gun factory, $500,000."

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. HITCHCOCK.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I [illegible] before this committee Captain Pendleton, [illegible] experts, a man who has been in the service of the gun factory [illegible] a great many years, gave certain testimony. I [illegible] this testimony verbatim in my remarks, but will merely refer now to the substance of it.

He stated, in the first place, that the capacity of the gun factories of America under private control was not sufficient [illegible] the present preparation of gun manufacture for navy yards already provided for. He stated, in the next place, that gun manufacture in these private factories and the Government factory [illegible] money than the cost of manufacturing in Government factories. He said, further, that there were only two factories in the United States where large guns could be made, and [illegible] appropriation of $500,000 for the gun factory in the Washington Navy-Yard.

I will read a part of his testimony:

Mr. VREELAND. You mean that they can not produce enough in quantity or quality?

Captain PENDLETON. In quantity. Every [illegible] do this work in some instances [illegible] work [illegible] as a result we are [illegible] Now, we have [illegible] expansion for the future needs, and we have to take [illegible] Something has to be done. Nothing was done last year. I would [illegible] expectation of the gun factory, that the Government can do this work at much less cost.

When we were getting our plant ready for work we had to [illegible] the tools [illegible] We had [illegible] a lathe near West Point and another [illegible]

We paid in both places always the same price—$3,300 apiece for the assembling of every 6-inch gun, and we furnished all the tools with which to do the work.

As soon as we were able to take the work ourselves they cost [illegible] the cost of all the work we do was [illegible] that is, we take the forged tube and mount it and [illegible] and that is the cost. We build these guns at a cost of $1,300 apiece.

Further on, referring to the acquisition of certain guns from private factories, Captain Pendleton testified:

Before the Department made that contract they sent for some [illegible] to make a [illegible] what it ought to cost. I had some [illegible] work. The Department had [illegible] for this work and yet [illegible] any $500,000 more to get those guns than the estimate was put in the work.

Mr. BURTON. I think that Admiral O'Neil stated yesterday that in buying $2,000,000 worth of guns they paid $2,500,000.

$2,000,000 GUNS COST GOVERNMENT $2,500,000 UNDER CONTRACT.

Captain PENDLETON. The cost is half a million dollars more than I estimated they would cost, and I went into every detail.

So he continues in his testimony; and, so far as I have been able to learn, there was nothing before the committee to dispute the fact that the investment of $500,000 in the extension of this Government gun factory would save to the Government perhaps 40 per cent of the cost of these guns as now made in private factories, a saving which would soon amount to millions of dollars.

I should like to have the chairman of the committee tell us why it is that in the face of this fact no recommendation is made for the extension of this gun factory to put the Government in a position to make its own guns much cheaper than they can be made in the private factories.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman state to the House what Captain Pendleton said in regard to the production of the guns which he recommended to make if this Government gun factory should be extended?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not able to refer to that; perhaps the gentleman [illegible]

Mr. RIXEY. I have [illegible] committee that he [illegible] only [illegible] them. He [illegible] why it was [illegible]

Mr. GILLETT. [illegible]

Mr. RIXEY. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was [illegible]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no doubt the gentleman correctly [illegible]

Mr. RIXEY. And I want to state to my friend that it was [illegible] If Captain [illegible] largement, with this $5[illegible] do any more than tw[illegible] work, because he [illegible] the private [illegible] the country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not [illegible] but what we should do is [illegible] spire to overcharge the Government.

Mr. RIXEY. The Government does manufacture now two-thirds of the guns.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Captain Pendleton later on in this hearing [illegible]

Mr. VREELAND. Do you [illegible] the prospect is that [illegible] able to do the part [illegible]

Captain PENDLETON. I say that if the present plants, both [illegible] and depreciation on their plants [illegible] and I do not own or control them?

[illegible] query. Why should the Government not construct and enlarge its own plants? Why should [illegible] or 40 per cent more to private factories, when by enlarging [illegible] plants, as its own expert recommends, these guns [illegible] Government factories can be made for 30 or 40 per cent less than [illegible] I should like to have the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee say why it is that he recommends [illegible] thing for the contractors and nothing for Government works to compete with the contractors?

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, this item was not recommended by the Navy Department. It has not been [illegible] by the Navy Board. It has not been [illegible] tary of the Navy. The head of what is called the [illegible] Gun Factory, who naturally desires to put himself at the head, as large a plant as possible, appeared before our committee and [illegible] permission to present his views.

Now, the gentleman from Nebraska inquires why the Government does not build all of its guns. I would say to him there is no proposition, even by the gentleman who appeared before our committee, that the Government shall build all of its guns. It is an impossibility for the Government of the United States to build the great guns which it uses for its coast defenses and for arming its battle ships. There is no proposition that the Government should do anything more than what is called "assembling" these guns, anything more than to finish the guns here in the Government Gun Factory at Washington, and in the military gun factory at Watervliet, N. Y. This expenditure which the gentleman proposes would be the entering wedge for building a great gun factory here in Washington, which in the end, he admits, would cost four or five or six million dollars. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that where fair trade conditions exist the Government of the United States might better buy all the goods that it needs in all the great departments of the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did not Captain Pendleton testify that $500,000 would make a sufficient extension at the present time to enable the Government to produce these guns for its own use 30 or 40 per cent cheaper than the manufacturers were producing them? And why should we not do this and save all these millions that we pay to the private factories?

Mr. VREELAND. If the gentleman will only think a minute, this is for a commencement, and this money would run it over until another year, when he could come before the committee again, say that the Government had already started into this work, and that it should be kept on, and ask you for still greater appropriations to continue the work. Competition in the manufacture of guns has increased during the last few years. At least two great steel plants in this country have equipped themselves for the purpose of building and furnishing these guns to the Government.

I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, that I was one of those who believe that the Government of the United States, where fair trade competition exists, might better buy all the supplies that it needs in all the great departments of the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has hardly answered my question. I asked him whether it was not testified before the Committee on Naval Affairs by Admiral O'Neil that the Government in buying $2,000,000 worth of guns was forced to pay $2,500,000 for them?

Mr. VREELAND. Well, the committee heard these matters. They fully considered the point raised by him. The members of the committee inquired into what basis he had for that information that he could build guns cheaper than we now buy them.

Mr. SIBLEY. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. SIBLEY. I have been informed, and I have reason to believe it is true, that the contractors, the steel works that take Government contracts to cast the guns, do 60 per cent of the entire work upon that gun.

Mr. FOSS. Nearer 80 per cent.

Mr. SIBLEY. Nearer 80 percent. The Government does from 20 to 80 per cent, and yet 60 per cent of the entire price of the cost of that gun is represented by the work that the Government does and only 30 or 40 per cent of the work represented by the work of the steel company who contracts for the gun. I am informed, and I would like to know if it is true, and if it is, how can the gentleman get away from the proposition? You can go down here to the Public Printer to have a speech printed that you delivered yesterday, and he will charge $8 a thousand for that speech, while you can go to another printer, outside of the Government, and get a thousand copies for $2.50 or $3 a thousand. If you will find one Department of the Government of the United States where they have done work cheaper than the private individual or corporation, then point it out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like either one of the gentlemen on the other side to answer this question——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Whether there was a word of testimony disputing Captain Pendleton or the Admiral of the United States Navy when they testified that these guns were being produced 20 to 40 per cent cheaper than we are now paying?

Mr. VREELAND. I would say to the gentleman that the committee did not feel interested enough in the subject at that time to go into the testimony. There is no testimony before the committee. There was simply a statement by the captain of the gun foundry here at Washington. There were a few questions directed to the captain. He had a very incomplete knowledge of the cost to the Government of these guns. It developed that there was a great amount of money invested in the plants that manufacture these guns. It turned out, for example, that no attention was paid to the hundred thousand dollars which was paid to men for leave of absence now by the Department each year as an item of cost. All these items which are paid are necessarily a part of the cost, and should be charged in an account as to the cost of these guns. I would say to the gentleman that after hearing the captain's testimony, having the desire to equip the Navy of the United States with the best possible guns as cheaply as can be done, the committee did not feel interested enough to start in with an expenditure which would amount to five or six million dollars in experiments whereby the Government should try to build the guns it now buys. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I was not present at the hearing before the committee on this item, but I have read Captain Pendleton's testimony, and from my experience with other matters I am satisfied that it will be in the interest of economy to enlarge the Government Gun Factory and enable our own officials to finish more guns. Every member of the committee will remember that in the case of smokeless powder by making our powder—and we make a part of it, we buy a part of it—we get it 40 per cent cheaper than when we buy it, as I recollect the testimony. Every gentleman in the country knows that before we began to agitate for a Government armor-plate factory that the armor-plate makers——

Mr. VREELAND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. In one minute. That the armor-plate makers charged us $545 a ton, and when it was signified to them that we would like to hear something from them on prices, they refused to give us any other proposition; but after the agitation for an armor-plate factory came up we succeeded in getting that armor plate for $100 a ton less, and we have thereby, in the last four years, saved the Government $3,000,000 by the mere agitation for an armor-plate factory. Captain Pendleton says here, in speaking of guns:

We paid in both places always the same price, $3,300 apiece, for the assembling of every 6-inch gun, and we furnished all the tools with which to do the work. As soon as we were able to take the work ourselves they cost $1,300.

A saving of $2,000 apiece in guns. Now, what is the question of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman makes the assertion that there is very much profit, for instance, in the manufacture of smokeless powder. I would ask the gentleman whether he takes into account the money invested in that plant and all of the things that go to make up a great manufacturing plant?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman that in the hearing Admiral O'Neil, I believe it was, gave all the facts and gave all the figures and gave the history of his experience with the gunpowder factory and stated his conclusions in figures in the hearing, and the gentleman by looking them up can find them himself in a few minutes and find just what has been our experience with powder.

Mr. VREELAND. I would ask if there has been a recommendation made by the gentleman as to building factories?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. What is that?

Mr. VREELAND. Is there any recommendation made by the Admiral as to building a factory?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The Admiral was strongly in favor of enlarging it last year, and I presume he is this year. I did not hear his testimony this year and have not read it. I know there was a proposition coming from this side of the House to increase that powder factory last year; but Captain Pendleton's testimony is fresh as to guns; the gentleman from Nebraska has just called attention to it, and he says that $500,000 can equip this factory. He says that as things are now he can not finish the guns that are needed for battle ships and cruisers already authorized until 1907. So the probability is that unless we increase the plant the work of the Government will get further and further behind from year to year in the Ordnance Department.

Mr. VREELAND. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would be willing to make an expenditure of four or five million dollars of his own money based on Captain Pendleton's testimony?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman must take me to be a multimillionaire. I am not, and have not four or five million dollars to invest in it, but I should think if I could get into one of the armor-plate trusts or some other great trust which sells all the great supplies to the Government, I would be soon able to make such an investment. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No, it is a clear business proposition, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of economy, in the interest of getting our guns cheaper. The Government turns out the best product. I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska ought to be adopted. While it will entail some increased expense now, Captain Pendleton's testimony shows in the long run that even within a very few years it will save vastly more for the Government than the cost of the factory.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support the committee on this proposition. No one in this House has a record clearer than I have for providing for the protection of the Government against the armor-plate trust. It is as plain as daylight, says Secretary Moody, that there is a trust, that the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies are in a combination, and that it dictates prices on armor plate to the Government.

If it appeared that the amendment of the gentleman had the effect to protect the Government against this trust, I would support it with pleasure and would have advocated it in committee. But the fact is that Captain Pendleton, who proposed the enlargement of the factory, told the committee that he did not propose to take from that trust one particle of the work that it now has. I will read you from the hearings. I interrogated him especially on that point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. RIXEY. I will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course the gentleman does not claim, even if he concurs in Captain Pendleton's words as he does, that Captain Pendleton would carry out the policy of the United States. If this Congress orders the construction of a Government gun factory, certainly there would be a power in this Government to manage that gun factory.

Mr. RIXEY. The answer is that is what Captain Pendleton is the director of this project, and he outlines what he expects to do with it. This is what he says:

Mr. RIXEY. How many guns will be required for the ships already authorized?

GUN DO TWO-THIRDS OF WORK AT GUN FACTORY.

Captain PENDLETON. I have carefully gone [illegible] work now [illegible] do two-thirds of the work.

Mr. RIXEY. Is there any objection to increase your factory so that you can do the work [illegible]?

QUESTION

Captain PENDLETON. No, that is not it. The question is this: that we have [illegible] ready authorized?

Mr. RIXEY. [illegible] care of the present conditions you can take care [illegible] ready authorized?

Mr. RIXEY. [illegible] take care of the [illegible] care of [illegible] if you get the [illegible]

Captain PENDLETON. [illegible] to take care of the [illegible] and further [illegible] ready authorized.

Mr. RIXEY. [illegible] for the present conditions you can take care [illegible] ready authorized?

Captain PENDLETON. [illegible] Yes, sir.

Mr. RIXEY.

and repair, to complete, $150,000; foundry, for construction and repair, to complete, $[illegible]; in all, navy yard, Charleston, S. C., $[illegible]."

Mr. LEGARE. I offer this amendment. Mr. Chairman, with considerable confidence, feeling as I do that the Committee on Naval Affairs in ignoring the Charleston Navy-Yard had no intention of being unjust or unfair to the people of my district. To the contrary, I feel the committee has been actuated only by a desire to do that which in its opinion was to the best interests of the Government. I shall have no trouble, however, in convincing the Members of this House, the gentlemen of the Committee on Naval Affairs included, that a great wrong would be perpetrated and a great injustice be done should this bill be passed in its present shape without this amendment, and that not only would irreparable injury be wrought to my people, who are a part of this great Government, but to the Government itself.

I say that there has been a mistake or a misunderstanding concerning this matter, for upon due inquiry and investigation I find that in some way the gentlemen in charge of the original bill were impressed with the idea that the appropriations for this work had already been appropriated in previous bills to carry on this work, and that this would be a new and unnecessary expenditure; second, that the Navy Department were not the originators of the plan to build a navy-yard at Charleston, had never controlled it, and were in no way responsible for its completion or maintenance, and, third, that Charleston was not the proper place for a navy-yard anyhow, and while it is not my purpose to make a speech in any sense of the word, I do wish to as briefly as possible remove this false impression by simply making a plain, concise explanation of the entire matter and ask your earnest cooperation in the passage of this amendment. In the first place, then, allow me to say to you, in explanation of the amounts already appropriated for the yard, that the same was made by Congress for specific purposes and is for the completion of separate and distinct contracts from those mentioned in my amendment. For instance:

The act of March 3, 1903, made appropriations as follows:

Power house and fuel storage, for construction and repair, to complete	$45,000
Machine shop, for construction and repair, to complete	80,000
Foundry, for construction and repair, to complete	[illegible]
Timber dry dock, for [illegible]	[illegible]
Power house, for steam engineering	25,000

What I am asking for to-day is an appropriation to continue and complete contracts already entered into by the Government and for which the Government is responsible. I have not taken the entire estimate as furnished by the Navy Department. These amounts in all to $951,500, and includes a number of estimates for new contracts, and in order to meet this situation fairly and squarely, I have eliminated each and every new item, and stand here to-day asking you for only such amounts as are necessary to continue and complete work already contracted for. These contracts have been executed by our Government, and contractors have all over the land have moved there with men and material and machinery at great expense, and have already completed a large part of the work. Unless this appropriation is [illegible] there will be compelled to shut down, leaving under the terms of their contracts they receive a certain percentage of their pay as the work progresses. Over [illegible] worth of these contracts could be completed before the end of the year, as follows:

	Amount.	Date of completion.
Water main	$[illegible]	May 1, [illegible]
Quarters [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Improvement [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Joiner shop, for [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

You can readily see, therefore, the hardship that would result from your failure to appropriate this money at once. I mean hardship to the contractors and the great inconvenience they experienced last season. Already they have been writing me to know what provision has been made in this bill for a continuance of these contracts and have begun to shut down work. I wish to read the following from one of my home papers:

TO STOP WORK. AT THE NAVY-YARD THERE ARE MORE THAN EIGHTY MEN SCHEDULED TO BE LAID OFF WITHIN A FEW DAYS. APPROPRIATIONS ARE EXPECTED TO BE MADE, BUT UNLESS FUNDS TO CONTINUE AND SUSPENSION WILL BE ONLY TEMPORARY.

A member of this establishment of the population Navy-Yard have completed [illegible] the proposed suspension of the work next week on account of the lack of funds.

* * * * * * *

The notice of the laying off of the men was received in the past few days. The men came to Charleston with the understanding that they would be kept [illegible] in the employ of the Government. With the funds [illegible] the contractors have completed the work [illegible] would not be far distant when the actual mechanical force would also be laid off, but aside from the sequence the construction of the buildings will be stopped on account of the expenditure of the appropriation.

* * * * * * *

The suspension of work for any extended time will prove serious to the large force of employees who have located at the navy-yard, and its effect will be felt as far as we.

The suspension of work may prove very damaging to the dry dock especially which is under construction.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LEGARE. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the nature of the work of these contracts the gentleman speaks of; what does it relate to?

Mr. LEGARE. It relates to "machine shop for steam engineering," to complete; "power house for steam engineering," to complete; "stone and concrete dry dock," to continue, and the like. Permit me also to say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. And these contracts were made pursuant to statute in force at the time they were made?

Mr. LEGARE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And now no provision is made in this bill, as I understand, either for the completion of the contracts or settlement with the contractors for any damage?

Mr. LEGARE. That is it. You have stated the case, sir, exactly as I have endeavored to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina be extended. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEGARE. I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

So much, then, for the necessity of this appropriation. What of the Navy Department's responsibility for this navy-yard? On the 25th day of last January the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Moody, made the following statements before the Committee on Naval Affairs:

The Navy Department has no responsibility whatever for the Charleston Navy-Yard. [illegible] to estimate for [illegible] navy-yard.

* * * * * * *

[illegible] never been consulted.

Now, it is not my purpose to attack this statement; in fact, I hesitate as to whether I should even discuss the matter, coming as it did from so high an authority. But, actuated as I am by a sense of duty to those whom I represent and holding as I do the [illegible] facts in my hand, I must at least be allowed to say that the Secretary was mistaken. He says: "The Navy Department never recommended the Charleston Navy-Yard." I hold in my hand a copy of the first letter written upon this subject. It was written by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks to Mr. Moody's predecessor, Secretary Long. It contains a recommendation that the navy-yard be removed from Port Royal to Charleston. Secretary Long on the same day wrote to the Senate transmitting this letter and commending the matter to its "favorable consideration."

I wish to read these two letters because it shows absolutely and conclusively that the matter originated with the Navy Department. They are as follows:

[Letter to Secretary Long.]

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1900.

SIR: Referring to naval appropriation bill, H. R. 10459, reported by the Senate on the 2d instant, the Bureau begs to draw the attention of the Department to the proposed [illegible] Port Royal, S. C., [illegible] seq. [illegible] the dry dock [illegible] $[illegible] [illegible] $[illegible] [illegible] $[illegible]

Just a little more, and I shall leave the matter for your just and conscientious opinion and decision.

Some few years ago the Government expended a half million dollars for a navy-yard at Port Royal. This station has been almost entirely abandoned; in fact, it is utterly useless; and this money has been practically wasted. Is it proposed that this new enterprise or navy-yard shall likewise be abandoned; and if so, why? You have some seven navy-yards and stations north of Hatteras, and any far-minded man must realize that sooner or later you must establish important naval stations on our southern coast, unless you propose to abandon that coast entirely in the event of war.

We are certainly entitled to equal protection with the northern ports; justice requires it and necessity demands it. The South is fast becoming the center of the world's industry. The clouds of prejudice and [illegible] that have obscured its glorious [illegible] for the past thirty years are fast passing away. A northern writer, after [illegible] and travel, has said that—

[illegible]

I [illegible] from the South [illegible] and I tell you that it is true, that the South has more [illegible] than any other section of this country, and energy and enterprise, and unlimited resources [illegible] on the face of the globe. [illegible] and most successful [illegible] of the [illegible] Would the South [illegible] and wealth and [illegible]. We have an abundance of [illegible] iron, coal, phosphate, timber, and tobacco, and I ask you, sirs, What country of the known world can boast of more [illegible]

[illegible] industry, thrift, energy, and wealth of the South have been the great factors in bringing about [illegible] country into a world power. Have we not the right, then, to come to you and ask protection at your hands, you who are the dominant [illegible] of this House?

All [illegible] have been abolished; bitterness has passed away. We are one people, one great country, and I [illegible] true and as patriotic as yours, and [illegible] that they really [illegible] in these matters.

We have one of the greatest harbors on the Atlantic. You might search the whole coast and not find a spot so well adapted and suitable in every respect for a naval station, situated about the middle of the south Atlantic coast, a good harbor of magnificent proportions, deep water, and accessible for vessels of the largest size and heaviest draft. It is in a sheltered location, convenient for navigation, and also in a favorable position with respect to the principal lines of defense. It is secure from [illegible] natural surroundings; in fact, it is a [illegible] Its land defenses on Sullivans Island have been practically completed, and there is no fear of destruction or capture, or even material damage, from any [illegible] attack.

Charleston is 7 miles from the ocean, and the naval station [illegible] Charleston, and thus the longest range guns could [illegible] there.

[illegible] with more than 26 feet of water at [illegible] a rise of 5 feet in the tide, we have [illegible] feet of water at high tide. Just a few days ago a [illegible] with a draft of [illegible] feet in [illegible] The largest war vessels which have ever [illegible] more able and efficient men in this or any [illegible] than the members of the Charleston Pilots Association [illegible]

[illegible] and adaptable for naval [illegible] Charleston has an [illegible] population of [illegible] and [illegible] as the sun ever shines on it. We have the railroads running [illegible] in abundance supplied [illegible] and a healthy climate that is suitable for outdoor as well as indoor work. While other parts of the country are frozen over for months at a time, our [illegible] every day in the year. And we have [illegible] a magnificent supply of pure, fresh water for the use of the navy-yard.

What more can be desired, or asked, or demanded? I do not hesitate, sirs, to stand here and say to you we have a port suitable in every possible way for this work—yea, a port preeminent not only in the South, but along the entire Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and I appeal to your sense of justice and right when I ask that you permit the Government of the United States to comply with its solemn compact with the contractors in charge of this work and with the people of this port by voting for my amendment. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state the facts in reference to this matter, and it is my intention to give the facts and reasons why the committee did not see fit to put any appropriation in this bill. I may say that I think the committee were unanimous in regard to it. I know this, that the motion did not come from this side of the committee.

Mr. LEGARE. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. FOSS. I do.

Mr. LEGARE. The gentleman says that the motion did not come from his side of the House. That is true. But the member of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, who did make the motion, being away, I wired him and have his telegram in reply, saying that if the rest of the committee would concur, he would [illegible] to my amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, this was the situation before the committee. The House has never made an appropriation for this yard. It was put on in the Senate, and the appropriations for this yard have always been made in the Senate. It has been regarded as a kind of Senatorial proposition. Now, we have appropriated for this yard to date $[illegible]. That much money we have appropriated for the Charleston yard—$1,363,300, and not only that, but when we transferred the yard from Port Royal to Charleston we reappropriated all the money that was left [illegible] at the Port Royal yard, which [illegible] in the [illegible] of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, so that [illegible] amounted to $340,105, making, then, the total a[illegible] are available for this yard in round [illegible] $1,700,-957,95[illegible] officers quarters, $[illegible] wharf, [illegible] making, in all, a total [illegible] wholly completed.

[illegible] already made which are to be e[illegible] work already [illegible] Now, [illegible] Admiral E[illegible] we ha[illegible] enough to pay for all [illegible] to-day, but not an of the work authorized. Now, Mr. [illegible] and I know, [illegible] so much every year. If [illegible] appropriated—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he be granted five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. It struck the committee that we had money enough appropriated to carry on the work of this yard for the [illegible] fiscal year. We are appropriating only for this next fiscal [illegible] we are not appropriating for the following fiscal year. We will be back here in a [illegible] Now, I have no disposition in any way to cut down the yard at all. [illegible] unanimous upon it, that we ought not to appropriate any more at this time. Now, I will make that statement about it and leave it to the committee entirely to settle the question.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. It seems to me that since the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [illegible] with the Committee of the Whole, who [illegible] we should not hesitate to adopt this amendment, as the plain fact stated by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE] must convince everybody that we ought to put in this appropriation for the Charleston Navy-Yard. The gentleman from [illegible] GROSVENOR] in asking the gentleman from South Carolina two or three questions made plain the situation of this yard. He made it plain that these contracts are authorized by law; that they were entered into by authority of Congress. Although this yard may have been considered a Senatorial proposition, the gentleman evidently meaning by that that it originated in the Senate, which is true, yet it is now a proposition of the people of the United States. It matters not whether the original act creating the Charleston Navy-Yard originated in this body or at the other end of the Capitol, it is now our proposition.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. MUDD. I ask for information because I did not happen to be at the hearing when this matter was considered. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, I understood, stated that we had appropriated sufficient money for all the contracts that have been entered into. I would like to know what is the understanding of the gentleman from North Carolina as to that?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. My understanding is the money has not been appropriated to complete all the contracts that have been entered into.

Mr. MUDD. I understood that; that is a matter I would like to have some light upon.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Now, I may be in error upon that, but such is my understanding.

Mr. FOSS. The fact, as I have stated it, is that we have already appropriated enough money to complete the works which have already been contracted for.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Take the dry dock.

Mr. FOSS. Not including the dry dock, because the gentleman knows that construction runs along for a number of years.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That is exactly it.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. The question is, Have we appropriated money enough for the next fiscal year?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. My understanding is that we have not. I have not the Department's statement at hand, but there are other projects there already authorized by law for which there has been no appropriation. As I understand the position of the gentleman from Illinois, he is willing for this matter to be considered now without prejudice. The fact that it has been omitted from the bill he does not desire to count against this proposition.

Mr. LEGARE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LEGARE. I stated, which the gentleman perhaps did not hear, that I went to Admiral Endicott's office yesterday morning, and included in this amendment only such matters as have already been contracted for and for which he said there was not sufficient money to carry on the work, contracts that are to be completed this year.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. And from the gentleman's statement I understood the Admiral was recommending only such matters as could not conveniently be avoided. It is true we have heretofore appropriated nearly one and three-quarter millions of dollars for that navy-yard, but everybody in the House knows that you can not make a navy-yard with $2,000,000. It has been stated here to-day that the Brooklyn Navy-Yard represents an investment of $19,000,000. The Norfolk yard represents many millions, the Boston Navy-Yard many millions, the Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy-Yard many millions, the Mare Island yard many millions.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state what the depth of water is at Charleston?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Yes; but let me say to the gentleman that when we have spent as much money there as we have in the Delaware River we will have as great a depth of water at Charleston as we now have at League Island.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GROSVENOR). The time of the gentleman from North Carolina and the time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEGARE. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEGARE. Mr. Chairman, the depth of water on Charleston bar is 31 feet and a little over at high tide and 26 feet and a little more at low tide. Only last week a vessel came into port in distress in the night time drawing 26 feet 4 inches of water. The heaviest draft war vessel when loaded only draws 27 feet of water.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina for that information. I did not have it. I am not an expert on harbors. I believe that this amendment is a fair and just proposition.

We all realize that it must be appropriated some time, and why not in such a manner as not to discontinue the progress of the work that is now contracted for? We do not hesitate to appropriate for Boston, for Portsmouth, N. H., for Brooklyn, N. Y., for coaling stations in different parts of the country, the training station at Rhode Island, the navy-yard at Mare Island; and why should this proposition be made an exception?

I am in favor of economy, yet I believe this proposition will appeal to the reason of every gentleman here. As I have said, I do not understand the chairman of the Naval Committee himself to be opposed to this proposition; he is willing to submit it to the House without prejudice. I heartily favor the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee, said that the provision for the Charleston yard was left out by practically unanimous consent, I would like to make a statement about this particular item. The proposition for the Charleston Navy-Yard has never been very popular with the House Naval Committee because of the statement made before that committee that there was not sufficient depth of water there to justify a navy-yard, but from the statement now made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE] that information seems not to be correct and that there are deep-water facilities at that place.

The Members not on the conference committee were, perhaps, influenced in our position by some statements of those who were in conference in dealing with the Senate on this proposition. The Charleston Navy-Yard did not originate with the House committee, but on the Senate side, and when our conferees came back and reported that they had provided for the Charleston Navy-Yard and were asked why, they replied the proposition was forced upon them.

We had sympathy for them and were willing to stand by them temporarily. But, as the time for conference again approaches, I believe it would be as well for us to save them the trouble of having the proposition pitched down their throats again. In addition to that, as suggested by a gentleman near me, it might be as well for us to assert the right of the House. I want to say in all frankness to the membership of this House that I think the proposition has gone so far that we can not stop it now and say that that yard shall be abandoned.

I will say that in my judgment there are too many yards on the Atlantic coast. We have them from New Orleans to Portsmouth, N. H.; not at every few miles of the coast, but too close together to answer the needs of the Government; but I think that before we undertake to abandon any one yard the whole system ought to be considered. We ought to take the whole subject into consideration, from Portsmouth to New Orleans, and decide what yards, if any, should be abandoned. I do not believe that the Naval Committee will feel that it has been turned down if this proposition is inserted. I believe that committee recognizes that the proposition will have to go in the bill, and it is well to receive it now.

We can consider hereafter what yards should be abandoned. We have two yards on the New England coast within 50 miles of each other, carrying millions of dollars annually, conceded by every member of the House committee that one or the other ought to be abandoned and the property sold; yet there has been no action taken to carry that out. Under the circumstances I shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE]. I believe it is wise to make the provision and put it in this bill. I notice that in the amendment which he brings in here and has offered he provides for a less sum than that recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. Every item which he offers in his amendment has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy in the estimates which he sent to the House committee, and there can be no danger in adopting the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this proposition is exhausted.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE] tells us that there are contracts in existence on which the contractors can sue in the Court of Claims, there recovering their money in case we do not adopt his amendment. If that statement is correct, obviously there is no reason for this amendment. There is no necessity in it if the gentleman from South Carolina is correct. On the other hand, the chairman of the committee [Mr. FOSS] says that a sufficient sum has already been appropriated to take care of all improvements contemplated for. In return, the gentleman from South Carolina produces evidence from Admiral Endicott to show that his original statement was correct, and that such sums of money have not been appropriated and that, therefore, these contractors can sue in the Court of Claims and can recover there. Now, I should like to know the judgment of the committee if, after the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina, he is still satisfied that sufficient money has been appropriated to cover these items and that, therefore, it will be impossible for those contractors to recover in the Court of Claims? Obviously, it is not worth while for this House to insert an item from this appropriation bill, if there is no necessity in such a course.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, that was my statement—that I thought there was a sufficient amount of money already appropriated. Now, if the contracts have been assigned in the last day or so, that is something I do not know anything about, but, of course, gentlemen, it is simply a question. You can appropriate the money this year or you can appropriate it next. You can build one as fast as you like in building up a navy-yard. You can build it all in one year or all in two years. I have no doubt. I will say to my friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE], that the appropriation will be made next year if it is not made this year, but all we want to do is to appropriate just that measure of money which is necessary each year. I am not going to say it is not so, but it is barely possible that we do need a little more appropriation for that dry dock. I do not know just when the payments are to be made, but I do think that of those items which the gentleman has put in here the item for carrying on the work of the dry dock is the most important. I think that is $300,000.

Now, I want to be perfectly fair and square with the gentleman. We are not trying to cut out this yard, or anything of that sort. We recognize the supreme power of Congress. Congress has established this yard. Of course it was initiated over in the Senate, but the House agreed to it on its conference report, and there is no disposition in any way to cut down this yard, but to give only that measure of appropriation which is necessary to build it up. Consequently I have made the statement that I have in all fairness to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE], and in all fairness to the Members of this House, without any prejudice one way or the other, and if you see fit to put in the appropriation, why, that is your action and not mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Guantanamo, Cuba: Dry dock, $200,000; dredging at Toro Key, [illegible]; at Boca Key, $75,000; reservoir and water system, [illegible]; in all, $285,000.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out, in the first line, the word "naval" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "coaling."

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment should prevail, I will follow it with an amendment to strike out the provision for the dry dock and for the dredging at that place. As I view it, all that this country needs at Guantanamo, Cuba, is a coaling station. I do not believe there is any necessity for establishing at that point a naval station at which a would-be navy would have its plant there, and that this station would be maintained at a cost of annual expenditure.

It is well known that we have turned over this island to the people of Cuba. We have naval stations at Key West, along the South Atlantic coast, and it does seem to me that to be utterly useless for us to establish a great naval station upon the coast of Cuba, only a short distance away. We have no [illegible] in Cuba. We made there during the war with Spain. But there is a vast difference when we come to consider the question of establishing and maintaining a naval station and a coaling station, and if, as I know, a coaling station is all that is required at Guantanamo, it should be limited to that.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy, in his hearing before the committee, said, in regard to Guantanamo and other places, the following:

[illegible] for public works in the bill go out than to fail on those two [illegible].

Under the Platt resolution, which, as gentlemen will recall, was a part of the military appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, we entered into certain agreements with Cuba. I read from article 7 of that agreement:

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the Government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States land necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

In pursuance of that resolution, known as the "Platt resolution," the President of the United States made an agreement with the President of Cuba, a copy of which I have here, in which two coaling or naval stations were set out, one at Guantanamo, on the southern coast of Cuba, and the other on the northern coast, at Olongapo. It is not proposed to do anything toward the development of the latter, but it is proposed in this bill to start in gradually for the development of a small naval base at Guantanamo.

Last year we made an appropriation in the naval appropriation bill of $100,000 toward the development of that station. This year there was carried in the deficiency bill an appropriation of $200,000 for the same object. In the present bill we propose a modest appropriation of about $350,000. It is necessary and important that we should have a station at Guantanamo, on the south side of Cuba. We have a beautiful harbor there. It has been my pleasure to visit it, and there can not be a better location for our naval station—to defend our interests in the West Indies and at the same time to be a defense to the Panama Canal, which we are going to build, and right away, too. Not only that, but also a defense to the Monroe doctrine. There is no better location, there is no more important strategic point than right there at Guantanamo.

It is not proposed by the committee to build up a great naval station, but simply a small station where we can make a few necessary repairs—dock our ships and scrape off the barnacles, and preserve them in that way instead of bringing them home.

Now, in view of the earnest recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and the Department, I ask this committee to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I think that the vote upon this item will be a test vote as to whether we shall have simply a proper coaling station at this point or whether we shall have a naval station. As I discussed this proposition at some length yesterday, I do not wish to occupy much time now.

Gentlemen will recall that in another part of this bill—on page 15, I believe—there is an item of $600,000 to be used for coaling stations, a part of which—how much I do not know, perhaps all, but certainly a portion of it—to be used in establishing a coaling station at this very point, Guantanamo. Therefore we have a proper coaling station at that point already provided for, and it is unnecessary to retain this item in the bill if all we want there is a coaling station. Guantanamo is 40 miles east of Santiago.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does not the gentleman believe that our failure to make this appropriation would be construed as a relinquishment of our right there?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not think it would be construed as a relinquishment of our right to establish a coaling station there.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It would amount to a relinquishment of our right to establish a naval base there.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Under the treaty.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Surely I have already stated that it would be a relinquishment of our purpose to establish a great naval station there, but it would not be relinquishing our right to establish a proper coaling station there or any other right we have.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not understand that we are going to establish any great naval station there.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Well, I do. The gentleman [illegible] understand the proposition is, in my judgment. The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Moody, stated before the committee that the cost of this establishment, according to the present plan, was estimated to be $12,085,000. Does not the gentleman from Michigan think that $12,000,000 would establish a great naval station there?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That may be the outside limit, but this present appropriation does not contemplate any very large expenditure.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. As I remarked yesterday, this would commit us to that proposition, and while the country will not understand it, while you will only be appropriating $285,000 in this item, it will commit you to a final appropriation exceeding $12,000,000, according to present estimates.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And if you do not make this appropriation, in my judgment, it will be construed as a relinquishment of our rights under the treaty, and an abandonment of the purposes and intention of the Platt amendment, by virtue of which we acquired valuable rights in Cuba.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Then the gentleman has not read the former part of the bill, and he has not read the hearings; because, as I have stated, the $600,000 item on page 15 is stated by the chairman of this committee, in his report, to go in part, if not altogether, toward the establishment of a coaling station at this very place. Striking this item out will be an abandonment of no right we have in Cuba.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague allow a question?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. As I have already stated, Mr. Chairman, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What is there in this bill that will compel the Secretary of the Navy to establish a coal heap at Guantanamo?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Nothing in the world except that honest, good faith that ought to actuate the conduct of every one in reference to an appropriation granted for an express purpose. The hearings show it, the report shows it, everything shows it; and if the Secretary did not establish a coaling station there under the $600,000 appropriation elsewhere authorized, he would not act in good faith to the American people. And so, as I said, the question upon that item is whether you will have a coaling station there, or whether you will have a larger and a greater thing, a naval station there. In my judgment the necessities of the United States do not warrant the latter.

We have a naval station at Pensacola, we have a naval station at New Orleans, we have a naval station at Key West, and one at Charleston; and, in my judgment, another great naval station in that part of the world is not required by the necessities of the country. If you establish a great naval station there, it will mean a large permanent annual appropriation for its maintenance. If you want to limit it to a mere coaling station, strike out this item; but if in your judgment it is best for the interests of the country, all things considered, to establish a great naval station there, then retain it. This estimate of $12,000,000 is the present estimate. In my judgment, if you start to develop a great naval station there you will never develop it at an expense of only $12,000,000, but suspect it will cost vastly more than that. For these reasons I support the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RIXEY) there were—ayes 58, noes 87.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Olongapo, P. I.: To complete survey of reservation, $20,000; for repairing buildings erected by the quartermaster for temporary use as shops, storehouses, offices, and so forth, $20,000; toward building 1,700 feet of quay wall, at $44 per foot, one hundred seventy commandant's quarters, $[illegible]; three officers' quarters, $[illegible]; toward constructing marine barracks and outbuildings $[illegible]; marine officers' quarters, $[illegible]; dredging entrance to floating dry dock to 30 feet deep, about 25,000 cubic yards, at 30 cents, $7,500; [illegible] in front of quay walls, about [illegible] cubic yards, at 40 cents for floating dock; [illegible] water supply from back yard springs, capacity 50,000 [illegible]; 11,000 feet of [illegible] pipe, [illegible] cents per foot, [illegible] valves and fittings, $[illegible]; freight and transportation $[illegible]; distribution [illegible] ward $[illegible]; in wing pipes, $[illegible]; temporary reservoir, 40 by 40 by 10 feet, capacity [illegible] gallons per day for use in hauling and receiving [illegible] immediate use, $[illegible]; toward coaling plant, $[illegible]; coal, $[illegible].

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the entire paragraph.

[Mr. JONES of Virginia addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Chairman, I have not worried the House with my ideas upon any part of the naval bill, but the discussion has now come to a point where it seems to me that I may with propriety express my views. All the objections made upon the other side to the provisions in this naval bill seem to turn upon two points: First, that the bill is a very extravagant bill; second, that it is a bill which departs from the traditional policies of the Government and is to be used to build up a navy to threaten somebody, and to embroil this nation in trouble with foreign powers. Mr. Chairman, both of those propositions are as remote from the truth as they well could be. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] yesterday arose in this body and stated that he was opposed to this bill because he believed it—to be a departure from the fundamental principles and policies which are alike the bulwark and the honor of this Republic. It involves great extravagance; but that is, after all, a minor consideration.

He then goes on and says:

We can in no way illustrate the growth of our naval establishment so well as by referring to certain figures.

Then he refers to figures, and says that the expense to this country on account of the maintenance of the American Navy has increased to a proportion where it ought to be stopped, and to an unreasonable degree. Now, what are the facts about that? Everybody knows that the expenses of this Government are increasing in every department. They are legitimately increasing, and they will continue to legitimately increase, and they should. This country is no longer a country of small things. The amounts in the naval bill have increased, but has the ratio between these amounts and the value of the property of the country to be defended increased? No; it has decreased, and that is the point that determines whether the expenditure is extravagant or not.

Let me call the attention of the committee to the report of the Secretary of the Navy for the present year. There at the bottom of page 32 of the Secretary's report is a tabulated statement showing that from 1801 to 1810, when the Government had just emerged from the domination of Great Britain and was in its swaddling clothes, the expenditures for naval purposes were 1½ mills on the dollar of the property of the United States. From 1811 to 1820 they were 2¼ mills on the dollar of the property of the United States. From 1820 to 1830 they were 1½ mills. From 1830 to 1840 they were 1¼ mills, and so on; and the average for the whole century, from 1800 to 1900, was 1½ mills on the dollar of the property of this country. The present bill necessitates only eighty-five one-hundredths of 1 mill upon the property of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take over ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks that his time be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I prefer not to be interrupted, as I have only ten minutes. Now, Mr. Chairman, it appears that the naval expenditures carried by this bill are now only about three-quarters of a mill on the dollar of the property of this country. And yet the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] stood up here yesterday and said it involved the taxing of $7 upon every family in the country. Nothing could be farther from the facts than that. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who claims that the increase of the American Navy is a departure from the fundamental and traditional policies of the Government, to the message of President Monroe in 1824, who said, speaking of the Navy:

The Navy is the arm from which our Government will always derive most aid in the support of our * * * rights. Every power engaged in war will know the strength of our naval power, the number of our ships of each class, their condition, and the promptitude with which we may bring them into service, and will pay due consideration to that argument.

Now, he knew what counts in time of trouble with foreign powers. President Monroe was not in favor of the Quaker policy of disarming because we had a high moral sentiment in this country, relying upon the same to exist in the Orient and in other countries of the world, and you gentlemen know it.

Why do you not join with us and build up the American Navy? I apprehend there will be no dissensions upon this side of the Chamber upon that question. We are in the majority, Mr. Chairman. We have installed a Republican Executive and a Republican Secretary of the Navy. They recommend to us these appropriations. The President of the United States says in his annual message to this session of Congress:

I heartily congratulate the Congress upon the steady progress in building up the American Navy. We can not afford a letup in this great work. To stand still means to go back. There should be no pause in adding to the effective units of the fighting strength of the fleet. Moreover, as the Navy Department and the officers of the Navy are doing well their part in providing constant service at sea under conditions akin to those of actual warfare, our officers and enlisted men are learning by battle the battle ships, cruisers, and torpedo boats with high efficiency in fleet and squadron maneuvers, and the standard of marksmanship is being constantly raised. The best work ashore is indispensable, but the highest duty of a naval officer is to exercise command at sea.

The establishment of a naval base in the Philippines ought not to be longer postponed. Such a base is desirable in time of peace, but in time of war it would be indispensable, and its need would be imminent. Without it our fleet would be helpless. Our naval experts are agreed that Subig Bay is the proper place for the purpose. The national interests require that the work of fortification and development of a naval station at Subig Bay be begun at an early date, for under the best conditions it is a work which will consume much time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, personally I regard this as the most important feature of the whole bill. It makes no difference what the future policy of the United States shall be with relation to the holding of the Philippine Islands under this, that, or the other and the interests of the American people compelled us to stay there. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] But, Mr. Chairman, even from their point of view, they should join with us in building a naval station in the Philippines. I have never heard it contended by any Democratic authority in any platform or upon the stump by Democrats or by the Democratic party that even if we decided to abandon the Philippine Islands, if we sail away and leave them, but that we should retain there a naval station, fully equipped for the vessels of the United States and the great commerce of the United States which is growing now in the East.

Mr. Chairman, I have been glad to see the opinions brought out in this debate. I have been glad to see the Democratic party as a whole are willing to see, and that they stand up for the building up of the American Navy, and that with us they have been unable to lift up their voice against it: and I protest here that those who have do not represent the American people nor any section of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes. It has been stated that the appropriation asked for is one that will lead up to large cost, making in all $9,000,000. I want to read from the hearing of Admiral Dewey before the committee, in which he testifies as follows:

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Admiral, I think the last scheme submitted by the General Board and by the Department to the committee involved an expenditure of some $[illegible], if it was completed and carried to ultimate production. Now, is it not possible to put the rudiments of a coaling station there and have it properly defended—the coaling station and dry dock—for a much smaller sum than that?

Admiral DEWEY. I should think so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that ultimately, if we wanted to, we could extend it, but would still have a defensible post there, for a much smaller sum?

Admiral DEWEY. Yes; in my opinion it could be done as you say, for a much smaller sum.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that with an appropriation of a million dollars, say, we could get a defensible and practical base where a large squadron can come contrary to an ultimate expenditure of $[illegible] and if we decided to go no further with it we would still have something that could be defended and answer the present purpose?

Admiral DEWEY. I should say so. I think that this $800,000 does not include the defense of the station. That is for the Army to look after. In addition to what we have there at present, you know there are five of those destroyers, torpedo-boat destroyers, on the way. They will be useful.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. Do you anticipate, for present purposes, that it will be necessary to spend very much money to build accommodations for the workmen at Olongapo?

Admiral DEWEY. No, sir.

Now, as to Subig Bay.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman a question just there, as to that $800,000.

Mr. LOUD. Not at present. Now, as to Subig Bay. In our hearings it came out that the coal ships which take coal to the Philippines can get nowhere near Cavite Station. They have to anchor out a mile or more from the shore. The coal is taken from those transports on cascoes, small lighters, and is conveyed to the shore at Cavite and there taken out upon the dock and placed in piles, and when the war ships want the coal the coal is taken out on the cascoes again and floated to the war ships and there put on board. Admiral Dewey said in answer to this question put by myself:

Speaking on the subject of coaling ships, Admiral, to get the coal from the colliers that come from the United States, they must discharge first into cascoes and then upon the dock, and it makes double handling?

Admiral DEWEY. Yes; both ways.

Mr. LOUD. And that makes it very complicated and multiplies the work?

Admiral DEWEY. Yes, and it makes it very expensive. And by the time the coal gets into the bunkers of our ships it is mostly dust.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, I ask if it is impossible to get the colliers in there at Cavite Station, how is it possible to get war ships in there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What did you say about the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LOUD. Admiral Dewey stated it was impossible to get colliers in there, and they had to anchor a mile or more out, and the coal had to be taken by small boats to the shore and then back again. If that is so, how are you going to get battle ships in there if you can not get colliers in there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is where the Spanish ships were.

Mr. LOUD. Yes; but when the Spanish ships, sunk by our fleet, were resting on the bottom of Cavite Bay, their upper works were out of water, their holds merely filled, the decks just under water at high tide.

Just before the battle ended Admiral Dewey sent the little Petrel (800 tons), the only ship he dared to send into the shoal water, to destroy the small ships close in to Cavite Station.

The Olympia (5,870 tons, 21½ feet draft) could not get in to Cavite Station, and the Olympia is but one-third the size of the battle ships under discussion.

The Castilla (3,342 tons) was the largest Spanish ship, and there was not water enough under her to allow the ship to sink further than her deck line.

It is useless to maintain a naval station for our ships of all classes in these shallow waters at Cavite. Before any further expenditures are made there, for this and other reasons I believe this station should be transferred to Olongapo, in Subig Bay, where there is an abundant depth of water for ships of deepest draft.

On page 545 of same report Admiral Dewey said:

I would have enough battle ships to have a good, strong fleet here [United States], and one strong enough there also. It might save a war.

Again, same page, 545, Admiral Dewey said:

I think if we were to have forty-eight battle ships within the next twenty years, they [foreign nations] would let us alone.

Again, page 547, he says:

The possession of that fleet of ships would be a preventive of war.

I believe Admiral Dewey's statement that a navy of reasonable strength "might save a war," and that with such a navy foreign nations "would let us alone," and that "the possession of that fleet of ships would be a preventive of war" is right—not only because it is Admiral Dewey's opinion, but because it is amply demonstrated by history.

In the last half century there have been no naval wars in which nations having strong navies have taken part. England, France, Germany, and Russia have not been looking for war because of their naval strength. It is rather the price they have paid for peace. Our own naval weakness has in the past subjected us to imposition and attack. We are now respected for our strength; let us not be again despised for our weakness. A navy of reasonable power is, I believe, our best and only safeguard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to consolidate the several power plants in any or all of the several navy-yards and stations under the Bureau of Yards and Docks [illegible] the production and distribution of light, heat, and power for all the purposes of the Navy. To the above end all such plants may be transferred from other bureaus to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and all appropriations heretofore made for power houses and power plants for bureaus other than Yards and Docks are hereby reappropriated and made available under the Bureau of Yards and Docks for the consolidations herein provided for, and to further carry out the purposes of this provision there is hereby appropriated the sum of $250,000.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of this paragraph, on pages 35 and 36 of this bill, it is proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to consolidate the power plants in the several navy-yards of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a step in the right direction. It is estimated that we save by that one provision authorizing the consolidation of the power plants alone $250,000 a year. Now, I shall send to the Clerk's desk and ask that a substitute be adopted in lieu of this provision, giving the Secretary of the Navy general authority, whenever in his opinion he thinks it is necessary and economical to do so, to consolidate any and all of the bureaus at the navy-yards. I ask that the Clerk read the amendment I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of the paragraph after the word "dollar," in line 18 on page 35, to the word "and," in line 5, page 36, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to consolidate any or all of the several power, shops, and works of the several bureaus in the several navy-yards and stations at each navy-yard and station. To the above end all such plants, shops, and works may be transferred from one bureau to another or to the several bureaus at the several navy-yards as may be consolidated into one central bureau at each navy-yard and station, and all appropriations heretofore made for any bureau is hereby reappropriated and made available for the consolidation of the bureaus herein provided for."

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia reserves the point of order.

Mr. TATE. I think the point of order is too late. Mr. Chairman. This is an amendment to a paragraph in this bill. No point of order was made on this paragraph in the bill when it was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order was made as quickly as could be after the amendment was read.

Mr. TATE. But I understand, Mr. Chairman, the point of order is to my amendment, and not to the paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to consolidate the several bureaus in our navy-yards and stations. In most of our navy-yards the Bureau of Steam Engineering, the Bureau of Construction, the Bureau of Ordnance, the Bureau of Equipment, and the Bureau of Yards and Docks each have a separate and complete manufacturing establishment. What good business reason can there be given for the establishment under each of these bureaus of a power plant, a machine shop, a blacksmith shop, a foundry, a paint shop, etc.? Why should we duplicate our power plants, machine shops, and other shops in each of these bureaus in our navy-yards? There can, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, be no good reason for the enormous expense in duplicating these expensive plants and shops, when by consolidating them we would save to the people of this country annually not less than $5,000,000, and probably a much greater sum than this. Why not simplify this work by having one central power plant, one central machine shop, one central blacksmith shop, one central foundry, one central paint shop in each of our navy-yards?

The purpose of my amendment is to authorize the Secretary to make this consolidation. The amendment of the committee only authorizes the consolidation of the power plant, and, as I have before stated, that alone is a saving of $250,000 a year. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us adopt this amendment and authorize the Secretary to consolidate the other plants and shops. This consolidation is in the interest of economy, harmony, and good service. The present bureau system is cumbersome, extravagant, and productive of friction among our officers. No private business concern would be carried on for one day under the present wasteful bureau system now in force in our navy-yards. Why, Mr. Chairman, under the present bureau system you will find that these shops are often engaged in the same class of work. You will find a foreman or inspector in one of these shops supervising the making or manufacturing of a similar article to that being made at the same time in the shops of one or more of the other bureaus in the same navy-yards.

Under this system we must continue to erect, repair, and keep up all the numerous buildings and furnish all the machinery, tools, and supplies necessary to carry on all of these separate plants and shops in each of these numerous bureaus in our navy-yards. Sir, this multiplicity of plants and shops should not longer be tolerated by the representatives of the people. In this bureau system we have too much division of authority, too many chiefs that seem to show more interest in enlarging the jurisdiction of their bureaus and in extending their authority than in the economical administration of our navy-yards. The proposition to consolidate the power plant is an admission that he should also consolidate the other plants and shops, and thereby save this unnecessary expense of duplication that is now costing this country in every one of our navy-yards at least 25 per cent and, in my opinion, one-third more than it would cost under the consolidation I propose by this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to disagree with my colleague on the Naval Affairs Committee, for whose judgment I have great respect, but I want to say to the members of the committee, without entering into a discussion of the facts, that there are two or three reasons why we are not ready to take the step proposed by his amendment. In the first place, there is a very distinct and decided opinion against the view expressed by him that there would be any saving to the Navy Department by a consolidation of the mechanical departments. There is a very distinct and decided opinion in the Navy Department and among the experts that such a combination would be against the superior work we are now doing and against the efficiency of the shops; and there is also Mr. Chairman, a distinct and decided opinion that such a consolidation at this time would be impracticable.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. TATE. Is it not true that the Secretary of the Navy recommends a consolidation of the bureaus in his report?

Mr. DAYTON. I think not.

Mr. TATE. I will call the gentleman's attention to the language of the report.

Mr. DAYTON. The gentleman refers to Secretary Moody?

Mr. TATE. I do. He says:

[illegible] power and for work progressing therein. Second, consolidation of the bureaus in the Department.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to ask my friend if he is correct about that being a recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy; if, on the contrary, he is not making a request of the committee to investigate and determine these things?

Mr. TATE. This is the report of the Secretary of the Navy, November 23, 1903, and that is the language of the report.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, but I ask the gentleman, because I have not the report here, is that a recommendation by the Secretary? This is my recollection of it, that it is a request that we shall investigate and determine for ourselves these matters without his expressing his opinion about them.

Mr. TATE. If the gentleman asks me the direct question, I will answer it. The Secretary of the Navy, as I understand his position, is in favor of consolidating these bureaus. He is in favor of consolidating this work at the navy-yards; he is in favor of economizing at the navy-yards in every way he can. Let me ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question. If it is proper to give the Secretary of the Navy the discretion to consolidate the power plants at the navy-yards, why not enlarge that discretion and let him carry out the scheme of consolidation in whatever way he thinks will be for the benefit of the Government?

Mr. DAYTON. I will answer the gentleman in this way: I do not understand the position of the Secretary of the Navy to be that which the gentleman has stated. I have no question as to his sincerity and his belief as to the Secretary's position——

Mr. TATE. It is not a question of my statement; it is a question of the statement in the report.

Mr. DAYTON. If my colleague will allow me to close my statement, I do not understand that to be the position of the Secretary of the Navy, but, outside of that, I understand the position of our navy-yards to depend very largely upon the experts who have control and who are responsible for the work in the yards. Both of these provisions, Mr. Chairman, are contrary to existing law.

The point of order which I reserved, and which I feel compelled to make absolutely, certainly goes to the amendment proposed by my colleague on the committee. I want to say frankly that I want this consolidation to extend to the power, heat, and light plants, in order that we may determine the vexed question of whether or not such consolidation to a further extent will be advisable. Certain it is that it will require the expenditure of a much larger sum than we have provided for in this bill to make any such consolidation to any material extent.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HEPBURN). The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. It has been held that a paragraph which changes existing law, being allowed by general consent to remain, may be perfected by any germane amendment. If a point of order had been made to the original paragraph, the point would have been sustained, but by common consent it was retained in the bill. Therefore the Chair holds that this amendment, being germane, is not obnoxious to the rule. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this motion is exhausted.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary in his report recommended an investigation by the committee into certain matters, namely, alterations in the organization of navy-yards, which will increase the power and responsibility thereover and for work progressing thereunder; second, the consolidation of the bureaus in the Department; third, the creation of the general staff. But the Secretary nowhere that I can find recommends specifically the proposition pending here before the committee.

Mr. TATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I do.

Mr. TATE. The gentleman will find on page 5 of the Secretary's report the following language:

The proposal for changes may be classified as follows: First, alterations in the organization of the navy-yards, which will increase the power and responsibility thereover and for work progressing thereunder.

Mr. FOSS. The Secretary does state that language.

Mr. TATE. Well, then, he proposes the change.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no; the Secretary does not propose the change. The Secretary says proposals have been made, some by the general board, some, perchance, by the Bureau of Construction and other boards in the Navy Department, but he does not come out and say that he proposes the change. He says proposals have been made to him, and as a result of that he recommends that the committee investigate these different matters.

Mr. TATE. Then the gentleman admits that he asks us to investigate and act upon this proposal. I understand you admit that that is his position. Is that correct?

Mr. FOSS. He asks us to investigate these proposals, these three propositions——

Mr. TATE. In point of fact, did not Secretary Long recommend this same provision or something similar, and in point of fact, does the gentleman not know that the Secretary favored this consolidation?

Mr. FOSS. I know that Secretary Long favored the consolidation of the bureaus, and I introduced the bill for the consolidation of bureaus, but I am not prepared now, without a thorough investigation into the question, to say that these bureaus shall be consolidated.

Mr. TATE. One other question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I do.

Mr. TATE. Do I understand the gentleman to be afraid to place this discretion in the Secretary to act whenever he thinks proper upon this question? That is solely the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. FOSS. So far as the Secretary has gone at the present time in his recommendation, as I understand it, which is disclosed by the hearings, is that he is in favor of a consolidation as far as it affects power, heat, and light plants, and that we have done.

I do not understand that he has gone a single step further than that. Now I will say to my friend——

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: What possible objection can there be to vesting the power in the Secretary of the Navy at his discretion to consolidate these bureaus if he thinks it best to do so in the future? What objection can there be to giving him that discretion? I understand that is all the amendment proposes.

Mr. FOSS. I do not know that there is any particular objection one way or the other, except that before going into this matter we should like to investigate it. I think the committee ought to investigate—we have not done so—to see whether this measure would be wise or not.

Mr. TATE. What would you investigate? Would you investigate whether you were afraid to trust the Secretary of the Navy, or would you investigate the merits of the question itself?

Mr. FOSS. Under our law to-day the Secretary of the Navy has the power to distribute the work among the different bureaus as he may deem proper. He can minimize one bureau and magnify another. But I do not think it would be wise to go to the extent that the gentleman urges at this time.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE] a very important one. This matter has been investigated by the Committee on Naval Affairs. During the past summer, under an appropriation carried in an appropriation bill of one year ago, the Naval Committee went to the different navy-yards on the Atlantic coast and heard the statements of the commandants and other officers of the yards; and I call attention to the fact that without exception the commandant of every yard said that there ought to be a consolidation of the different plants in the yards.

I feel absolutely certain that the Secretary of the Navy is with us in this matter; but, as he stated in the hearings before the committee, he wants the authority of Congress. I say we ought to give it to him. If the Democratic party can trust the Secretary of the Navy with the discretion to consolidate the bureaus, surely the Republican party can trust him in this respect.

We have to lodge this discretion somewhere. We on this side are willing to lodge it with the Secretary of the Navy. I think this discretion ought to be given him, so that in the interest of economy he may consolidate these bureaus if he sees fit to do so.

What is the objection to this? It would bring about a readjustment of positions and a general shake up on some lines perhaps. I would not only authorize but instruct the Secretary to consolidate the same kind of plants in the several navy-yards whenever, in his judgment, it would promote efficiency, dispatch, and economy in the Government work.

I shall support with pleasure the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. It looks to efficient work in the navy-yards and it looks to economy. It will tend to reduce appropriations in the future for our many navy-yards. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. NORRIS. I call for the reading of the amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment of Mr. TATE was again read.

The question being taken.

The CHAIRMAN said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. DAYTON. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 77, noes 83.

Mr. TATE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TATE and Mr. FOSS were appointed.

The committee divided; and Mr. FOSS (for the tellers) reported ayes 100, noes 100.

Mr. TATE. That does not agree with my count. I counted 98 in the affirmative, and afterwards 3 others voted on that side, making 101 in the affirmative.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding between the tellers. I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be taken again by the tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia requests that the vote be taken again. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. The request should be first that the vote already taken be vacated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the proposition as the gentleman from West Virginia stated it. Is there objection to the request? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. The tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 105.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Plans and specifications for public works: For the preparation of plans and specifications for public works and for preliminary estimates required by section 3663, Revised Statutes, for public works, $10,000.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs a question about this paragraph, which I think must have crept into the bill by inadvertence.

The gentleman from Illinois, of course, recollects that last year, at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, the large appropriation, under increase of the Navy, for clerks, was done away with, and that this year, on the legislative bill, after conference with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS], that was changed and a specific appropriation was made for draftsmen, etc. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois if this really is not a mistake, if this is not reverting to the old practice, and is not changing what we agreed upon this year on the legislative bill?

Mr. FOSS. In reply to the gentleman I would state that when the Secretary of the Navy was before the committee I asked him this question:

The CHAIRMAN. I understand in the legislative bill these are certain performances [illegible] for clerks, for draftsmen, and I would like to have you tell us, Mr. Secretary, how far-reaching it is, and how it affects our bill, if at all.

Secretary MOODY. I do not see how it affects your bill at all. The reform instituted at the last session grew out of a condition which may be illustrated by the appropriation for the "increase of the Navy." Under a law of several years ago it was provided that clerks, draftsmen, and three or four other classes of employees should be employed out of the appropriation for "increase of the Navy," but that the reports made to Congress on the subject before this legislative bill was reported, and which should show, all the money appropriated for "increase of Navy" might be employed for clerk hire. There is no limit on it. The Appropriations Committee took up a good many that we had employed under that provision of law and appropriated for them specifically and then placed a limit upon the amount that could be employed out of the general appropriation.

Now, I put that direct question to the Secretary, covering the particular points that the gentleman has brought up, and that is his answer.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman does not quite answer my question, because there was in the legislative bill a special paragraph which provided:

That the services of skilled draftsmen and such other technical services as the Secretary may deem necessary may be employed in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, etc.

I wanted to know if I was mistaken. It seemed to me that that covered this precise paragraph which the gentleman has here under the new arrangement that we made after consultation with the gentleman from Illinois. Now, why does not that paragraph in the legislative bill cover the very same purposes which this paragraph provides for? And if it does, of course it is superfluous to have it in here.

Mr. FOSS. As I understood it, the reform that the Committee on Appropriations were trying to institute was to prevent the employing of clerks under the increase of the Navy.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. That is not this item at all. Under the increase of the Navy we have had the power to employ clerks, but we have taken this out now, as I understand it, and have reduced the sum correspondingly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Now, I think the gentleman either does not see the scope of my question or possibly he does not recollect the hearing, which would be quite natural; but what was done in reference to the employment of clerks under the increase of the Navy was done after consultation with the gentleman, and of course it had his hearty concurrence.

Mr. FOSS. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The purpose was to prevent this general appropriation from being subject to this use and to have it specific. Now, this section which you have in here is, of course, a general appropriation and not specific. On the legislative bill we made a specific appropriation covering, it seems to me, exactly this clause. It said that the services of skilled draftsmen, etc., may be employed. Now, what I wish to ask is, Why does not that provision in the legislative bill cover this, and, therefore, why is this necessary? And, still more, why is not this a reversion to the old system, which the gentleman himself as well as the House desired to get rid of? It seems to me this is such a reversion, and I should like to ask the gentleman why it is not, and why the clause which I refer to in the legislative bill does not cover this exact purpose?

Mr. FOSS. I take it that in the legislative bill the Committee on Appropriations appropriated for the heads of the Departments and for the Department here in Washington. This appropriation, as I understand it, is for the yards and stations elsewhere.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If that is so, it is not intended to be employed in Washington?

Mr. FOSS. I do not understand so.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That would answer the question; but would it not be well, then, to put something in the bill to make that clear? Because otherwise it obviously is a repetition of an appropriation which has already been made.

The gentleman, it seems to me, would carry out the purpose he wishes, so as not to cover the appropriation the Secretary already has, if he would put in "outside of Washington."

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman, we have added the last clause, which was new legislation really, for plans and estimates required by section 3663 of the Revised Statutes, for public work. We have added there something that is new. That is to say, in that section of the Revised Statutes there is a requirement upon every bureau chief whenever he makes an estimate for public works of any kind or character that he shall present full estimates and plans before that work is authorized. That is an old, obsolete statute.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Which is never observed.

Mr. FOSS. And has never been observed. The committee thinks that it would be wise, that it would tend toward greater economy in the building up of these yards and making improvements, that we enforce that statute, so to speak, by making the small appropriation of $10,000. So there is an addition there that I do not think would apply to the gentleman's other point.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not wish to make any amendment myself. I simply wish to call the attention of the gentleman to it, because I know he agrees with me that this is carried on. I suggest to the gentleman that as that is his opinion, that he would conform to it if he would add, "to be employed outside of Washington." I leave that for him to determine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I do not know exactly what language to put in. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, I do not want to offer any amendment here. The gentleman and I agree perfectly upon the intent of the Secretary of the Navy, who administers the law, and who is absolutely in favor of this reform. He initiated it himself, and therefore I would rather leave it as it is, unless the gentleman desires to offer an amendment; and if he does, I will not object.

Mr. MUDD. My recollection in reading one of the hearings was that this work is not to be done outside of Washington, but to do work that for the last few years has not been done at all.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That only applies to $10,000 of it.

Mr. MUDD. They have not been carrying out the statute for years. I do not think there is a duplication of money in the legislative bill at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

In order to further improve the grounds at the Naval Academy and secure the best site for the naval hospital heretofore authorized and appropriated for, the removal of the cemetery from its present site to another to be selected is authorized and directed, and to this end the sum of $50,000 or so much as is necessary, to be immediately available, is authorized to be expended out of the $5,000,000 above appropriated.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 4, page 37, strike out the words "and directed," and insert after the word "authorized" the following words: "if the Secretary in his discretion shall deem advisable."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MUDD. I would like to be heard briefly on the amendment. The provision of the bill requires the removal of the cemetery of the Naval Academy, including, of course, the remains of all those who have been buried there. It is rather a gruesome proposition, and of doubtful wisdom and propriety, in my judgment, at all times, unless clearly required by the most urgent necessity. If I should follow my own views, I would move to strike out the paragraph; but as I did not happen to be present at the hearings upon this particular subject-matter and did not hear the reasons for it then set forth, I am not entirely familiar with the grounds upon which it is asked. The amendment that I offer goes only to the effect of making the removal discretionary with the Secretary instead of making it mandatory. It places the responsibility of whatever action may be taken in his hands, and while I can not now look upon the proposition with favor, I am willing to trust the judgment of the Secretary. I have submitted the amendment to the chairman of the committee, and also to the gentleman from West Virginia, who is the author of the provision in the bill, and I understand that it meets with their approval, or at least that they will make no objection to it.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the shore of Lake Michigan, south of latitude 42° 20', $250,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that provision of the bill on the ground that it is new legislation, in violation of clause 2 of Rule XXI. As it provides for a station where none exists, it is entirely new legislation. Mr. Chairman, in view of the extraordinary position in which that puts me before the House, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to explain my reason for making that point at this time, raising the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he be permitted time to explain his views upon this paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman wants to make an explanation about that, will he not modify his request that he hear a representative of the Naval Committee give his earnest request that he do not make the point. Will you not reserve it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will reserve the point of order, and ask unanimous consent that I may have an opportunity——

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the Chair is ready to rule upon this point, it seems to me that time is a little too valuable to spend in explaining anything about it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think, in view of the fact of the peculiar phraseology that there is in this provision of the bill, and that I live in and the people of my district have a site located within that zone, that I ought to be permitted to state the reasons why I raise the point of order against that provision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that he be permitted to explain his views upon this paragraph?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object, but I want to know whether the gentleman purposes to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not intend to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, can not I have more than five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. What time does the gentleman request?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will ask for ten minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the committee for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have spoken of the importance of the pending paragraph and of the peculiar position in which I am placed by raising the point of order against it. It reads as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the shore of Lake Michigan, south of latitude 42° 20', $250,000.

This paragraph is important in several respects. It is important because of the mere amount of money involved, the proposed initial expenditure being $250,000, and a much larger sum would be immediately necessary. One of the witnesses before the Committee on Naval Affairs said that $750,000 would be required to put the station in a condition of great efficiency. But even that sum does not include the amount necessary to construct a harbor at Lake Bluff. And that is what this paragraph means—the location of this station at Lake Bluff, in the district so ably represented by my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I dispute the proposition. The board has recommended——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the gentleman interrupt me for a question or for a speech?

Mr. FOSS. I want to explain that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me I will move, after I conclude, that the gentleman have unlimited time to reply to what I shall say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman desires to ask a question, I will answer as best I can any that he may choose to propound, but if he wishes to make a reply to my remarks, I submit that it will be proper for him to do so after I have concluded my statement.

I say this with all respect to the gentleman, and with no desire to make any accusation against him or any other person, but with the purpose, nevertheless, to acquaint the Members of the House with the facts. These facts demonstrate that, regardless of its phraseology, the pending paragraph means just what, a moment ago, I said that it means—that this naval training station shall be located at Lake Bluff, in the State of Illinois. The paragraph, on its face, seems to leave the Government a choice of six sites, including one at Racine, but in reality it does nothing of the kind. It can be demonstrated that it means Lake Bluff and nothing else.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I hope that is not the purpose of your objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire only that the Members of the House shall have the information necessary to enable them to understand what this paragraph means. This is an important matter——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. There are other sites outside of Lake Bluff.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (continuing). It had its origin in a law passed by Congress in July, 1902, which I will read:

"[illegible] Great Lakes. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby [illegible] to appoint a board composed of naval officers, whose duty it shall be to select [illegible]

And I beg the committee to observe that the language of this statute is mandatory, not discretionary—shall be to select on the Great Lakes a suitable site for an additional naval training station and having selected such site [illegible] upon private lands to cede [illegible] as may be necessary, as near as practicable to the time fixed for which it may be necessary, at a reasonable cost of their proceedings and recommendations [illegible] report to the Secretary of the Navy [illegible] report. [illegible] to Congress [illegible] and to define the compensation of said board the sum of $[illegible] or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be [illegible] appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This statute did not request this board, in its discretion, to select or not to select a site. It declared that the duty of the board "shall be to select a site." In effect, it commanded the board to select a site. And it did more. In effect, it required the board to select a site before making a report. The language is plain—

Where [illegible] to select a site, * * * and having selected such site * * * make full and detailed report—

The words "having selected such site" in this statute are here [illegible] meaning, which is that the board was to select a site before making its report. Congress knew, when it passed that law, that if there were to be such a station on one of the Great Lakes it must act at once upon the necessary appropriations, and Congress therefore commanded the board to select a site and tell all about it before asking for money to pay for it.

On the 10th of July, 1902, almost two years ago, a board of three was appointed under this mandatory statute to select a site, and "having selected a site," to make a full and detailed report to the Secretary of the Navy of their proceedings. Several sites were offered on each of the Great Lakes. On Lake Michigan, for example, there were a number of sites offered, including one at Lake Bluff, Michigan City, Muskegon, Milwaukee, Racine, and Racine.

On the 6th of August, 1902, the board [illegible] Racine. On that day I met the board at Racine, and [illegible] with a committee of citizens, we visited the site [illegible] After the inspection I accompanied the board on its special train to Racine, 10 miles distant. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] was also on the train.

On reaching Racine a committee of the Business Men's Association and other citizens were waiting with carriages. The board drove to the hotel and then started for Wind Point. On [illegible] a point near the city limits the board left the carriages and [illegible] standing on the beach of the lake looked across the bay [illegible] at Wind Point, at an distance from [illegible] miles, and at the time on that day the [illegible] lack of time and because the board [illegible] to inspect the site and [illegible] to see it. This fact was [illegible] later.

On October 31, 1902, the board made its second and last visit to Racine. [illegible] was [illegible] only [illegible] inspecting the site. They were then driven across the site, but it was too dark to see at all well, and the return trip was immediately begun. One month later, on November 29, 1902, the board made a report, in which it was set forth that they had not selected a site, and that in the opinion of the board Congress ought first to vote $250,000 to purchase a site on Lake Michigan south of 43° 30', to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, which, of course, meant to be selected by the board.

Thus before the board had selected a site as required by the law under which they were appointed, before they had submitted the estimate required by the law, and before Congress was furnished any information on which it could base intelligent action, it was asked to appropriate a quarter of a million of dollars to buy a site of which it knew absolutely nothing. The proposed appropriation came before the House in February a year ago in the naval appropriation bill and went out on a point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have all the time that he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may have time to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Illinois and also to the committee.

Mr. Chairman, report was rendered on the 29th of November, 1902. Congress met a few days later, on the first Monday in December.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The regular session.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That was the regular session, as the gentleman from Maine now admits. [Laughter.] That entire session passed away, but the board made no further report. The session ended on the 4th of March, 1903. April, May, June, July, August, September, and October, 1903, passed, and still no final report. They were appointed July 5, 1902, to select a site and report in detail concerning it, yet there was no final report until November, 1903—seventeen months after the date of their appointment, and a year after their first report.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman let me call his attention to a fact?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the itinerary on page 15 of the first report, showing each day [illegible] was [illegible] at Chicago, on the 31st of August, and all through August and part of October and November; this shows where the committee was.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I admit that. But all that was in 1902; the months I have mentioned were in 1903. I am quite familiar with the itinerary. I have read it a number of times in the [illegible] what I have said. They were at Racine on the 4th day of August and the 31st of October, 1902, and at no other time.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I thought the gentleman was expressing great surprise [illegible] not get this [illegible]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Oh, no. [illegible] was [illegible] a site [illegible] and until they [illegible] by the law and absolute [illegible]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. [illegible] gentleman [illegible] to the [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman [illegible] I think [illegible] to see it. [illegible] at [illegible] to [illegible] on the proposed naval training station?

Mr. [illegible]

I w[illegible]

M[illegible] its w[illegible]

Mr. [illegible] say [illegible] within a mile and a half of the site.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. The first time?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The first time.

Mr. FOSS. And yet the gentleman was there to show them the site. Did the gentleman ask them to go there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One of the committee informed the board that there were, I think, from 100 to 300 acres to be had at Wind Point, and that the land was all admirably suited to the purposes of such a site. He said: "You can see one side or edge of it from here. The Government can get it for about $250 an acre, and we can give you that in a very short time." The members of the board said: "We can see from here the general outline. We are pressed for time now, but we will be back in this vicinity again to inspect this site." Everybody seemed to understand that this visit was merely preliminary, as the board had not time that day to make an inspection.

Mr. FOSS. Was anyone else present on that occasion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; about a half dozen gentlemen, citizens of Racine.

Mr. FOSS. And the gentleman was there to meet them, to take them out for the express purpose of showing them the site?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rode up with them and the committee of business men.

Mr. FOSS. And the gentleman did not take them to the site because he says they did not want to go and see the site?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; not that. They said that they were in a hurry. They had a special train and announced to us that they would come back at a later day to inspect this site. In this connection permit me to read from the letter to which I referred a moment ago:

In explanation as to the reason why, in our opinion, the naval examining board did not give Racine first place in every respect is due to the fact that Admiral Taylor and the other members of the board who visited Racine in August, 1902, did not get nearer than 1½ miles of the site because of lack of time. They were simply driven to the north city limits and had a view of the location 1½ miles across the bay lying between Racine and Wind Point, and, further, that on the second visit Admiral Taylor was not present at all. Rear-Admiral M. R. Winslow, commander of the United States Navy, and H. H. Rousseau, junior member and recorder of the board, arrived at the proposed site after lights had been lit in the farmhouses surrounding the site, and therefore could make but a superficial examination. Then our understanding here at Racine was that when the choice should be narrowed down to a few of the best sites that we should have another visit from the committee, who would make a careful examination. No such visit was made.

Mr. DAYTON. Do I understand the gentleman to favor the erection of a training station on Lake Michigan or at some point in the Northwest? I do, do I not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do favor the location of such a station on Lake Michigan.

Mr. DAYTON. Then what objection would the gentleman have to an amendment authorizing the site to be hereafter determined by a body that might be entirely impartial?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have prepared an amendment, which I propose to offer at the proper time, providing for the appointment of a new board.

Mr. Chairman, up to the time Congress assembled in special session last November this board had made only one report, and that one was dated November 29, 1902. On the 11th of November last—that is, November, 1903—after Congress convened in special session, the Secretary of the Navy sent to Congress a letter, in which he said:

I have the honor now to transmit a copy of the final report of the board, in which Lake Bluff, 32 miles from Chicago, is recommended as the most suitable site for a naval training station.

Then he adds:

In view of the large price at which land at that point is held by the owners, the board suggests four other sites as suitable which, in the order of their desirability, are as follows: Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, and Michigan City.

Now, what were the prices at which land was obtainable at these places when the first report was made—the report in which Congress was first asked for a lump-sum appropriation of $250,000? Milwaukee, $700 per acre; Racine, $250; Michigan City, $125; Muskegon, $100, and Lake Bluff, $900 per acre. And the prices were the same at the date of the final report. All the long delay did no good so far as prices are concerned.

But—

Says the commission, and so says the Secretary of the Navy—in view of the high price at which this land is held at Lake Bluff the commission recommends other sites within that particular zone.

That reads as if Muskegon, Milwaukee, Racine, and Michigan City were all to be further considered; and yet, sir, as I have said, an analysis of the evidence demonstrates that the pending paragraph of this bill means Lake Bluff, and absolutely nothing but Lake Bluff.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] denied that statement when I made it a few minutes ago. Let us, therefore, look a little further into the facts which go to prove its truth or its falsity. On the 5th of last month (January, 1904) Admiral Taylor, the senior member of the board, testified before the Committee on Naval Affairs. I read from the printed report of the hearings:

Admiral TAYLOR. Our first report was in that region I have mentioned. We were then permitted by the Secretary ——

Mr. RIXEY. How much of the coast of Lake Michigan does that include?

Admiral TAYLOR. That includes southern Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, and Michigan.

Mr. RIXEY. How many miles?

Admiral TAYLOR. About 250 miles

Mr. RIXEY. Have you come to any more definite conclusion than that as to locality?

Admiral TAYLOR. Yes, sir; by the order of our Secretary two or three months ago we selected the best of sites in that region.

He says that two or three months ago, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, the board selected the best of sites in that region. "Two or three months ago" was about the time their final report was presented, yet nearly two years ago Congress by law required the board to select a site, make estimates, and report in detail.

Admiral Taylor further said:

Admiral TAYLOR. Two, sir, have been especially thought of by the board. One is within a mile or two of Racine, known as Windy Point, Wisconsin. The other is a point called Lake Bluff, a few miles south of Waukegan, in the northern part of Illinois.

Mr. RIXEY. Did your board decide as between these two points?

Admiral TAYLOR. The board, as I say, mentioned No. 1——

Mr. RIXEY. Has it mentioned any one first?

Admiral TAYLOR. I have forgotten whether we named them in the order of merit. Those are the two points, however.

Mr. RIXEY. Did your board decide as between the two?

Admiral TAYLOR. I do not remember, sir. I remember saying these two, but I do not remember that we said which of these two.

Mr. RIXEY. Would there be any objection to your stating your selection between the two?

Admiral TAYLOR. I believe they are equal.

Here we have the senior member of the board saying that he had forgotten whether they reported a first choice. My own judgment is that Admiral Taylor was too busy to give this matter much attention.

Mr. RIXEY. Did your board decide as between the two?

Admiral TAYLOR. I do not remember, sir. I remember saying these two, but I do not remember that we said which of these two.

Is it not remarkable that he should so soon forget whether the board had decided between Lake Bluff and Racine, or whether they really had a first choice? This portion of his testimony would seem to indicate that, owing to the multiplicity of his duties, he had very little, or nothing, to do with the preparation of the report. He had not only forgotten whether the board had reported a first choice, but he gave it as his own opinion that the sites at Racine and at Lake Bluff are of equal merit.

Mr. RIXEY. Would there be any objection to your stating your selection between the two?

Admiral TAYLOR. I believe they are equal.

Here, then, according to the opinion then expressed of the senior member of the board, were two sites of equal merit, one at Racine, at $250 per acre, the other at Lake Bluff, at $900 per acre; yet the board in their report declare that their first choice is Lake Bluff. Admiral Taylor, later, during his testimony——

Mr. FOSS. I hope the gentleman will be entirely fair.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I hope——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] is out of order unless he addresses the Chair.

Mr. FOSS. I addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I trust that the gentleman from Illinois will permit me to continue reading from this testimony. I do not wish him just at this point to inject something which might tend to make it appear that I am attempting to conceal the truth by not reading all that I ought to read.

I was just going to read what the gentleman himself was about to read.

A little later the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asked Admiral Taylor:

What does it cost to get enough land there to start this naval station?

Admiral TAYLOR. Roughly, it is $250,000.

Mr. BUTLER. How many acres will you get?

Before answering this question it is evident, from his reply, that Admiral Taylor had been given a copy of the final report. In some places he closely follows its language.

Admiral TAYLOR. Two hundred acres, at $1,000 an acre, at one point. The Racine locality, which we thought well of, was $250; Milwaukee, $700, and the Lake Bluff locality was $900. This board found that after rating the five it liked particularly, including Muskegon, on the other side of the lake, as one, and rating them according to population, physical characteristics, harbor facilities, and cost of land, in which they gave the first choice to Lake Bluff for population, for physical characteristics, and to Muskegon for cost of land, and so on, the following summary was reached: First choice, Lake Bluff; second choice, Racine; third choice, Muskegon; fourth choice, Milwaukee; fifth choice, Michigan City.

This answer is full of details. But at first Admiral Taylor could not remember even whether the board had made a first choice. In this connection it is interesting to observe in his last answer that he says, "they," not we, but "they gave the first choice to Lake Bluff." He had shortly before testified that he himself thought Racine and Lake Bluff equal. The board also ask an appropriation of $250,000. Admiral Taylor says that sum will buy 200 acres at one point. People have told me that it would cost hundreds of thousands, perhaps a million of dollars, to construct a good, well-protected harbor at Lake Bluff.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. At Lake Bluff?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. How many acres will you get?

Admiral TAYLOR. Two hundred acres of a thousand dollars an acre, at one point. The Racine property, which we thought well of, was $250; Milwaukee, $[illegible]; and the Lake Bluff property was $[illegible].

And yet, notwithstanding this difference in cost, they did not in their first report make a selection, but distinctly refused to make one. When they made that report $[illegible] an acre was too much, but now they are willing to buy a site at that rate per acre and to appropriate the money for it, although one of the board testified that the Racine site is the equal of the one at Lake Bluff, and can be bought for about one-fourth as much money.

The money of the people of the United States is a trust fund. We are the trustees. We have no more right to squander it, no more right to vote it out of the Treasury without knowing for what we vote than a guardian has to fritter away the money of his ward.

What is the reason—the great, controlling reason—why they gave the first choice to Lake Bluff? It is, says the board, the fact that Lake Bluff is nearer to the center of population. Nearer to the center of population! Racine is situated on Lake Michigan between Chicago and Milwaukee. These two cities are only 83 miles apart. A distinguished man recently declared that fifty years from now there will be practically one continuous city from Chicago to Milwaukee. This will not be doubted by any person familiar with present conditions and with the rapid and constant development in progress.

Racine is only thirty minutes from Milwaukee. Milwaukee is a very enterprising and rapidly growing city. Its tonnage in and out last year was greater than that of Chicago. It has a population of more than 300,000 people. Chicago contains 2,000,000 inhabitants. Racine and Lake Bluff are between these two great centers, but the board gave the choice to Lake Bluff because it is nearer to the center of population! Two hundred acres at Racine would be $50,000. Two hundred acres at Lake Bluff $180,000. But Lake Bluff is nearer the center of population!

Lake Bluff station is 32 miles from Chicago, and Racine station is 28 miles farther along on the same line of railroad—28 miles farther from Chicago—too far from the center of population! Lake Bluff can be reached only on this single line of railroad, the Chicago and Northwestern, while Racine is accessible by the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway systems, and also by two lines of steamers stopping regularly each way on their daily trips between Chicago and Milwaukee, but it is too far from the center of population!

Mr. Chairman, the board, in their report, acknowledge themselves to be under obligations to various persons for services, advice, and counsel.

Among these is Professor Walcott, the head of the United States Geological Survey. I have ascertained within the last week that notwithstanding this great delay in the selection of a site, notwithstanding the fact that in their first report they did not name a site because prices were too high, but instead asked for a sum to be appropriated, and that the selection be made after the appropriation—notwithstanding all of these things, the board had a site surveyed before they made their first report.

Who made the surveys? The experts of the United States Geological Survey. What site was surveyed? The Lake Bluff site, the one the board now recommends. It was not an ordinary survey, but a topographical survey, and the board have had it in their possession for more than a year. As I said, it was made before they submitted their first report. The expert who helped make it informed me that it was made in November, 1902, and that the survey of this site and one other, both at Lake Bluff, were the only ones made by the Geological Survey at the request of the board. These were not ordinary surveys to establish metes and bounds. They were topographical surveys by Government experts.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman mean to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FOSS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me. Does the gentleman mean to say that there were no surveys or plans or anything of the other sites whatever?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The man in the office of the Geological Survey told me that in November, 1902, a member of the board requested his office to make topographical surveys or two of the Lake Bluff sites, and that they were made during that month. I said, "Did you make any other?" and he replied, "No others were made from this office."

Mr. FOSS. That is another question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit an interruption?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman from Illinois himself know that the board had other surveys made? Can the gentleman from Illinois mention any other survey made by the Geological Survey for this board?

Mr. FOSS. I will answer that question later.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to get permission of the gentleman from Wisconsin to interrupt him for a moment. Would the gentleman object to the committee rising now, and then go on with this to-morrow morning?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let the committee rise now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Some of us are getting tired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I reserve my right to proceed to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves his time.

Mr. FOSS. I do not like to adjourn to-night without saying one word——

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 24, 1904.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the agricultural appropriation bill, House bill 11825, be now proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11825) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 14, line 8.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the head of "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 14, line 11, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry from $4,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 4, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Bureau of Plant Industry, from $62,980 to $63,430.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 20, before the word

"scientific," to strike out "and student;" and in the same line, after the word "aids," to strike out "at an annual salary of $480 each;" so as to read:

To study and find methods for preventing the algal and other contaminations of water supplies; the employment of investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, scientific aids, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 1, after the word "laboratory," to insert "for the erection of necessary greenhouses, not to exceed $2,000;" and in line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $2,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

For telegraph and telephone service; for gas and electric current; purchase of chemicals and apparatus required in the field and laboratory; for the erection of necessary greenhouses, not to exceed $2,000; necessary traveling expenses for express and freight charges, the preparation of reports and publications; the rent and repairs of a laboratory not to exceed $[illegible] per annum; necessary furniture, fixtures and supplies, and for other necessary expenses; the personal work of the investigations, $[illegible], of which sum $[illegible] shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 17, before the word "scientific," to strike out "student;" and in the same line, after the word "aids," to strike out "at an annual salary of $480 each;" so as to read:

Pomological investigations: Investigating, collecting, and disseminating information relating to the fruit industry; the publication and distribution of [illegible] and specimens; and for collecting and mounting fruits, vegetables, and other plants and performing [illegible] labor in the experimental gardens of the United States, as far as [illegible] practicable; the hire of laborers, investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, scientific aids, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington, and elsewhere, etc.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether these investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and scientific aids are in the classified service?

Mr. PROCTOR. I think the majority of them are not. The clerks are in the classified service.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose a majority are not. I should like to inquire how it is that this Department gets the opportunity for the employment of so many employees at salaries which are not specified, without having been appointed under the classified service, when I think no other Department has that privilege?

Mr. PROCTOR. That is very true, but it has always been so from the beginning. The work of the Department is such that it requires at certain periods and for certain purposes, temporarily and not constantly, a much larger force than is required for constant service. It would be impossible to classify all the help of the Department. The attempt has been made, I believe, by the committees of both Houses—it has always been urged as fully as can be—that they should be brought within the classified service. The question has always been up at every meeting of the committee I have attended, and many of them have been brought in that were not so a few years ago.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose the real reason for it, then, is that the Agricultural Department gets everything it asks for and the other Departments can not. I suppose that is the real explanation.

I was led to make the inquiry from the fact that a somewhat similar institution, doing somewhat similar work, except so far as it has been taken away from them, the Smithsonian Institution, can not get anybody, from a scientific aid to a laborer, appointed except through the classified service.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it will be borne in mind that the work of the Agricultural Department is in great part at special times, when certain crops are in certain stages of growth. That is one of the reasons, and generally, perhaps, that is the principal reason, why the work is not even and regular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 18, line 15, before the word "vegetables," to strike out "and," and in the same line, after the word "vegetables," to insert "packages and packing material;" so as to read:

For the purpose of increasing the exportation of American fruits and vegetables, and for all necessary expenses connected with the practical work of the same, and such fruits, vegetables, packages, and packing material as are needed for these investigations and experimental shipments may be bought in open market and disposed of at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to apply the moneys received from the sales of such fruits and vegetables toward the continuation and repetition of these investigations and experimental shipments etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 3, to increase the appropriation for pomological investigations from $40,000 to $47,000; in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "twelve;" and in line 6, after the word "for," to strike out "studying the nature of Anaheim, and other diseases of vines, and for ascertaining the best means for protecting vineyards against their ravages," and insert "determining the adaptability of various grape stocks to the different soil and climatic conditions of the Pacific coast and their resistance to disease;" so as to read:

"To investigate, map, and report upon the commercial fruit diseases of the United States, for the purpose of determining the relative adaptability of the several important fruits thereon, by a study of the conditions of soil and climate, and of the prevalence of fungal diseases, so far as related to commercial fruit production, $47,000, $20,000 of which sum, in the discretion of the Secretary, may be applied in cooperation with the experiment station of the State of California for determining the adaptability of various grape stocks to the different soil and climatic conditions of the Pacific coast and their resistance to disease."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 22, before the word "scientific," to strike out "and student;" and in the same line, after the word "aids," to strike out "at an annual salary of $480 each;" so as to read:

Botanical investigations and experiments: Investigations relating to medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other economic plants, seeds, and weeds; the [illegible] of plants, including expenses, and express and freight charges, and necessary other expenses, the purchase of paper and [illegible] supplies, [illegible] apparatus, for rent and [illegible] for office and laboratory purposes, not to exceed $[illegible] for gas and electric current; for telegraph and telephone service; for the employment of investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, scientific aids, and other labor in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 18, to increase the appropriation for botanical investigations and experiments from $65,000 to $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 21, to insert:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to examine and report upon the nature, quality, and condition of samples of seed and grain submitted to him for that purpose; to sample, examine, and certify the character and condition of samples and cargoes of seed and grain upon request of the owner; to fix and collect fees for such services and apply the money so received to the support of his work.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order against that amendment. Without regard to the point as to this provision being estimated for, I make the point of order that it is a new provision: that it is general legislation; that it confers upon the Secretary of Agriculture an entirely new power; that it authorizes him to takes fees and apply them to this work, which, under the law, ought to go into the Treasury. Without argumenting upon it, I call the attention of the Chair to the point. In my own mind I have no doubt whatever about it; and so I wish to raise the point of order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It ought to go out.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it seems to me that that provision is precisely in the line of what we have been legislating in every agricultural appropriation bill. Provisions for the examination of seeds and the investigation of varieties of cereals have been inserted in our agricultural appropriation bills every year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I will call attention to the fact that it is not only the examination but the certification as to "the nature, quality, and condition of samples of seed and grain submitted to him [the Secretary] for that purpose." That struck my attention the moment the Secretary read it. It is perfectly apparent to every person who observed and listened what the possible and probable effect of such certification would be.

Mr. HALE. I will not debate the general proposition; but what the Senator from Indiana says is very true. It would be a certification, which may be used for exploiting and for advertising purposes, and one which the Secretary now has no right to make.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on the question of order, but will hear the Senator from Vermont if he desires to be heard.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not care to discuss the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no question that the amendment is general legislation; it would not expire with the bill itself, and, being general legislation, it is clearly out of order.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 21, line 21, before the word "scientific," to strike out "and;" in the same line, before the word "aids," to strike out "student;" in the same line, after the word "aids," to strike out "at an annual salary of $480 each;" and in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

Grass and forage-plant investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations of grasses, forage plants, and animal foods in cooperation with other divisions of the Department; to collect and purchase seeds, roots, and specimens of valuable economic grasses and forage plants for investigation; experimental cultivation and distribution, and for experiments and reports upon the best methods of extirpating Johnson and other noxious and destructive grasses; to purchase tools, all necessary office fixtures, materials, apparatus and supplies; to pay freight, express charges, and incidental expenses for telegraph and telephone service for gas and electric light; and for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, experts, and other aids required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere; rent and repairs of a building not to exceed $[illegible] per annum; to prepare drawings and illustrations for circulars, reports, and bulletins, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 14, to increase the appropriation for grass and forage-plant investigations from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 10, to insert:

For the removal and reconstruction of the greenhouses on the Department grounds in order to accommodate the new buildings for the Department, $[illegible] to be expended by authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 16, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance of the experimental farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate, in the State of Virginia, from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if by the provision in relation to the Arlington experimental farm it is intended to devote the Arlington estate to the purposes of such a farm, and if so, to what extent? It seems to me that if the Government wants to establish an experimental farm station, it would be better to buy land somewhere else and not destroy that property over there.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I understand the part used by the Department of Agriculture is what is below the Arlington road, down next to the river, entirely east or north of the Arlington estate proper. It is low land that is in a very bad condition.

Mr. TELLER. If that is the fact, perhaps it will not mar the property.

Mr. PROCTOR. No; it will improve it greatly.

Mr. TELLER. I could not tell the location of the farm from the description in the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, while we are on that clause I should like to know just what is meant by the language on page 24, line 3, where reference is made to a former act, in which I suppose the same thing has occurred. What is meant by the language:

To enable it [illegible] Secretary of Agriculture and his successors jurisdiction over so much of the Government land in Alexandria County, Va., known as the Arlington estate as the need of the public may require.

What is the jurisdiction conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I understand it to be that, whereas all of these lands are under the special care of the Secretary of War, for this purpose the care of this portion of that land is to be transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there no Department of the Government which the Secretary of Agriculture is not permitted to invade?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have no knowledge on this subject except in a general way. It seems there is a lot on the Arlington estate which is lying like a kind of an old field, which is somewhat necessary object, but it is very valuable land, being close to the city here, which is available for this use, and is being used for nothing now. Congress, in the original act which set apart the Arlington estate, expressly conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture and his successors jurisdiction over a part of that land. I have not the act before me, but I suppose it conferred the right and power upon that Department to utilize this land in the way provided for; and this is a provision which specifies the boundaries of the new agricultural experimental station. It leaves all the woodland of the cemetery and all the rest of the estate which can possibly be used for its present purpose—as a national burying ground—untouched and undisturbed. The adoption of this provision will really be beautifying the Arlington estate, instead of leaving there in a state of nature a lot of land covered with weeds and brambles and bushes.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the clause making appropriations "for tea-culture investigations," from line 17 to line 25, inclusive, on page 24.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, though it is out of order at this time to move an amendment to the clause which has just been read, I suggest to the chairman of the committee, if I forget to move the amendment, that he ought to strike out the word "making," before the word "tea," on line 20, and insert the word "producing." It now reads, "the cost of making tea."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that is a definite thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, let it go. I will call it up again.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 25, line 4, before the word "building," to strike out "rent of" and insert "repairs of present seed;" in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" and in line 13, after the word "amount," to strike out "not more than $48,000 shall be expended for labor in the city of Washington, D. C., and;" so as to make the clause read:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; for repairs of present seed building, not to exceed $7,500; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, gas, and other incidentals; traveling expenses, actual necessary transportation and repairs for packing up and distributing the same, and to be distributed as heretofore, a report to be made to the next session of Congress, an amount not less than $[illegible] shall be tabulated for Congressional distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 20, after the word "bulbs," to insert "trees;" on page 26, line 3, before the word "of," to strike out "and no more;" and in the same line, after the word "bulbs," to insert "trees;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the purchase, testing and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, including the employment of persons and the purchase of such material as may be necessary for the same, and such as may be required for experiments in various parts of the country, and such other purposes as may be deemed advisable by the Secretary of Agriculture in the execution of the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, and for the purchase of such other seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants as may be required for experiments with reference to their introduction into this country of "Bureau of Forestry," on page 30, line 10, to increase the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Forestry, from $[illegible] to $112,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Bureau of Forestry from $400,140 to $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Chemistry," on page 31, line 24, after the word "advisable," to insert "and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable," so as to read:

To investigate the adulteration of foods, condiments, beverages, and drugs when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable, and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 17 on page 33.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill is being read for action on committee amendments, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Committee amendments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And after they are disposed of the bill will be open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether this investigation of "the adulteration of foods, condiments, beverages, or drugs," whenever the Secretary shall deem advisable, will cover the [illegible] of meat and vegetables and fish—kept in cold storage? I have been informed that if kept too long meats and fish and the like become poisonous, and that many people lose their lives from consuming cold-storage products. I think if you call for a beefsteak in almost any city in the East you will find that it has lost the element of freshness; that it has been kept in cold storage too long. It has been neglected and lain there for many months, perhaps more, for years.

I have had a little experience with that. I do not know that many people have been murdered by it, but the use of meat kept too long in cold storage has made a good many men sick.

This investigation, if it can go to that point, I think would be very useful to the country. I should insert after "when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable" the words "and the effects of cold storage"——

Mr. ALLISON. "And also"——

Mr. STEWART. "And also the effect of cold storage."

Mr. GALLINGER. "Upon meats."

Mr. STEWART. The effect upon meats and vegetables and anything kept in cold storage. The effect upon food products.

Mr. TILLMAN. The effect on the health.

Mr. STEWART. The effect of cold storage upon the health.

And also the effect of cold storage upon the health.

I would leave out the words "when deemed * * * advisable." They are unnecessary, because that would say he might do it or might not. Strike out "when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable" and insert "and also the effect upon the health of the cold storage of food products."

Mr. TILLMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that "when deemed advisable" applies only to the publication.

Mr. STEWART. It ought to be published. If he finds that it is injurious, the people ought to be put on guard.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do you suppose he would do that without any order? Else we had better abolish him.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think it is necessary to leave that in. I think it ought to be published. I think that should be stricken out.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have no objection to the amendment, but I would suggest to the Senator that this matter of pure-food legislation is before the Senate in a measure which came from the other House, and they have adopted in preparing that bill this provision. This is only one of its many provisions. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is familiar with that matter. I think the other provisions of that measure, which has already passed the House, covers this whole question.

Mr. STEWART. Probably so, if it passes. But we have no guaranty that that bill will pass, and we are providing for investigations by the chemical force of the Department of Agriculture of adulterations of food products. One of the principal adulterations is keeping them a long time in cold storage. That is a decided adulteration, and it is certainly germane. I do not care whether or not you strike out anything if you insert after "advisable" the words—

Also the effect upon the health of cold-storage food products.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Nevada repeat his proposed amendment?

Mr. TILLMAN. "On the healthfulness of food."

Mr. STEWART. "And also the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of food." That will do.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 23.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me this matter is covered by the provision of the bill on page 32. Will the Senator read the provision at the top of the thirty-second page?

Mr. STEWART. The thirty-second page?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes. I think he will find——

Mr. STEWART. That refers to coloring matter and added substances.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; food preservatives.

Mr. STEWART. Food preservatives?

Mr. ALDRICH. Cold storage is a food preservative, I think.

Mr. STEWART. Not [illegible] is a matter of [illegible].

Mr. TILLMAN. Salicylic acid, or something like that.

Mr. STEWART. Yes. That refers to another matter altogether.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 24, after the word "advisable," it is proposed to insert:

And also the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods.

Mr. STEWART. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was [illegible] in order when it was offered, and this case [illegible] a precedent. The [illegible].

Mr. STEWART. I suppose it can be waived for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 34, line 22, to increase the appropriation for carrying on the investigations in connection with the Bureau of Animal Industry [illegible] and of the [illegible], and of the [illegible], from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it in order at this time to move to strike out this provision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To strike out a provision in the House bill?

Mr. ALLISON. A provision in the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not under the unanimous consent given, which was [illegible] first be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. Then at a later time I will move to strike out this provision.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page [illegible], line 24, to increase the appropriation for the purchase and [illegible] of a new boiler in the Bureau of Chemistry from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 2, to increase the appropriation for investigations of the chemical and physical character of road materials from $10,000 to $15,000.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Bureau of Chemistry from $124,890 to $174,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Soils," on page 36, line 19, after the word "States," to strike out "in continental United States," so as to read:

For investigations of the soils of the United States, including the preparation of maps showing the results of such investigations, having due regard to the [illegible] and United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 5, to increase the appropriation for rent of buildings for office and laboratory purposes, Bureau of Soils, from $[illegible] per annum to $[illegible] per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 16, to increase the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Soils, from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of Bureau of Soils from $[illegible] to $47,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 21, before the word "of," to strike out "Division" and insert "Bureau;" in line 22, after the word "of," to strike out "division" and insert "bureau;" in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "three thousand five hundred;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out

"and for additional compensation while the office is held by the present incumbent, $500;" on page 38, line 1, after the word "of," to strike out "division" and insert "bureau," and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred and fifty" and insert "seven hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Entomology, salaries: One entomologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $2,500; one assistant entomologist, who shall be assistant chief of bureau, $1,800; one assistant entomologist or clerk, $1,600; one assistant entomologist or clerk, $1,400; two assistant entomologists or clerks, at $1,200 each, $2,400; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; in all, $12,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 10, after the word "expenses," to strike out "of entomological investigations" and insert "Bureau of Entomology;" in line 16, after the word "of," to strike out:

the codling moth and of the cotton-boll weevil and boll worm, with a view of ascertaining the best methods of their extermination; investigations in apiculture; investigations of the damage to forests and forest trees by insects.

And insert:

insects affecting field crops; investigations of the insects affecting small fruit and truck crops; forest and forest products and stored products; investigations of insects in relation to diseases of men and domestic animals and as animal parasites; miscellaneous insect investigations, including the introduction of beneficial insects; quarantine work, and the study of fungus and other diseases of insects; for the expenses of insect laboratory, collections, and experimental gardens; investigations in apiculture and in silk culture; investigations of insecticides and insecticide machinery.

So as to read:

General expenses, Bureau of Entomology: Promotion of economic entomology; investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture; ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious, including an investigation into the ravages of insects affecting field crops; investigations of the insects affecting small fruit and truck crops, forest and forest products and stored products; investigations of insects in relation to diseases of men and domestic animals and as animal parasites; miscellaneous insect investigations, including the introduction of beneficial insects, quarantine work, and the study of fungus and other diseases of insects; for the expenses of insect laboratory, collections, and experimental gardens; investigations in apiculture and in silk culture; investigations of insecticides and insecticide machinery, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 15, after the word "the," to strike out "Division" and insert "Bureau;" in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "$12,000 of which shall be immediately available, sixty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which amount not to exceed $10,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be expended for silk investigations;" so as to read:

Preparing, illustrating, and publishing the results of the work of the Bureau, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 20, after the word "for," to strike out "Division" and insert "Bureau," and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-nine hundred and fifty" and insert "eighty-seven thousand seven hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Mr. PROCTOR. I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out, in line 24, the words "who shall be chief of bureau."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 11, after the word "expenses," to strike out "of biological investigations" and insert "Bureau of Biological Survey," and on page 41, line 1, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "division" and insert "bureau;" so as to make the clause read:

General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey: For biological investigations, including the geographic distribution and migrations of animals, birds, and plants, and for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy, for an investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; for freight and express charges; for office fixtures and supplies, gas and electric current, telegraph and telephone services; for preparation and publication of reports, and for illustrations, field work, and traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the Bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 7, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to move or transport elk or other game animals presented to the Government or owned by it, and to fence, maintain, feed, and care for them on forest reserves or other public lands, $1,000, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that this sum, $1,000, is not enough to be of any benefit. It is so small that it does not seem to me to be sufficient.

Mr. PROCTOR. There was $1,000 appropriated last year that was not used because it was not sufficient. This they say will be sufficient.

Mr. TELLER. With the last year's appropriation?

Mr. PROCTOR. With the last year's appropriation. That is still available.

Mr. TELLER. I want to amend this amendment by inserting in the tenth line, after the word "owned," the words "or purchased." I do not suppose the Government will go into the purchasing of wild animals to any extent, but there are a few animals, like the mountain sheep or the mountain goat, that the Government does not have and that it might want to purchase. It would not amount to much.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was not proposed to go into the purchase of animals. There is a band of elks in the San Joaquin Valley of California different from any other elk, different from the mountain elk, and it is the only specimen of that species in existence. It was considered very desirable to preserve them. They belong to a firm, Miller & Lux, who have a large ranch and have cared for them, and they propose to present them to the Government. They do not wish to sell them or to have them destroyed, but they propose to present them to the Government, and there is a place in the Sequoia Reservation where the cliffs fence a good part of it. A little at each end will have to be fenced to keep them in. It will give them a good range and preserve a species of elk that would be exterminated otherwise.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to interfere with the purpose of the committee, for I appreciate their object, but it seems to me while they are about it they ought to extend it so as to bring in a few animals that are likely to become extinct in this country. One is the American moose and the other is the caribou. Of both of these, particularly the caribou, a few head can be purchased and put in the Yellowstone Park at a very reasonable rate. I do not know that I will move any amendment to this provision, but as long as the Government is in this line of business, it seems to me it would be well to consider that. If this amendment remains in in conference to be had on the bill, I should like to suggest to the chairman of the committee that they make a little extension, if they can do so.

Mr. TILLMAN. They will have to increase the money.

Mr. TELLER. You would have to increase the amount of money, as the Senator from South Carolina says. I am told that the Government can buy and put into the Yellowstone Park a few caribou at about $50 per head. In a few years there will not be a caribou outside of Alaska. There are a few to be had in the northeastern part of our country. I am told by Mr. Jones, who is one of the men in charge of the Yellowstone animals, that for $50 a head a few can be purchased and put in the park. I should like to see it done, but I do not want to interfere with the matter to the extent of making an amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think that is a matter for future consideration. I could deliver a lecture on the moose and caribou question from personal experience, but I do not think there is any occasion for it now.

Mr. TELLER. I shall be delighted to attend if the Senator will give me notice when he is to deliver his lecture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Colorado withdraws his proposed amendment?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I did when I heard the statement of the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 41, after the word "for," in line 13, to strike out "Division" and insert "Bureau," and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty thousand eight hundred and fifty" and insert "fifty-two thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Biological Survey, $92,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 19, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one assistant chief of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 2, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements, from $24,350 to $24,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 22, to increase the appropriation for collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics, compiling, writing, and illustrating statistical matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, special investigations and compilations, etc., from $120,500 to $132,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 13, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Statistics, from $187,060 to $197,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 15, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one librarian, from $1,300 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, library, from $10,000 to $10,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 5, to increase the appropriation for purchase of technical books of reference, technical papers, and technical periodicals necessary for the work of the Department, etc., from $10,000 to $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the library, Department of Agriculture, from $20,000 to $22,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

Agricultural experiment stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto," and to enforce the execution thereof, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I see that the estimate for the appropriation on page 49, line 6, provides for only $10,000, and the committee has inserted "fifteen" in lieu of "ten," making the amount $15,000. I suppose that this sum was the amount directed by the law quoted in this paragraph; or was that a mistake, and is the sum of $15,000 necessary?

Mr. PROCTOR. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before the committee and said that this amount is necessary. He said:

I estimated for $5,000 extra in that office. That is all the extra estimating I made for the whole office.

That is his testimony before the committee, taken by the stenographer. I think it was an additional estimate.

Mr. ALLISON. I only called attention to it because this is an appropriation that is provided for specifically by law. I can see that $5,000 additional might be necessary in Porto Rico, perhaps, or somewhere and I merely wanted to know why the estimate was increased $5,000. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator and the committee in providing ample sums for this purpose. I only asked the question by way of explanation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Miscellaneous," on page 49, in line 16, after the word "Congress," to strike out:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to coordinate the work of the several stations and the work of the stations with the Department of Agriculture to the end of preventing duplication of work, of increasing the efficiency of the stations and the Department of Agriculture, and of unify and systematize agricultural investigations in the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. This paragraph struck out by the committee seems to be a rather important one. I believe myself that it ought to be stricken out, but I think some information ought to be given why it was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have heard from a large number of the experiment stations, and several of the officers of experiment stations have been here from different States. They are under State control, and they claim that to coordinate the work of the stations would give an authority to the Secretary of Agriculture that they did not think proper. I proposed to them that it might be amended by using the word "cooperate" instead of "coordinate." There was satisfactory to the officials of the experiment stations, but they said, and so did the Secretary, that that authority exists now, and it therefore seemed best to the committee to strike it out.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will explain the matter a little more fully. On page 32 the present law and this proposed act provides that "the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in establishing and maintaining experimental grass stations, for determining the best methods of caring for and improving meadows and grazing lands," etc.

I have had a good deal of experience, and I am speaking now because I am connected with the experiment station in my State as one of the board of trustees. The words here that are stricken out, if left in, would simply destroy the local control of the stations and place the power in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture to direct their work.

It might be advisable and valuable to have cooperation and coordination, and to prevent duplication of work, but any Senator can very readily understand that the bulletins which would be then issued by the Agricultural Department would not reach the local clientage or clientèle, or the farmers, in any State so that they would be benefited thereby. We issue fifteen or twenty thousand bulletins in South Carolina covering the work that we are carrying on. Our farmers are interested in cotton. The farmers of Maine do not care anything about cotton. Suppose we should get a man in the Agricultural Department as Secretary who might be a theorist and undertake to say to the South Carolina experimental station people, "You must not do this work because some other State somewhere else is going to do it." You can very readily see that the use and benefit of the station locally would be destroyed absolutely.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I agree fully with what the Senator has said. Is not this matter working now very satisfactorily?

Mr. TILLMAN. Entirely so; and I do not see any use of enlarging the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to do more than to advise and superintend. He is already doing that, and as far as I know the stations are cooperating with the Department here. I think the committee of the Senate was very wise in striking out these words, and I hope they will see that the clause stays out.

Mr. PROCTOR. There was a general agreement upon the question that the clause should be stricken out, and that is entirely agreeable to the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 15, after the word "index," to insert "and this fund shall be available until used;" so as to read:

The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish to such institutions and stations as may apply for the same, and have complied with the requirements of the act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto," the publications of the Department of Agriculture, and may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper distribution of the same, and for the expenses of the preparation of the index, and the same shall be available until used, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 4, after the word "station us," to insert "and this fund shall be available until used;" and in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not more than $[illegible] may be expended for the maintenance of any one such station, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to use, out of the funds herein appropriated, not exceeding $[illegible] per annum in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, for the support of experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and the expenses of said stations, and this fund shall be available until used; in all, $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" and in line 15, after the word "practice," to insert "including the preparation and printing of charts, diagrams, photographs, and lantern slides for use in connection with lectures delivered at farmers' institutes;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That $10,000 of this sum shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare and report upon the organization and practices of farmers' institutes in the several states and territories and upon similar organizations in foreign countries, with special suggestions of plans and methods for the work of the Department of Agriculture in connection therewith, including the preparation and printing of charts, diagrams, photographs, and lantern slides for use in connection with lectures delivered at farmers' institutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for Agricultural experiment stations from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 22, after the word "drainage," to insert "and other agricultural purposes;" so as to read:

Irrigation and drainage investigations: To enable the Department of Agriculture to conduct investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in irrigation and drainage, and other agricultural purposes, and to publish the results of such investigations, experiments, and demonstrations, and to prepare and publish such other matter as may be necessary to the proper understanding of the subjects herein mentioned, and upon the practice of irrigation and drainage, and upon the use of different kinds of power and implements for irrigation, drainage, and other agricultural purposes, and for the preparation, publication, and distribution of reports and bulletins, or any of them, and for expenses incidental to the employment of labor in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, etc.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that under some unanimous-consent arrangement we are not allowed to move amendments now, but we must wait until the reading of the bill has been concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement was that Senators should wait until the committee amendments had been acted upon.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to move to amend that particular provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, in line 7, to increase the appropriation for irrigation and drainage investigations from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 13, after the word "experiments," to insert "and object lessons in road building;" in line 14, after the word "of," to insert "experts;" in line 17, after the word "experiments," to insert "and field work;" in line 19, after the word "apparatus," to insert "machinery," and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-five thousand" and insert "sixty-five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Public road inquiries: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make investigations and experiments in the improvement of road building, to test various materials for road making, to publish the results of such investigations, experiments, and tests in such form as may be deemed most advantageous, to employ such experts, clerks, and other assistants in the city of Washington and elsewhere as may be necessary, to purchase such office furniture, apparatus, and supplies, to purchase such road making machinery, and to make such road improvements as may be necessary in connection therewith, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Department of Agriculture from $5,711,340 to $6,072,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 37, line 22, after the word "entomologist," I move to strike out the words "who shall be chief of bureau."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. On page 33, I move to strike out commencing in line 18, all down to and including the word "package," in line 22, on page 34.

Mr. BACON. The amendment proposed by the Senator is so large in its scope that it is impossible for us to judge whether or not it should be stricken out without having the opportunity to read it or having it read from the desk. It covers more than a page.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 18, page 33, the following:

And the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason to believe that adulterated foods or beverages which are being imported from foreign countries or which have been imported and are held in bond or in transit, are of such character as to violate the provisions of law, shall inspect such foods or beverages, or cause the same to be inspected, at such place or places as he may deem most advantageous to the interests of the public health, and if upon such inspection or examination any such food or beverage is found to be adulterated, or to be so manufactured or prepared as to be injurious to the health of the people, he shall refuse permission to the importer, owner, or consignee thereof to deliver the same from the custody of the Treasury Department, and shall cause the same to be destroyed or redelivered to the importer, owner, or consignee thereof, upon the payment of all the expenses of such inspection, examination, and detention, and the cost of such destruction or redelivery, and the cost of the return of the same to the port from which imported, if such return be required by the Secretary of Agriculture; and if such food or beverage be found to be not adulterated, and not so manufactured or prepared as to be injurious to the health of the people, he shall permit the delivery of the same to the consignee thereof, upon the payment of all the expenses of such inspection, examination, and detention, and the cost of such delivery; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper execution of the provisions of this act, and to cause to be published from time to time such results of such inspections, examinations, and analyses as he may deem advantageous to the interests of the public health where in the Treasury Department to prevent these adulterated and injurious substances and foods from being imported, of course we do not want to duplicate the work, but if there does not exist somewhere the power it looks to me as though it ought to exist somewhere.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will read the act to the Senator. The second section of the act of August 30, 1890, commonly known as the "meat-inspection act," provides:

That it shall be unlawful to import into the United States any adulterated or unwholesome food or drug or any whole carcass, or part of any carcass, adulterated or mixed with any poisonous or noxious chemical, drug or other ingredient injurious to health. Any person who shall knowingly import into the United States any such adulterated food or drug or drink, knowing or having reasons to believe the same to be adulterated, etc.—

shall be liable to prosecution and upon conviction shall be fined and imprisoned. I will not stop to read the details.

The next section provides:

That any article designed for consumption as human food or drink, and any other article of the classes or description mentioned in this act, which shall be imported into the United States contrary to its provisions, shall be forfeited to the United States.

That is a provision for fine or imprisonment and for the forfeiture of the goods. The next section provides:

SEC. 4. That whenever the President is satisfied that there is good reason to believe that any importation is being made, or is about to be made, into the United States, from any foreign country, of any article used for human food or drink that is adulterated to an extent dangerous to the health or welfare of the people of the United States, or any of them, he may issue his proclamation suspending the importation of such articles from such country for such period of time as he may think necessary to prevent such importation, and during such period it shall be unlawful to import into the United States from the countries designated in the proclamation of the President any of the articles the importation of which is so suspended.

Now, that covers practically all the provisions of the act. Of course the execution of the existing law is left with the President of the United States and with the Treasury Department, which has the sole charge of importations into the United States. There is nothing in the provisions which have been read as to the Agricultural Department, except as to labor, but what is included in the existing law, the enforcement of which is left where it should be, with the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States. I submit that Congress has never given to an Executive Department or to a bureau of an Executive Department the right to exclude from importation into the United States goods of any description, depending upon the judgment of that bureau officer as to whether they should be excluded or not, and that is precisely what is done by this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the language in the present act is very much broader and more sweeping than the act of last year; but the general provisions, as the Senator from Vermont has stated, are the same, unless there is some bureau somewhere other than what is provided in the general provisions of the statute which the Senator has just read, which of course gives the power to the Secretary of the Treasury, but really does not give him any specific authority. It does not give him any policemen. There is not any specific inspector; there is no detective.

It looks to me like there might be some compromise arrangement made here, or some hedging about, which would enable the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department to do this work upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, and leave it to the report of the chemist for the Secretary to determine himself whether they ought to be excluded, instead of leaving it in the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to exclude it, in his judgment.

The words that are in that I object to (and the Senator has called attention to them) are contained on page 34, at line 11, and they are not in the previous act. That is all new legislation. I have the old act in my hand, and I have examined the two very closely to see where they correspond and where they disagree.

The new words are—in all cases where the examination conducted by the Secretary of Agriculture discloses any reason for believing that the products in question should be excluded.

Thus the Secretary of the Treasury must exclude them. I agree with the Senator that they ought to go out. There ought to be some provision here by which this chemical bureau would inspect and analyze and do everything else that the Secretary of the Treasury might want done in order to exclude adulterated products. We have considerable interest in this matter locally in one sense. As the letter just read by the Senator from Vermont shows, olive oil is one of the things which is habitually adulterated. We know in the South that our cotton-seed oil, after having been bought at about 55 cents a gallon, or something like that, is carried off to France and there they monkey with it a little and send it back to us and sell it for three or four dollars a gallon as olive oil.

It is like our California wines and other things. They take those, carry them abroad, where they manipulate them, and then import them as fine champagnes, and all that kind of thing.

I think the Senator from Vermont might have accomplished his purpose by striking out the words I have just quoted and using some language to amend the present law, so as to let the power rest in the Secretary of the Treasury to take the initiative and have the final judgment, and let the Department of Agriculture, through its chemical bureau, do the work as it has done its own. I suggest that to him as an arrangement that might be agreeable all around.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I think in the little time the Senator from South Carolina has had to examine this proposed change he has failed to catch the idea of it. I do not see that the bill makes any material change in the matter. The old law, beginning on page 7, reads:

The Secretary of Agriculture, for the purpose mentioned, giving notice to the owner or consignee of such articles, who may be present and have the right to introduce testimony before the secretary of Agriculture—

That is the present law. Now the following words are added: either in person or by attorney or by writing, in all cases where the examination conducted by the Secretary of Agriculture discloses any reason for believing that the products in question should be excluded.

After the word "excluded" there ought to be some punctuation: a semicolon, perhaps. Then the language is precisely that of the present law in regard to the Secretary refusing admission.

Mr. TILLMAN. But it leaves it in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture to decide what shall be excluded, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall then exclude such articles. That is the objection to this legislation. I think we ought to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury shall furnish samples, or that after the Secretary of Agriculture has obtained samples through the machinery provided he shall make his report to the Secretary of the Treasury, and leave it to him to determine whether the articles are to be excluded or not. He would exclude, of course, anything that would be injurious or unhealthful.

Mr. ALDRICH. In reply to the question asked me by the Senator from South Carolina as to what machinery the Secretary of the Treasury has for enforcing the existing law, I would say that he has an army of employees in every part of the United States: he has his special agents here and abroad, and he has his chemical laboratories, and it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce this law by his agencies, and not to call upon the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of the Treasury is constantly enforcing the existing law, and if he is not enforcing it he ought to be impeached.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me, is it not shown from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which has been read, that he rather approves of this method of running down vile adulterations and excluding them? I should agree with him entirely that those two gentlemen from Iowa, one in the Treasury Department and the other in the Department of Agriculture, might be depended on to look after our stomachs and not let us have these impure and improper food products, wines, oils, etc., foisted upon us, and they seem to agree to the present arrangement. I am only looking forward to the time when, as to the heads of these Departments, this brotherly agreement that now exists may not be continued. Therefore, I think we had better provide in the law that there shall be power in the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom it belongs, to do this duty, and that the Secretary of Agriculture may gather this information through the Bureau of Chemistry when asked to do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the Secretary of the Treasury being given the right to call upon the Secretary of Agriculture for all the assistance he may be able to give him in regard to the examination of any of these articles of food that may be proposed to be improperly imported into the United States, but this legislation goes much further than that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I object to. I object to the precedent which it establishes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to what I think is an error in his statement as to who enforces this law. Under the new provision this proposed law reads as follows:

The Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose mentioned, giving notice to the owner or consignee of such articles, who may be present and have the right to introduce testimony before the Secretary of Agriculture, either in person or by attorney or by writing, in all cases where the examination conducted by the Secretary of Agriculture discloses any reason for believing that the products in question should be excluded, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall then exclude such articles, or if any articles or groups of articles shall be found to be dangerous to health,

Who is it that enforces this law? The law simply provides that upon certain facts being established by the Secretary of Agriculture then the Secretary of the Treasury shall take those facts and enforce the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from North Dakota understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has any discretion in this matter?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know that the Secretary of the Treasury should have any discretion in the matter when the law determines what shall be sufficient evidence for him to act upon. When it has been developed from the evidence, the Secretary of Agriculture having established the fact, that certain goods are not salable or not of such a character as should be imported into the United States, it then becomes the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse the admission of such goods to the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. It confers discretion on the Secretary of the Treasury and provides that the examination shall be conducted by the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. McCUMBER. Should there be any discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse admission in case his own chemist had found that the goods are deleterious?

Mr. ALDRICH. He is bound under the law, if his own chemist has found that the goods were injurious, to commence a prosecution in the courts of the United States and to have punishment inflicted upon importers fraudulently importing such goods. He is bound to bring it to the attention of the President of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. He is bound to prohibit their introduction.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not under existing law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if he is not, under existing law, there is a very good and valid reason why this proposed law should be substituted for the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. The President of the United States, to whom all these great powers are intrusted, has the power, under existing law, to exclude such goods if he shall find they are injurious to the public health. The power is with him. It does not exist in any bureau of chemistry. That is a matter to be determined by the President of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. The power does not exist in the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department in this proposed law. All that is provided in this law is to determine whether or not goods are in such a condition as would prohibit their introduction into the United States under existing law. If they are such, then it becomes the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to prohibit their introduction.

I wish to state that I can see no difference whether the Secretary of Agriculture, through his chemical department, which is conceded to be possibly the best chemical bureau in any Department of the United States, determines this question for the action of the Secretary of the Treasury or whether it is done in an incomplete chemical bureau in his own Department. In either event the law fixes it as the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the law upon certain facts being established.

I [illegible] I am on my feet, where does this objection come from? Who objects to it? I do not think there has been a law upon the statute book in the last year that has been more beneficial to the public and which has received their approbation more strongly than has this particular section of the law as it has been enforced.

There is no great difference, Mr. President, between the old law and the one which is now proposed. The effect of both is practically the same. The importers in the United States, those who are affected directly by this, all of them seem to be in favor of it so far as I have heard.

I have here a few letters, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island. They are letters coming from importers in this country, directed to the Secretary of Agriculture, and they go even to the extent of thanking him for the assistance given to them in the purchase of goods and in excluding the character of goods which do not come up to our American standard as established by our previous laws.

Let us take the letter of Jordan Stabler Company, of Baltimore, large importers:

BALTIMORE, December 5, 1903.

Hon. JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

[illegible] Regarding the matter of the [illegible] wine, No. 2889, shipped from Bordeaux to us by Jules Merman & Co. last month, we have [illegible] the report of the wine [illegible] we do not wish to mislead [illegible] be the case, as we presume it must be if it has passed through Dr. Wiley's office—

There seems to be a great deal of confidence in the country generally in the office of Dr. Wiley—therefore we will not attempt to offer any other evidence, but would like a copy of your report to send to our shippers to satisfy them.

Very respectfully, yours,

JORDAN STABLER COMPANY.

I read this letter to the Senator simply to indicate to him that the importers of wines and other goods in the United States desire to be protected. Whatever may have been the previous law, it never has been enforced as it has been enforced in the last year.

Here is a letter from H. C. Newcomb, an importer, of Philadelphia:

PHILADELPHIA, December 19, 1903.

Hon. JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 15th instant in regard to the 2 barrels of Spanish olive oil imported from Seville, and which [illegible] the Bandwin test for sesame oil.

I thank you for the consideration shown and for releasing same under the circumstances.

These I was imported in good faith, but had you exacted a return of same to the [illegible] I would not have [illegible]

Desiring to know the real truth respecting these [illegible] I have written to the [illegible] the [illegible] time and were [illegible] to state. It [illegible] very pleased to regard [illegible] your Department to be used in bringing them for future [illegible] any opportunities of your [illegible] to do so [illegible]

My experience with your Department has been very satisfactory, and of such a character that I feel [illegible] to assist, rather than oppose, any investigations necessary [illegible]

Respectfully, yours,

H. C. NEWCOMB.

Mr. President, everyone knows that until this last law was passed, about a year ago, we received an amount of spurious articles, wines, olive oils, and everything of that kind. Possibly not more than a twentieth part of the wines imported into the United States were of the character designated.

Let us take the letter of S. J. Valk & Bro., of New York, which is as follows:

NEW YORK, October 29, 1903.

Hon. JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We [illegible] of your favor of October 28, and will say that, [illegible] that [illegible] we feel [illegible] and [illegible] or that of the New York Custom-house [illegible] proceed to reship the merchandise in question to Marseille, France.

Yours, very truly,

S. J. VALK.

I might read any number of letters all favoring the existing law or the law which has been enforced through the recommendation of this Bureau in the Department of Agriculture.

I have here the declaration that is used as a requirement by the Treasury Department of all shippers of these products, wines, etc., into the United States. I shall read just the heading of the declaration to show how falsely these statements are made and the great amount of adulterated articles which have heretofore escaped the detection of our custom-house officers and have entered into the goods of this country. Here is a declaration of a shipper of food products:

I, the undersigned, do solemnly and truly declare that I am the shipper of the merchandise herein described and described, and to set it consisted food products which contain a poisonous substance injurious to health. These food products were made in France and manufactured in France by us during the year [illegible] and are exported from Bordeaux and consigned to New York. [illegible] four [illegible] or possession, and are not of a character [illegible] or restriction [illegible] country where made or from which exported.

Then follows a long list containing wines, and perhaps other articles, amounting to many thousand dollars' worth, and yet every [illegible] is absolutely false. Not a single brand of those wines came from the country from which it is said to have been exported, not a single case or barrel of them was manufactured by the person who makes this statement, and not a single statement is true.

I have been furnished—and I have them here—by the Secretary of Agriculture for use in the Senate with a large number of these bills of lading, if I may call them by such a term, all of them showing false statements as to the place where the product is produced and as to their character. They are manufactured out of the cheapest wine basis as a rule, and never saw the section of France from which they are claimed to have been imported. They are colored and marked to correspond with some twenty or thirty different grades of wine, and yet all of them are made from the same particular basis.

I am satisfied that the importers of this country desire to be protected against counterfeits of this kind, and whatever has been the law heretofore, it certainly has never been enforced as it has been within the last year under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I regard the section under consideration as a very important section of this bill. I have not given so much attention as has the honorable Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the question of pure food, and therefore I have listened with a great deal of attention and interest to what he had to say about that subject. We all know, however, a good deal from observation and experience and from the testimony of others, of the general state of demoralization that has grown up in the trade in food products in the United States.

Our country is more helpless than any other country in the world, because we have a system of local government here and a system of interstate commerce which mutually paralyze one another in any local effort to deal with the question of pure food.

We have hardly a State in the Union that is able to enforce its own laws with respect to the rights and privileges of its own people, and therefore in the last ten years there has grown up in the country a conviction that the United States ought to take up the question of pure food exactly as the great countries of the Old World have done. Every one of them protects its people against the sale of adulterated and poisonous and mislabeled and fraudulent food products. Every nation in Europe has an effective system of supervision, and there is no country in the Old World that permits anybody to sell to its people articles the like of which we are trying to exclude under the provisions of this bill.

It is not a new jurisdiction, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has so well pointed out. It is an old statutory provision of Congress; and yet everybody knows that it has been almost a dead letter upon the statute books of the United States, and that year after year the people have been compelled to submit, many of them to the most serious results of the fraud involved in the importation of impure lard, adulterated, diluted, and otherwise deleterious articles of food sent here from other countries.

Fortunately we know with absolute certainty what the operation of this provision in the agricultural appropriation bill has been. It came into the agricultural appropriation law one year ago, and for the last six months it has been in operation. In that time the Department of Agriculture has investigated a large number of invoices suspected to be fraudulent under the provisions of this law.

Mr. ALLISON. Will my colleague allow me to correct him?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision to which the Senator refers appears first in the appropriation bill for 1900, and has been in effect ever since.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Very well. In the past six months the Department of Agriculture, under the provisions of the act of last year, has investigated a large number of these [illegible]. Fortunately the Department, under authority of law, has been able to follow these invoices from their places of shipment in other countries, and has been notified by our consuls, exercising a very useful function, in my judgment, of the departure of ships bearing these fraudulent importations. In the cases that have been investigated by the Department of Agriculture, [illegible] have been found to be fraudulent under the provisions of the act of last year.

Many of these were cases involving the importation of mislabeled, adulterated and otherwise impure meat products; wine adulterated with sulphur and a variety of other [illegible], making it marketable in any country of Europe, and left only the loaded on the only country in the world that has not had the moral energy to take care of the rights of its own people.

These cargoes came here; they were promptly investigated by the Bureau of Chemistry, certified under the provisions of the act of last year to be adulterated, promptly reported to the Secretary of the Treasury, and sent back not to the country from which they had come, but to some country even more helpless than we are in respect to such matters.

The Secretary of Agriculture has investigated fraudulent importations of meat products, especially sausages, manufactured out of all varieties of arsenicated meat, horse meat, and other varieties of refuse meat preserved by chemicals, and sent here to be sold under fraudulent pretenses in market places that are absolutely without protection.

These cargoes when they arrive here are already under suspicion. The Department of Agriculture knows who they are in Europe who send these things here, and when the cargoes arrive this suspicion leads the Department to immediately investigate the character of the shipment. They buy a sample; they examine it; they find out its exact character, and certify it to the Secretary of Agriculture. If it is all right, they pay for it and get their money back, so the Secretary informs me, by selling such goods at auction on the grounds of the Department of Agriculture. If they are not right, the goods are not confiscated but are directed to be reshipped and taken out of the country. They are not treated as our goods are treated in the great nations of continental Europe.

Sanitary decrees in central Europe seize whole cargoes of American food products. Food laws condemn them practically without a hearing, and have practically excluded from the great market places of the Old World our agricultural products.

If no question of public health at all were involved. I would be in favor of arming this Government with that weapon of retaliation—a notice to the countries of the Old World that we will not submit to the injurious advertisement of the healthful food products of the United States under mere sanitary decrees in the ports of Europe.

Therefore, in my judgment, this ought to stand, first as a protection to the public health. We know exactly how it has operated. There is not a merchant consignee of one of these fraudulent cargoes who has complained of the action of the Department of Agriculture; there is not a shipper from the Old World that has dared to take one of these cases—forty-nine in number—into the courts.

Our own merchants have thanked the Department of Agriculture for protecting them from an imposition against which they were unable to protect themselves, and these shippers in Europe have waked up to the fact that at last we have in the United States an effective mechanism to prevent the unloading of these fraudulent articles upon our market places.

I am not alarmed about the growth of the power of the Secretary of Agriculture. I am one of those who believe that the Secretary deals with the largest single commercial interest the American people have, and I confess that I have listened with some degree of irritation to the complaints about the expenditures and the waste of money in that great Department when I know that the entire appropriation for the maintenance of all the great bureaus of the Department of Agriculture put together do not equal the cost of a single battle ship that we will provide for by act of Congress this year.

I feel, Mr. President, that the Secretary of Agriculture should be given the largest possible measure of discretion, not only in forwarding the legitimate agricultural interests of our people here, but in doing what this act authorizes him to do, in protecting our commerce against fraudulent imposition by the outlawed and outcast merchants of other countries, who, having been driven out of the market places of their own countries, have for years taken advantage of our helpless situation to palm off on us articles not only fraudulent in character, but injurious to the health and to the lives of the people of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the fact that the criticism as to the undue power conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture in this proposed law is, I think, a misconstruction of the language.

There is but one power conferred upon the Department of Agriculture, and that is to determine whether any article, upon being analyzed, has been found to be injurious to health. If that fact is reported to the Secretary of the Treasury, then the Secretary of the Treasury is under obligation to accept that as a conclusive finding of fact.

I have said—but the Senator's attention was diverted at the time—that the only power conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture by this bill is to determine, for the benefit and information of the Secretary of the Treasury, when any article has been analyzed and found to be dangerous to health. Whenever that is done——

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I will yield to him in a moment.

Whenever that is done the law makes it imperative upon the Secretary of the Treasury to accept that as a conclusive finding of fact and to act upon it. But so far as the other provisions in this proposed law are concerned, they are not confided to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, but are still within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury. I will read it and see. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] correctly stated that after the word "excluded," in the fourteenth line, there should possibly be a semicolon, and the sentence would be complete if it began there. I will read the language:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall refuse delivery to the consignee of any such article, and cause the same to be destroyed or shipped out of the country, if the same be found to be adulterated, or misbranded, or to have been imported in violation of the laws of the United States, or to be in violation of any law of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or of any foreign country, or shipped or consigned in violation of law; and he shall also exclude and prevent the importation of any such article which shall be found to be in violation of any law of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or of any foreign country, or which shall be Leaving out the word "and" makes a complete sentence. He shall refuse to deliver. He does not confiscate. He does not take the title to the property. He simply leaves it in the hands of the party who has attempted to perpetrate the fraud.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two in reference to these provisions. The provision upon the subject of the importation of goods injurious to health was first inserted in the act reported by me for the year 1890. It applied then only substantially to what was already provided for in the Revised Statutes, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, but it provided an additional method whereby the facts could be ascertained.

Now, here is the statute of 1890 as it was passed, approved the 1st of March, 1890. That was the first time the Secretary of Agriculture was required to deal with this subject, and it provides, without reading what precedes—

And the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason—

I would be glad if Senators would turn to the phraseology of the bill before us and compare it with this phraseology—

And the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason to believe that articles are being imported from foreign countries which, by reason of such adulteration, are dangerous to the health of the people of the United States, or which are forbidden to be sold or restricted in sale in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported, or which shall be falsely labeled in any respect in regard to the place of manufacture or the contents of the package, shall make a request upon the Secretary of the Treasury for samples of the original packages of such articles for inspection and analysis; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to open such original packages, etc.

That was the law of 1890, and it was mandatory, as this law is mandatory, upon the Secretary of the Treasury. It is not at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, but when the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to him that a particular article is dangerous to health, then we made it his duty to exclude it. It was a law. When that took place, then the importation should be prohibited. It may be said that it was a rigorous provision upon importers, but it is no more rigorous than many other provisions found in our tariff law. The statute which the Senator from Rhode Island read provides that the goods thus found to be injurious to health shall be forfeited. So that really this is a broader provision in one sense than that, because under the statute as it shows here by Senators who have debated the question, the imported goods which are injurious to health may be reexported to more favored countries where the government is not examining the goods with a view to the health of the people.

So in 1890 we began this legislation. I remember it very well. It was after Germany—this is a historical statement—and other countries had passed the most rigid legislation as respects the adulteration of articles imported from our own country. They had issued rescripts or prohibitions against importations from our country in many cases. It was believed by our officers, without reason, that the goods thus exported were in fact goods which were not in any form or in any respect adulterated. A cry came up from our exporters that if the governments in Europe to whom we were selling products should undertake to exclude those goods upon false statements or inspections, we had only to retaliate by also providing that in our country we would inspect their imports and would treat them as they were treating ours. So that came into the law of 1890. It has appeared in varied form in every agricultural appropriation bill from that time till now.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the varied form and the complete change in the structure and purpose of the legislation that I object to.

Mr. ALLISON. What I want to try to do, if I can, is to see—the forms have been changed, of course—whether the changes have been detrimental to our interests and injurious to our foreign commerce.

I have here now the legislation of 1902; that is, the law passed in 1901, upon this very subject, which is almost a literal following of the law of 1890. In fact, I believe it is in the exact phraseology of the law of 1890.

But I want to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that in all these cases where these facts were found it was made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury: and I think the Senator from Georgia made a very good criticism as respects the punctuation. After this examination and investigation by the Department of Agriculture in all these laws there is a semicolon, so as to separate what the Secretary of Agriculture is to do from what the Secretary of the Treasury shall do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does he think the Secretary of the Treasury ought to have a discretion, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, in regard to all these matters except such as are injurious to the public health? If so, there is no difference whatever between us. If the Senator from Georgia is correct—and I understand his interpretation has the approval of the Senator from Iowa—if it is made plain so that the ordinary man who reads can understand it, there will be no further discussion upon this question.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island will make no objection to the phraseology of this bill if a semicolon is inserted?

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no: not a semicolon.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will proceed, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Iowa is contending that except in cases where the public health is involved the discretion or the judgment ought to be lodged in the Secretary of the Treasury and not in the Secretary of Agriculture, there is no difference between him and me on this question.

Mr. ALLISON. I will allow the Senator from Rhode Island, as well as he can, and I know he can do it well, to ascertain the differences that exist between himself and myself upon this subject after I shall have completed what I am about to say.

I proceed to the act of 1903, which is substantially the act of 1890 and the act of 1901 and the act of 1903. Now I come to the act of 1904, which is the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. Nineteen hundred and three.

Mr. ALLISON. I have already mentioned the act of 1903. I want to say a word in respect to it—

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to suggest, as the Senator from Rhode Island says he is satisfied if that can be made clear, that if after the word "which," at the end of the line, he will insert the words "the Secretary of the Treasury shall find" it will make it complete and beyond doubt? Then it would read thus:

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. BACON. It is only a suggestion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Where is the word?

Mr. BACON. At the end of line 17, after the word "which," insert "the Secretary of the Treasury shall find."

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BACON. That will make it clear beyond the possibility of a doubt.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That harmonizes it.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 17, after the word "health?"

Mr. BACON. After the word "which," at the end of the line, insert "the Secretary of the Treasury shall find." That makes it clear beyond the possibility of a doubt.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, that makes it clear.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to that. It will obviate my objection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That produces harmony.

Mr. ALLISON. I will probably agree with the Senator later on, but I want to say that these criticisms as respects the investigation by the Secretary of Agriculture are criticisms that are made not only against this bill, but against laws which have been in operation for five years, giving him the same authority—

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. ALLISON. As respects public health.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. If my friends will have the patience they usually have, I will endeavor to understand their criticisms, and I hope they will understand my position, if I can make it clear. In what I am now saying I am replying to the suggestion that the Secretary of Agriculture had no right to intrust himself into this question of the chemical analysis of foods; that the Secretary of the Treasury ought to deal with this question; and I wanted to justify the action of the Secretary of Agriculture by showing that this duty has been imposed upon him for many years.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator does not assume that I have criticised the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I know he is a good man: I know he is from a great State; and I know he has made a great reputation for himself and has performed good service for the country. I have not ventured to criticise him.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think I suggested that the Senator from Rhode Island criticised him, though, as he disclaims it, I fear he may have misunderstood me to have applied my remarks to him.

Now, in 1904 there was introduced into the statutes a new provision.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This year?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation act for 1904, the current year, under which whatever money there is is now being expended for this purpose.

The Secretary of Agriculture—

I fall again into the same paragraph—

The Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason to believe that articles are being imported from foreign countries which, by reason of such adulteration, are dangerous to the health of the people of the United States, or which are forbidden to be sold or restricted in sale in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported.

That is to say, if he has reason to believe that articles are being imported here, the sale of which is prohibited in other countries, then he can examine the packages just as well as if they are deleterious to health. They may not be injurious to health, but if they are prohibited at home, this country shall not become the dumping ground of such products—

Or which shall be falsely labeled in any respect in regard to the place of manufacture or the contents of the package.

Therefore these new elements were introduced in the act of 1904, under which the Secretary of Agriculture is now acting.

Now, it is the question for us to consider whether or not we shall add to these provisions—I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will understand me—which prohibit the importation of articles deleterious to health, articles which are forbidden to be sold in the country of manufacture or production; whether we shall or shall not say somewhere——

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to that at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Whether we shall not say somewhere in our statutes—and I understand the Senator from Rhode Island agrees with me—that if any country that trades with us shall prohibit the sale of any particular article in the country of production, we shall also say to that country, "We will not allow it to be imported into and sold in ours."

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Does he think the Secretary of the Treasury is incompetent to decide whether such a prohibition takes place in a foreign country?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts anticipates.

Mr. LODGE. I thought you had reached that point.

Mr. ALLISON. I had not quite reached it. I will reach it in a moment. I will read what this current law of 1904 also provides. I will read the whole clause in its connection:

Are dangerous to the health of the people of the United States, or which are forbidden to be sold or restricted in sale in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported, or which shall be falsely labeled in any respect in regard to the place of manufacture of the contents of the package, shall make a request upon the Secretary of the Treasury for samples of the original packages of such articles for inspection and analysis; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to open such original packages, etc.

And then there is provision for the introduction of testimony:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall refuse delivery to the consignee of any such goods which the Secretary of Agriculture reports to him have been inspected and analyzed and found to be dangerous to health, or which are forbidden to be sold or restricted in sale in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported, or which shall be falsely labeled in any respect.

So that practically this is the existing law upon those various points, except that in the phraseology of this bill it is provided that there shall be added to "falsely labeled" the words "or incompletely labeled." I think those words ought to go out.

Mr. PROCTOR. They have gone out.

Mr. ALLISON. They have gone out.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; they have not gone out.

Mr. ALLISON. The words "or incompletely," I say, should go out of the bill, and I understand that they have already been eliminated by an amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee.

Now, there is another provision here which I suppose to be inserted for the benefit of those who import the articles that are inhibited by this statute, because all these laws require the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture to allow the people who are thus charged with violating the law to be present by counsel and with witnesses. This proposed law modifies the provision of the law for 1904 by a provision in lines 10 to 14, inclusive, which says:

The Secretary of Agriculture * * * who may be present and have the right to introduce testimony——

Mr. ALDRICH. That is in the act for 1904.

Mr. ALLISON. It is in the act for 1904.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is in all the acts.

Mr. ALLISON. It was in all the acts, but now this is changed so that he may appear "by attorney or by writing"——

Mr. ALDRICH. The word "attorney" is not in the bill before me.

Mr. ALLISON (reading)—

In all cases where the examination conducted by the Secretary of Agriculture discloses any reason for believing that the products in question shall be excluded.

That is to say, it enlarges the opportunity of the people who are charged with violating the law to appear.

It is a question now, and that is what we have reached, whether these facts being found, the articles thus imported shall be prohibited. I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Georgia think that the Secretary of the Treasury should be the final arbiter as respects this question, and to that I certainly have no objection. I certainly am willing that he shall review, if you think the Secretary of Agriculture in his examination will not truthfully and carefully make a proper inspection, for instance, of the article in regard to health, and if you want also to protect the violator of the law by requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to pass upon the subject, I am certainly willing that both of them shall have that power. They are both constituents of mine.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rather object to the Senator's last phrase, because the question whether a man has violated the law in a label, for instance, upon goods, is not a question of agricultural products, it is not a question affecting public health.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a question affecting the personal safety of individuals. Is the question whether a person has put the right kind of a label on a case of woolen goods or a case of cotton goods one to be determined finally by a clerk in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why should it not be left to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is held responsible for administration, if anybody is to be held responsible?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly: I say I do not object to that, and I accept the criticism of the Senator also that it is not quite fair to say that this applies only to goods that are so falsely imported by means of adulteration, etc. But it seems to me that in some way we ought to place the responsibility upon the Secretary of Agriculture to deal with the questions that affect the public health.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right. I have no objection to that. There is no objection to it on the part of anyone.

Mr. ALLISON. That runs through all this provision. Now, why do we give that power to the Secretary of Agriculture? It is because he has the machinery more effectively through the Bureau of Chemistry than even the Secretary of the Treasury has. The Secretary of the Treasury has the machinery to review at probably one or two ports. Therefore, the Secretary of Agriculture should have this authority.

Now, when it comes to a question of fact as respects false labeling, of course the customs officers or the officers of the Treasury can decide the question as well as the Secretary of Agriculture. But it is perfectly well known that most cases of false importations or of importations in violation of law relate to articles of consumption which are in the nature of things required to be put to a chemical test.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I interrupt the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to ask him what he supposes to have been the reason for introducing into this bill, after the word "articles," the words which do not exist in the present law, on page 33, line 19:

Or goods of any description.

What does he suppose was the necessity of that, or, if there be a necessity, how does it enlarge the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture? I supposed the word "articles" included everything.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does.

Mr. ALLISON. If I were to pass upon that question I should say that those are words of surplusage. Why they were inserted I do not know. I find them in the House bill. They came to us from that other great body which deals in the first instance with this great question. I suppose there was some reason perhaps for inserting them: I can conceive of none. The word "articles" includes everything.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the same process of enlargement that we are objecting to.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill will consent, for harmony, that those words may be excluded.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which proposes to insert certain words in line 17.

Mr. ALDRICH. The suggestion of the Senator from Georgia was to insert after the word "which," at the end of the seventeenth line, the words "the Secretary of the Treasury shall find;" so as to read:

Or which the Secretary of the Treasury shall find are forbidden entry—

Giving him the power of deciding those questions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It consolidates the power of final judgment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Leaving the question of health to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I see no objection to those words at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, however long this law, identical or in substance, may have been upon the statute books, its careful reading and this debate reveal a fundamental defect which some amendment here ought to remedy, and that defect is the diffusion of power instead of the concentration of it. It becomes very clear, as the discussion proceeds, that these laws have been beneficially effective because of the man behind the law, who is executing it, and not by virtue of the law itself. If the time should come when two men less intelligent and less harmonious should preside over, respectively, the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Agriculture, it is perfectly clear that the diffusion of authority between the two might produce a result which would render the operation of the whole law nugatory. I say it is clear that it has been the man behind the law, whose excellences everyone whose has spoken upon the question has referred to, who has rendered it effective.

The power which is described and conferred in this bill ought to be concentrated in some one. As it is, as was pointed out in my interpretation of the Senator from Georgia, it divides the things into three classes, in one of which the Secretary of Agriculture is the final authority, leaving no discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury, and in two others of which the final authority is in the Secretary of the Treasury without consulting the Secretary of Agriculture.

The very statement of that condition shows that only in the case of two very harmonious and very sensible men could the law produce the excellent results which it has thus far produced and which have been pointed out by the senior Senator from Iowa. So some amendment should be adopted here which would remedy this fundamental defect of the law.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there is a further thing collateral to this general principle. Not only does this defect, which is fundamental, occur in the law itself, upon the face of it, but it is produced by reason of prior legislation, the legislation of 1890, read by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If this law remains there should be a further amendment repealing the former law, because the two laws standing together may very well produce an inharmony of action which, as I said will render nugatory all beneficial results.

I do not know but that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia does remedy this defect and concentrate all the power. Certainly it should. Certainly there is not and can not be any difference of opinion here upon the great fundamental question, the health of the people, the welfare of the people of the country. We all agree with equal vigor and sincerity upon that great question.

I listened with entire sympathy to the reasoning, as I always listen with admiration to the rhetoric, of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], who presented that question with such great power a few moments ago. But that is not the question involved here. The question involved here is the effectiveness of the thing itself. If we scatter the power, and it remains scattered, we may defeat the very end which we hope to produce.

Now, whether the Senator from Georgia has suggested the right amendment to produce this necessary result of concentrating this power in some place and not dividing it among three or four Departments is a question for us to decide. I think, myself, he has.

In this connection it might be said, as we are going along and enlarging the power of these Departments—each enlargement necessary, each enlargement beneficial—there ought to be constant care that confusion is not produced.

We have a Department of Commerce, a Department of the Treasury, a Department of Agriculture, and the first thing we know, no matter how old this law is, we shall find powers which should reside in one Department partly placed there and partly in the other.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Georgia should prevail; and I further suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island, who first raised this question, whether if the law remains as it is, even with that amendment, there should not be a further amendment repealing the law of 1890. Otherwise the counteraction of the two laws may destroy the very result sought. I do not know what the Senator may think about that, but certainly both laws ought not to stand upon the statute book.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I merely rose to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I came in after this debate had begun, and perhaps I ought to know myself the answer to the question. Does the Senator understand that under the bill as it is now before the Senate, if an article of machinery comes from Germany to Boston to be used there, having nothing to do with public health or agriculture or food, but an article of cotton machinery, it is intended that the Secretary of Agriculture is to inquire whether that is falsely or incompletely labeled in any respect, either in regard to the place of manufacture or the contents of the package, and thereupon is to stop it?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think so. I will be glad to have the Senator tell me if he thinks so.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know. I said I came in after the debate had begun and was not informed.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think so.

Mr. HOAR. But let me read it:

and the Secretary of the Treasury shall refuse delivery to the consignee of any such goods—

The previous phrase to which such goods apply is "articles or goods"— which the Secretary of Agriculture reports to him have been inspected and analyzed and found to be dangerous to health—

That is No. 1. Now, No. 2—

or which—

Articles or goods of any kind—are forbidden entry or to be sold or are restricted in sale—

As articles or goods or any kind of machinery to be used in Boston—in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported—

Now, here is another clause—

or which—

Still covering machinery used in Boston with the rest—

shall be falsely or incompletely labeled in any respect in regard to the place of manufacture or the contents of the package.

I do not know, and therefore I wanted to ask the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the machine happened to have come from Germany originally and was labeled sent from Cuba, it might come clearly under the prohibition. We have reciprocal relations with Cuba.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose it comes from China, the Secretary of Agriculture is to inquire whether the statement that it was made in Hongkong or Fuchau is true, and thereupon stop it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts asks me to construe phraseology which I have no right to construe.

Mr. HOAR. But you reported it!

Mr. ALLISON. I did not. I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I beg pardon; that is true. If you had, such a question would not have been necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. Not having reported it and not being responsible for it, and most of the phraseology having come to us where these matters are thoroughly examined, it was perfectly natural that I should not place a critical eye upon this phraseology. Therefore I will say to the Senator, as I came in just a little before he entered the Chamber, and having been here a little longer than he, I have been endeavoring myself to explore this phraseology and see wherein it is defective and wherein the wisdom of the Senate, by the aid of all of us, severally, can improve this phraseology. We are helping the Senator from Vermont who has charge of the bill as best we can to so arrange the bill as that it will make good English at least and so that it will allow a cotton machine to be imported into Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator whether he has answered my question so thoroughly, may I ask him another?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no difficulty about the reporters getting this question as thoroughly.

Mr. HOAR. I will say, that the reporters may hear. I want to ask one other question. Does not the Senator himself, as he has been discoursing on it, think it is a little ridiculous as it stands?

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts first give me his opinion as to the phraseology?—which I infer is that it is rather inaccurate. It is not ridiculous. I will say to him that I think it needs amendment. I would not say that it was ridiculous, because that might be unkind to some other people who prepared the phraseology.

Mr. HOAR. I was very sure the Senator would not put it in that phrase, with his known excellent use of the English language.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that there may come under this provision a teapot made in China, and he rather indicates that this may be "pigeon English" from the same quarter. I want to say that that whole paragraph involves a good purpose. I am ready to admit that the English was not made in Boston, but it does embody the act of 1890, or of 1900, as the Senator from Iowa has said, and inserts a few words; and in putting in those middle words in the present bill much confusion has arisen.

It is urged and seems to be agreed that the Secretary of Agriculture has the equipment and that the Secretary of the Treasury has the original power in respect of enforcing the provision, and that there should be no confusion. That seems to be agreed. It was strongly stated by the Senator from Rhode Island and assented to by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Indiana.

Now, in the act of this and for 1904—

Mr. ALDRICH. That language appears first in the act making appropriations for the present year.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is true. In the midst of the language of the act for 1904 these words have been inserted:

In case the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury that the articles in question should be excluded, and shall give any reason for believing that the products in question are adulterated

That language is certainly intended to do a thing which the words do not fully accomplish. It is a little loose to begin with, to say that the Secretary of Agriculture—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The effect of those words, as I understand, is that the report can not be heard until the Secretary has practically decided the case against him.

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes. It is perfectly evident that the amendment which the Senator—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, at the end of line 14.

Mr. McCOMAS. The language was suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To complete the sentence.

Mr. McCOMAS. It was suggested to me. I suggested to the chairman of the committee that the provision be so amended as to read that if we agree that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make examination after the report shall be made to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the report of his examination shall be made to the Secretary of the Treasury. And that leaves the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, not "shall," but in his discretion, that the Secretary of the Treasury may do these things. I suggested that to the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, and I suggested that if he would strike out all the words after the word "writing," in line 11, down to the word "the Secretary," in line 14, and insert—and in all cases where the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury that the articles in question should be excluded.

Then the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, in the language of the Senator from Rhode Island, may refuse to deliver to the consignee. That makes the examination through the Department of Agriculture of the customs-entered goods. The present language is that if the report, after examination, "discloses any reason." There is no use to legislate here about reasons. The Secretary of Agriculture makes his report to the Secretary of the Treasury; and in this report he gives the analysis as shown by the examination.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has the Senator observed the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]?

Mr. McCOMAS. I have.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator think the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia reaches the precise point which the Senator's amendment touches?

Mr. McCOMAS. I do not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The report of the Secretary of Agriculture becomes a decision, which it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to act upon. So I thought, perhaps, the Senator had considered the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McCOMAS. No; I have not. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia relates to a further part of this matter, which I do not now address myself to. I suggest, however, to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], if he will give me his attention, that if he will strike out, after the word "writing," in line 11, on page 34, all the words down to the words "the Secretary," in line 14, and insert:

And in all cases where the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury that the articles in question shall be excluded, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may refuse delivery, etc.

That meets the purpose of the Senator from Rhode Island and it meets the views of the Senator from Iowa. It simply puts into language what the Senator from Iowa expressed in his statement a while ago, that the examination should be made in the Department of Agriculture, and that the Secretary of Agriculture should report his findings and analyses to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I thought the Senator from Maryland was through.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am not through, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I thought the Senator was through; I will wait.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill if what I have suggested does not meet his wishes? If so, I will offer that amendment. I shall move to strike out, on page 34, in line 11, after the word "writing," down to the word "the," in line 14 on the same page, and insert:

And in all cases where the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury that the articles in question should be excluded.

And, in line 11, after the word "shall," to insert the words "may, in his discretion."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Maryland would not it involve a great discourtesy in one Secretary to another, if, in the discharge of a great duty like this, he finds certain facts, and those facts would indicate a certain line of action, and there is a doubt necessary with the other Secretary as to whether he should do what is right?

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, in the context are the words "and found to be dangerous to health." The word "may" may mean in an administrative sense "must," unless the Secretary of the Treasury differed from the Secretary of Agriculture as to the article being dangerous to health.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the use of a chemist making an analysis to ascertain whether articles are poisonous to health if, after he reports they are injurious to health, the report is not going to have any effect?

Mr. McCOMAS. If he did think so, then as an administrative officer he must exercise a discretion in matters of the gravest results of people. He, as the head of the Department, must exercise a certain discretion, and I don't mind to give it to him. Of course it will not be abused, but it must be lodged in an executive officer. Suppose it were to be an error in reading the report, then the Secretary of the Treasury, when seeing the other provisions, for instance, the word "not" had been inserted in a sentence where it ought to have been omitted,—would he have no discretion to correct the error?

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no analogy between the cases. It seems to me that this whole trouble arises from the fact that this legislation is a kind of hodgepodge, which has grown by concretion, by a historical process.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Accretion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, probably it is "accretion" rather than "concretion."

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through.

You would have to recast the whole section. In other words, I believe with the Senator, that the Secretary of the Treasury, being the officer having charge of imports and all that kind of thing, should have the power vested in him, and that the initiative as to chemical analysis, inspection, and analysis should come from him. Then he could request the Secretary of Agriculture to make an examination through his Bureau of Chemistry and report to him the results of the examination, and then he ought to be forced to carry out in good faith the result of such analysis and inspection. As I have said, this whole thing is a hodgepodge, and would have to be recast from top to bottom to make it work right.

Mr. McCOMAS. There is no practical difference between the word "shall" and the word "may" in this connection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe the word "shall" ought to remain in. Where one Secretary certifies, through his officers, that he has found poisonous or deleterious and injurious ingredients in any article of food or drink he ought to be forced to act. It should not be "may," but "shall" should stay there.

Mr. McCOMAS. Apart from that, I think the Senator from South Carolina will agree with me that the other provisions had better be amended as I have suggested, so that the report shall be made by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then act.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. If what the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has said is true, that the Treasury Department has its laboratories and its chemists and other officers, and that to make these investigations and examinations, why the necessity of establishing these agencies for work of this kind?

Mr. McCOMAS. There can be no difference about that, I think. The Secretary of Agriculture is more and more developing, and very rightly developing, the whole subject of the analysis of foods, medicines, and drugs and the Treasury Department is having less and less to do with that part of the Administration. The Secretary of Agriculture ought to be the Secretary to inspect foods and the like, and he is becoming more and more so.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is this not one of the ideas that the Senator is endeavoring to eliminate—the duplication of authority—the bringing of more than one department into connection with imports into this country? The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, has particularly to do with imports. He has agents in every seaport, in every port of entry and delivery; he has all the facilities, and if he has not all the facilities, if he lacks any of them, they should be given to him through laboratories, chemists, and other scientific persons to make every necessary and proper investigation to determine whether or not food or liquor has been adulterated or is deleterious to the public health.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to this additional fact: I do not understand that the Agricultural Department has agencies in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, upon our Canadian frontier, on or the Pacific coast, or on the Gulf, while the Secretary of the Treasury has agents everywhere. The Secretary of the Treasury can more readily and properly acquire information as to the coming of impure and improper goods into this country than can the Secretary of Agriculture, it seems to me.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is a pretty long question. I see the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] wants to take the floor. I should have been through if the question of the Senator from Colorado had not been so extended.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, if the Senator from Maryland objects upon the ground that I am intruding upon his time——

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator is not intruding on my time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am bound in courtesy to suspend.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator asked me a question, and I should like to answer that.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has had such vast experience that he has become hardened to all this, and I suggest there is no necessity for any particular sympathy upon the part of the Senator from Maryland for the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No: I am going to stand here until I get the floor.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to answer the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have not got through. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. If he would get through speedily, I should like to answer him before long.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should have been through before this time, probably, if the Senator from Maryland had not interfered with me.

There was a great deal of good, hard common sense in what was suggested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] as to the duplication of powers, the mingling of authority, and the provisions of the law which permit officials of one Department to interfere with the work and duties of the officials of another Department.

It is true that the Secretary of Agriculture may have a few more facilities of this kind, so far as paraphernalia is concerned, for the purpose of detecting the adulteration of foods and liquors; but I suggest that any defect in that respect, so far as the Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, could be speedily remedied. The Secretary of the Treasury has this advantage over the Secretary of Agriculture: He has his agents in every port of entry and delivery wherever these goods may go, while, as I understand, the Secretary of Agriculture probably has no agents in any of them. Then, again, the facilities for bearings——

Mr. HOAR. He not only has the conveniences, but the goods are in his custody.

Mr. PATTERSON. The goods are in his custody. He has laboratories; he has chemists; and surely, if these duties are imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury, as he is an intelligent and an honest man, he will carry them out most effectively.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me at that point?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The proposition is, this bill covered by the increase of appropriation is to duplicate the laboratories and to duplicate the agents abroad, to have free traveling agents, when we have got the consular service. I am very glad to hear the Senator say what he has said, but I want to call his attention to this duplication.

Mr. PATTERSON. If some Senator upon this side had made that statement, he would be immediately accused of offensive partisanship [laughter], because he would hardly dare to say that, coming from the Committee on Agriculture, provisions had been made for the purpose of duplicating officers and offices; but that must necessarily be the logical result, and there is but one way in which it can be avoided—make the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury clear, defined, imperative; then give him the facilities for doing these things; and there will be no necessity of mixing up the Department of Agriculture with the Treasury Department.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] though lengthy, has a line in it, and that is, Why should there be a duplication by putting in this bill a provision for analysis and inspection of foods, medicines, drugs, and the like by the Agricultural Department when there are laboratories and opportunities for analysis in the Treasury Department in certain places? The answer to that is that for some years past we have been increasing in the Department of Agriculture the facilities for this purpose, and that Department has been doing splendid work, work which in a century the Treasury officials never undertook, and, if they had, could never have achieved. In respect of foods, especially, and things deleterious to health, the Department of Agriculture has done in the last four years what the Treasury Department could never do, and never will do.

That is under existing legislation; it is the policy of this country, and it is working successfully. The Treasury Department has not objected to giving this power to the Department of Agriculture, and since the Department of Agriculture has under existing law this power, my purpose in offering the amendment is to make the pending provision of the bill simply require the customs service to cooperate in the examination and analysis of food products, so that articles coming through the custom-houses shall, upon the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture, be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture, and when his Department reports to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] suggested, that then the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, in his administrative discretion—because he is empowered to exercise a discretion, for if he were not so empowered, he would not be an administrative officer——

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me suggest to the Senator——

Mr. McCOMAS. Let me finish my answer. The Secretary of the Treasury has an administrative discretion, and therefore in that discretion, every time, of course, when a report is made and he can not countervail the conclusion of the report that the subject-matter is poisonous or dangerous to health, he will do the things that are provided for in such cases.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to suggest to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. I only want to suggest that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is still on his feet.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator from Connecticut has assured the Senator from Colorado that he will remain on his feet until the Senator from Colorado ceases to be in a state of eruption.

Having made that statement, Mr. President, I seriously think my amendment ought to be adopted, because it does coordinate the work of the two Departments. I hope, in the interest of the Department of Agriculture and in the interest of this provision of the bill, the amendment may be accepted by the chairman of the committee or, at least, voted upon and accepted by the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think this discussion has shown so many defects, or mistakes, I will say, in the draft of this provision, that it is better to strike it out and let it be dealt with in conference between the two Houses. I do not believe that any amendment of it here upon the floor of the Senate is going to make it what anyone wants it to be. I hope the chairman of the committee will take that view of it and allow it to go out, so that it may be carefully considered and carefully drafted in a committee of conference.

There is certainly one thing which has not been alluded to, unless it be by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], to which I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee. We have a statute of 1890 dealing with this whole subject as it stood up to the act for 1904. That statute was read by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. It empowered the Secretary of the Treasury to deal with this whole subject of the importation of adulterated foods or goods deleterious to health. In 1903 we enacted another law, which seems to give to the Secretary of Agriculture the entire power of dealing with this subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. In relation to the public health only.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In relation to the public health and adulterated articles of food. Now, does not the last law repeal the first by implication? Is the statute of 1890, giving to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to deal with this subject, repealed by implication by the statute of 1903 in last year's appropriation bill, which gave the power to deal with this subject to the Secretary of Agriculture, and prescribed what was going to be done if such importations were attempted?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that the statute of 1890 prescribed an entirely different method. It was a penal statute, which made it a misdemeanor to import articles of that kind; and it further provided that, upon proper legal process, the goods should be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is just the point I am making. After we have given this whole matter into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and upon his finding that the goods are deleterious, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to return them, what is left of the statute of 1890, which makes their introduction into this country a misdemeanor and authorizes their forfeiture?

It seems to me it is a very serious question whether this statute provision that was put in last year's appropriation bill did not by implication repeal the statute of 1890, which made the introduction of deleterious foods into this country a misdemeanor.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the appropriation bill was in effect the adoption of a statute for a year. At the expiration of the fiscal year that law expired by limitation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not sure about that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, I assume it; otherwise there would be no occasion for repealing it in this bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Well, the statute may be repealed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There seems to be a state of great confusion here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A statute may be repealed by a provision introduced in an appropriation bill. A great many statutes have been so repealed.

But what I want to ask is this: If when we deal with this subject by putting it in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and providing that he is to examine and see whether the articles imported are deleterious to the public health, and, if he finds them so, to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to send them back, is there anything left of the statute of 1890, which provides for their forfeiture? In other words, have we not in the statute of last year—the appropriation act of last year—prescribed a different method of dealing with goods of that character when they are imported into this country, and prescribed a different remedy from that provided in the statute of 1890? I do not say this is so, but I say it is a thing which ought to be considered very carefully before any legislation is enacted.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I wish to say a word upon this matter of duplication. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS]. There are already in the bill many provisions intrusting the Secretary of Agriculture with the examination of food products of various kinds. That is a matter within his general jurisdiction. If food products produced at home or abroad are to be examined, they are properly under his general jurisdiction.

This is not a duplication of officers, because he has to have his officers in places from which goods, meat, and everything else are exported. Before all food products are exported the Secretary of Agriculture, through his officers, is there to make an examination, and for him to initiate the examination does not duplicate the officers for this work.

It is true that the Secretary of the Treasury has agents everywhere, but they are not expert agents for this particular purpose. The Secretary of Agriculture has expert agents for the particular purpose of examining food products wherever they come from; and it is right in their line, when goods are imported, to examine them, as they are in the locality where the goods are exported.

So that if we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an examination and report to the Secretary of the Treasury, and then leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to exclude such commodities as are deleterious to health, or are reported against by the Secretary of Agriculture, we avoid that duplication concerning which so much has been said.

We have got to duplicate the expert officers in every port, one to examine the goods that go out and another to examine the goods that come in. An ordinary man who is not an expert, whose business is not in this line, would be useless for the purpose of making such examinations.

It seems to me that, turning it all over, not allowing the Secretary of Agriculture to initiate the examination as to food products of all kinds when he is there in that business, but to have another set of officers of the Treasury Department to initiate it, would result in duplication. It seems to me that the system proposed avoids the duplication against which there has been so much said.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. MALLORY addressed the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], as I know he desires to address the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I only desire to say a few words. We all have one common object in view—that is, to prevent the importation into this country of adulterated foods or that which is deleterious to the health of the people. In other words, we want the label to show what the goods contained in boxes, cans, and bottles really are.

California has suffered very materially for the want of proper legislation in this regard, as has been intimated by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. The cotton-seed oil of Georgia and South Carolina is sent to France; it is there transferred into bottles with French labels, and returned to this country, to compete with olive oil that is produced in the State of California, the only State in the Union that produces olive oil.

In the same way the wines of our country, especially California wines, which we sell for a dollar and a dollar and fifty cents a gallon, are exported to France, there placed in bottles with French labels, and returned to this country, and my friend from South Carolina probably pays $5 a bottle for Chateau Yquem, which is the same as we sell in California for one-tenth of that amount.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from California allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from California yield to me for a minute?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Senator from California any guaranty that his olive oil is any sweeter, any purer, any better than the cotton-seed oil we can furnish him from our country?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Answer the question.

Mr. PERKINS. The oil made from olives is olive oil. That made from cotton seed is cotton-seed oil. If one has a taste for cotton-seed oil, it would be unbecoming in me to criticise that taste. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. PERKINS. We in California prefer the oil made from the olives.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from California allow me?

Mr. PERKINS. Most certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from California allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from California whether he can tell the difference?

Mr. MONEY. I wish to say to the Senator from California, who stands up for olive oil, as he ought to, because his State is such a great producer of it, that the very finest article of olive oil imported from Lucca or any other port in Italy is made from cotton-seed oil. For a number of years the Italian Government forbade the importation into that country of cotton seed or cotton-seed oil, because they said it was ruining the olive industry. That rule was afterwards relaxed, and to-day the finest olive oil you get is made from cotton-seed oil that crosses the ocean twice.

Mr. PERKINS. That is an Italian taste which we in California have not yet cultivated. We believe in the old Spanish proverb that the olive tree has the faculty of health giving, of life giving, and that one who has an olive orchard transmits to his posterity an advantage that is beyond money or price.

But, Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, it seem to me, is inopportune; or, at least, if it is not, the language ought not to be amended in this respect. The law has been in operation for over seven months, since the first of the fiscal year, July 1, and it has served notice to the importers into this country of adulterated foods and wines and other spirituous drinks that they can not bring them into this country and have them landed and distributed among our people.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a well-understood custom for importers of salad oils to brand them as "salad oil" when it is known that they are made largely, in whole or in part, of cotton-seed oil. Now, does the Senator think the Secretary of Agriculture ought to be required to exclude from entry into this country a salad oil because it is composed in whole or in part of cotton-seed oil?

Mr. PERKINS. Those who wish to buy cotton-seed oil and use it for salad oil have that privilege, but brand it what it is; notify on the label what are the contents of the bottle.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is usually labeled "salad oil."

Mr. PERKINS. No epicurean like my friend the Senator from Rhode Island would use salad oil or oil that is labeled on the bottle "salad oil." He has been in the business as an importer of oil, and I am sure he has never used it in his own household, although it is customary with some.

Mr. ALDRICH. I presume I have.

Mr. TILLMAN. May I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can he tell the difference between California champagne and the French?

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator will furnish me with the two samples I will give my testimony. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, again, does the Senator purchase for his home use the California or the French product? He will dodge that question, I bet.

Mr. PERKINS. I am too patriotic and too loyal to the great industries of our State, California, which has over a hundred million dollars invested in vineyards, giving employment to over 70,000 persons; I am too loyal to my State and too patriotic to my country to drink, if I drink anything stronger than coffee, other than California wine.

But, Mr. President, the point I have in view is this: This law has been on the statute books for seven months. It has worked advantageously to the honest importers. It has operated in the interest of the public, as administered by the Secretary of Agriculture and by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MALLORY. The purpose of my amendment is to continue the law, to let the Secretary of Agriculture make the analysis and the investigation and report upon the package to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PERKINS. Why change a law which has proved to be so salutary in its effect?

Mr. MALLORY. It is not changing it; it is giving it effect.

Mr. PERKINS. I fail to see, Mr. President, if this law has been in force satisfactorily for seven months, why we should change it. It is true that sometimes our friends the lawyers go to the beginning of our respective Senates and secure an amendment of a law so as to bring a case to their mills, as my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] would say, and that they may go into the courts again to have it legally construed. But this law has worked advantageously to the people of this country, and it seems to me that we ought to let well enough alone. For that reason I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the Senator from California has hit the point of this matter. We have had a very engrossing afternoon but it is important that we can not meddle with this provision very much without harm. It has been in force the last seven months. Returns have been made. Both Secretaries understand it. [The Secretary of the Treasury writes a very strong letter in regard to it. He says:

I know of no way better than the new provided.

I move, in line 19, page 33, that the words "or goods of any description which" be stricken out, and that after the word "countries," in the next line, line 20, the word "which" be inserted.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before that is done, I will say it is surplusage either way. The word "articles" used in a law of this kind is broader than the word "articles" and covers everything. It does not matter which way it is.

Mr. PROCTOR. No; but some objection has been made to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The objection, as I understood it, was fundamental, that it includes not only articles of food, and that it ought to be limited to articles of food or to articles that are comprised within the law and not [illegible].

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the amendment be agreed to. Certainly no one is opposed to it.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds——

Mr. LODGE. I have been trying to get the floor for some time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator from Massachusetts speaks—I think it would instruct the Senator's remarks—I should like to inquire what has become of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which was, after the word "which," in line 17——

Mr. ALDRICH. That was accepted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To insert "the Secretary of the Treasury shall find". Has it been accepted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is still pending.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the amendment which I have offered would make the measure satisfactory, as it seems to be, I would be very glad to have it closed up to-night. I would be very glad.

But, as I started to say, this measure has been interpreted. It has been discussed [illegible] there is no question that in another appropriation bill great care will be exercised in drafting it.

This was originally reported by the Committee on Commerce. Alterations and additions have been made to it, not in my view, but in the view of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, materially changing its meaning. Its purpose is very evident, that it is to prevent importations of substances which would make them injurious to health. If the measure was stricken out, it might be lost entirely, which would be a very great calamity, as all agree.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question for my own information?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I notice that, beginning in line 18, on page 33, it is provided that—

The Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason to believe that articles or goods of any description—

That includes everything—which are being imported from foreign countries by reason of adulteration are dangerous to the health of the people of the United States—

Which is one point; and then farther on—or which are forbidden entry or to be sold or are restricted in sale in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported.

What I should like to get some information on is as to the meaning of the last clause which I have read:

Or which are forbidden entry or to be sold or are restricted in sale in the countries in which they are made or from which they are exported.

Is that confined to adulterated articles of food and medicine and other things taken into the human system, or does it empower the Secretary of Agriculture to designate any articles which fall within that provision as being liable to be excluded? The language is very broad.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think the meaning of it is plain, and there can be no question about the interpretation of it. It is to forbid any country unloading upon us articles that they will not themselves receive or the sale of which they restrict. A country——

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, I will make a suggestion. Tobacco is one of the products forbidden to be sold in half the civilized countries of the world; that is, tobacco of certain kinds, and all kinds in many countries. Could the Secretary of Agriculture, under that, prohibit the importation into this country of tobacco in any form or any particular kind or [illegible]?

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand that in certain countries the importation of tobacco is very greatly restricted, as among the Mohammedans.

Mr. ALDRICH. In all cases it is either restricted or——

Mr. MALLORY. If that is the case, it seems to me that the clause should be revised. Certainly it gives a tremendous power to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. PROCTOR. It goes upon the supposition that the Secretary of Agriculture and the officers of the Government will give an interpretation which will not be strained. The purpose is evident. The language has stood for years. We have been working under it for months very beneficially, and I certainly think it would be better to adopt it as it is. It is not a matter of my construction. It is precisely as it came to the committee from the other body.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course all that has been said in behalf of excluding adulterated food products is rather beside the mark. We are all in favor of that. I should not be at all [illegible] that kind forfeited, as the law of 1890 provided. I should not be sorry to see a little more drastic retaliation against the countries which under pretense of sanitary regulations are undertaken to discriminate against our products. But that question is not involved here. We are all agreed about the policy. The thing that is involved here is a question of good organization, and proper administration of government.

Mr. President, the law, as it appeared in 1890, the production, I suppose, of the Senator from Iowa, was a perfectly proper clause. It provided that the Department to which it intrusted the care of our food products should pass upon adulterated articles of food and drink and notify the Secretary of the Treasury. But since then little by little the provision has grown.

From being confined to food products, it has passed now to the question of articles whose entry is forbidden or whose sale is prohibited or restricted in foreign countries. Why is the Secretary of Agriculture any better able to pass upon that than the Secretary of the Treasury? It has gone on from that to the question of [illegible].

Mr. HOAR. Will my colleague allow me to call his attention to the fact that it has not only gone on to that, but for any reason whatever that the Secretary of Agriculture thinks a good one for excluding it under this bill, in the thirteenth line, he can do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Any reason.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged. I was coming to that. It has gone on from that to labels. The Senator from Rhode Island is well aware, and everybody is who is familiar with tariff legislation, that the question of the description of articles of import is one of the most important things that comes before the Treasury Department. It involves sometimes the classification of an article, a question which is arising constantly and employs the best [illegible] of the Treasury. Under it sometimes is involved a question of a million of dollars of duty.

Under this clause the question of labeling is put into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. The bill goes on to say "for any reason." It is all very well to say that we know the distinguished gentleman at the head of the Department of Agriculture is going to administer this law properly. That is not the question. We are not engaged in legislating for the individual who happens to be for the moment at the head of the Department of Agriculture, unquestionably the best Secretary of Agriculture we have ever had, and who has done more for agriculture than anyone else. We are not legislating for Mr. Wilson. We are legislating for all Secretaries of Agriculture, and we must remember in passing laws of this kind that nothing can be so unfortunate as to confuse the duties of Departments.

The duty of the Department of the Treasury is to collect the revenues of the Government, and if there is a particular phase involved in a foreign importation which comes particularly within the purview of the Agricultural Department, then the Treasury Department is entitled to all the assistance and all the enlightenment that the Agricultural Department can give.

But that is a very different thing from giving the Secretary of Agriculture control over the Secretary of the Treasury. Under this bill as it now reads—and it is a miserably drawn clause—the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury are purely ministerial. The Secretary of Agriculture finds certain facts. The Secretary of the Treasury has no choice.

Mr. President, if the Secretary of Agriculture is going to collect the revenues of the Government, let him do it; and if the Secretary of the Treasury is to collect them, let him do it. But do not let us duplicate and confuse the Departments. I listened with very great interest to what the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Colorado said about this matter of duplication. It is a subject to which I have given some attention in the past in connection with another matter. We have gone on duplicating surveys in this country, triplicating them, quadrupling them——

Mr. GALLINGER. And statistics.

Mr. LODGE. And statistics in the same way. On our surveys we have doubled and trebled and quadrupled them and put them in this Department and in that Department, and we have spent a hundred and fifty or two hundred million dollars on those surveys, building up one bureau here and another there, and we have not yet a decent map of the United States.

Mr. President, we are starting in to duplicate again. We have at this moment laboratories at every port in the country. I believe they are not very good. I believe they ought to be made better. But what is the proposition here under the cover of this increased appropriation? It is to establish another set of laboratories under the Secretary of Agriculture at every port in the country. Let us have good laboratories for the necessary examinations connected with the tariff, but let us have only one set. Let us have them under the Secretary of the Treasury or under the Secretary of Agriculture. Do not let us duplicate them. I refer to this because in the House hearings it appears that the House Members discussed that at length and refused to put it in.

Another thing that I find in the House hearings is this: They want to send three agents, at $3,000 a year apiece, to travel abroad and look into manufactures there and report to the Secretary of Agriculture. We have a consular service and we have Treasury agents, and they are there in Europe now. What are they for? What are we to duplicate them for, to treble them again? Why are we to have another force of men over there traveling about and reporting to the Government? We have a consular service whose business it is to make such reports. They send in monthly or weekly reports on just such subjects. If they do not do their work properly, get new consuls. If the Treasury agents who assist them do not do their work properly, get new Treasury agents. Why send out another set of agents to do over again the work that these men are doing?

This clause, as it started in 1900, was a very proper clause. As it is now——

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Is the clause of 1900 satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. Perfectly; and I was going to propose to come back to it.

Mr. PROCTOR. Would the Senator be glad to substitute that for the present clause?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to offer my amendment, he will see that that is just what I am going to do, if I understood the reading of it correctly. I have not got it before me.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not think there has been any material alteration in it. If the Senator will take the clause as it was originally put in the bill in 1900 by the Committee on Appropriations, I will accept it and move its substitution for this.

Mr. LODGE. I will tell the Senator what has been added, unless I was misguided by the reading of the Senator from Iowa.

Or which shall be found upon examination to be in violation of any law in the countries in which they are made, or from which they are exported, or where shall be found to be improperly labeled or marked with respect to the place of manufacture or the contents of the package.

I believe that has all crept in since 1900.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think it has. I can read——

Mr. LODGE. That is all right. Then I am not wrong. That has crept in since 1900. That is the vicious part of the bill. What was originally put in, as far as I understand it—and I merely am talking about what I heard read—was a reasonable provision, that articles of food and drink affecting the health of the people were to be examined by the Secretary of Agriculture, because he had the means to furnish better than anyone else to the Secretary of the Treasury the information necessary to keep those unhealthy products out of this country. From that we have got out into the whole range of imports.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will not the law of 1900 still provide for these duplications of which the Senator has spoken?

Mr. PROCTOR. There is practically no duplication. The Treasury Department has no machinery to administer this law. The Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado did not hear his letter read. He says he knows of no better method.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can well understand why the Secretary of the Treasury should say so. He would say so all the more gladly if he was furnished with the paraphernalia, if he has not got it, for the purpose of investigating imported articles. However, I did not desire to interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Rhode Island says that that provision will be entirely satisfactory to him. It is headed "To investigate the adulteration of foods, drugs, and liquors when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable."

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not very long, and I suggest that the Senator from Vermont read it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I can read the whole of it.

Mr. LODGE. I will be through in a moment. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me, so far as I am informed about it. It strikes out all these things that have crept in, which are matters the Secretary of the Treasury could decide and find out about just as well as the Secretary of Agriculture. He has the machinery to do it.

As to the adulteration of food, I do not suppose he did have the machinery. So probably it is not a duplication so far as that goes and to that limited extent, but it is growing into a duplication.

Now, as I pointed out, in this increased appropriation we are to have a new set of laboratories and a new set of agents abroad. I do not think it is good administration. I do not think it is a wise system, and I hope we shall return to the law of 1900, if that is satisfactory to the Senator from Rhode Island, who has examined it more closely than I have.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, it seems to me the criticism made against the language of this provision is at least unnecessary. One thing about it which has impressed me is that this is the only language we have ever had in one of these provisions that has been sufficiently understood by our own Government to be executed and sufficiently understood by fraudulent importers into the United States to be obeyed. In the last six months this law in the exact phraseology that we have it here has been under execution.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. That which impresses me more than any other part is where it says that if "the examination conducted by the Secretary of Agriculture discloses any reason for believing that the products in question should be excluded" they may be excluded.

It gives him absolute discretionary power over the entire imports of the United States. Now, is not that new in this proposed law?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think it is included in the general provision.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know whether or not that is new. The Senator and I could not differ about that. The Senator does not claim for a moment that we should enact a law giving the Secretary of Agriculture, whoever he may be hereafter, for, of course, we would all trust Mr. Wilson with almost anything, the power to exclude any import into the United States for any reason that he thinks proper. No one would.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not think that is the operation of the law.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that is new.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think if the Senator will read that language carefully he will see that it relates to the clause providing for the right of the owner or the consignee to appeal.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; for it goes on expressly in the very next clause to say that the Secretary of the Treasury shall refuse delivery to the company of any such goods. [After a pause.] Oh, I see that is limited to articles dangerous to health. The Senator is right about that, but on the other I think he is wrong.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to say, for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts, that I have compared and collated the law of last year and the bill, and, beginning in line 9, page 34, with the word "before," down to "excluded," in line 14, it is all new.

Mr. HOAR. All of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Every bit of it.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I thought.

Mr. TILLMAN. Interpolated in the present bill. It was not in the law.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I thought.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That language does not touch the criticisms which have been offered.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will look again he will see it does, because it says:

In all cases where the examination conducted by the Secretary of Agriculture discloses any reason for labeling——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I understand the criticisms made here are, first, that it gives too much power to the Secretary of Agriculture, to which I reply that it gives substantially the same power that he has exercised for years under the law.

In the next place, it is claimed that the language can not be understood. I hold that it is the only language we have ever had in these statutes that has been understood or has been effective in producing the result we sought.

The Senator from Massachusetts says it duplicates the machinery. In my humble opinion the only machinery we have competent to handle this business is the Chemical Bureau of the Department of Agriculture.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that we propose to increase that facility. The only increase we propose is that these examinations shall be made at the port of Boston and at the port of New York, at Philadelphia, and other ports of entry, instead of having the goods brought here to Washington to be analyzed. The object of that is to facilitate the investigation and prevent any disturbance of legitimate commerce and business.

This law, in the exact language in which it has been reported by the committee, however lame and imperfect the language may be, has been construed by both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Treasury, and both Departments are satisfied that they understand it and can execute it.

Now, it appears to me that this whole discussion is a year too late. If all these questions were involved about increasing the power of the Department of Agriculture, about duplicating the machinery of the Government for carrying on its business, they ought to have been raised when the law was first put upon the statute books of the United States. The fact is that this law is well understood both in Europe and in the great ports of entry of the United States, and that it is the only effective machinery we have had in the United States to accomplish that purpose.

Therefore, as this law is in the process of administration, is thoroughly understood and perfectly interpreted in both Departments, I sincerely hope that the Senate will allow it to stand exactly as the committee has reported it. Any concession, in my humble opinion, would operate to weaken the efficiency of the statute itself.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with him entirely about keeping out articles injurious to health. I approve of the law of 1900.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Everybody appears to agree about keeping them out and something is done that actually keeps them out.

Mr. LODGE. No, the amendment I propose does not touch the testing of food injurious to health, and if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. What I wish to ask him about is, why it is necessary to put into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture the determination of such a question as whether the goods are forbidden or restricted in sale in another country. That is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the consular service. The Secretary of Agriculture has no information on that point that he does not derive from some other service.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I regard that as a comparatively immaterial matter. That is one of the tests of fraud. If the goods are such that no country will receive them, and that the country in which they are made refuses to allow them to be sold, that is a very effective, and, it seems to me, a satisfactory test of the character of the goods. But whether that question of fact should be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Treasury I regard as comparatively unimportant. It is a question of fact.

Mr. LODGE. My sole point is to leave with the Secretary of Agriculture the question of testing food products. Everything that is consumed—food and drink—we are to leave to him, because he can do it better than anybody else. But the question of labels, the question of classification, the question of restriction in other countries, are not questions which belong to the Agricultural Department. They belong, where they have always been, it seems to me, with the Secretary who is charged with the collection of the revenues and the enforcement of the tariff laws.

Mr. DOLLIVER. So far as the question whether goods are forbidden to be sold or imported into another country is concerned, of course that is a question that could be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury just as well as by the Secretary of Agriculture. But when you come to the question of false labeling that involves a chemical analysis of the goods to see whether the contents of the package corresponds to the label, I think that is purely a question for the chemical department of the Department of Agriculture.

The point I desire to make is that this law is now working well, and if we desire in the future to make some permanent legislation in respect to this subject it can be done in the future. But these two great Departments are now working harmoniously together and they are now doing a business which has never been done before in the United States, and they ought to be allowed to proceed under the terms of the statute, which they both understand, whether it is understood in the Senate or not.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it seems that all parties who have been criticising this provision the most severely are satisfied with the provision of the act of 1900. That gives substantially everything that is required. There would have to be a little enlargement, but the objections which have been brought up could be obviated, and I think it could be fixed satisfactorily in conference. I am ready to move, and will move, that, beginning on page 33, with line 18, all be stricken out down to and including the word "package," in line 22, on page 34, and that the provision which I send to the desk be inserted in brackets be inserted instead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. PROCTOR. I hope that will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 17, page 34, after the words "or which," at the end of the line, insert the words "the Secretary of the Treasury shall find."

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment I have proposed of course wipes all that language out.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, but in view of the action suggested by the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill, I am quite willing that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia shall be voted down, and then, so far as I can, I will accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont in place of the motion made by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, beginning with line 18, strike out that line and all the following lines down to and including the word "package," in line 22, on page 34, and insert:

[illegible]

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that by this amendment he has taken out of the bill the gist, the character of the whole provision. He has limited the exclusion that may be made by the Secretary of Agriculture simply to those articles that are dangerous to health, and there we stop.

Ninety per cent of all those which are excluded—I may say 99 per cent—are not articles which are necessarily injurious to health, but they are misbranded articles, spurious articles. They may be healthful to a certain extent, but they are adulterated and misbranded articles that are sent upon our markets under an assumed name, as wines that are claimed to be manufactured at certain places in France, that never saw France. All of those articles are dumped upon us. Now, I should like to ask the Senator how we are to be protected against them.

If the Senator will look over the list of things which have been excluded through the efforts of the Secretary of Agriculture he will find very few that are dangerous to health. As has already been suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I do not know that cotton-seed oil is dangerous to health, and yet under this bill, as it would now stand, you can introduce from France or Italy as pure olive oil any cotton-seed oil and ship it to this country and the Secretary of Agriculture is absolutely at their mercy.

It seems to me that if the amendment is to be made, we should include not only those articles which are dangerous to health, but all misbranded and adulterated articles of food and drink. When we have done that I think we will come within the limit which all Senators agree is proper.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Falsely branded.

Mr. ALDRICH. All adulterations are covered by the language suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. McCOMAS. Bad labeling is not covered.

Mr. PROCTOR. I said in submitting the amendment that there would be something to be added. I agree fully with what the Senator from North Dakota says in regard to the necessity of extending it. It brings the whole matter into conference, where, I think, all these differences can be adjusted. The Senator knows very well that I am earnestly in favor of pure food and pure branding. I do not like to see a compound of cane sugar labeled "Pure Vermont maple sirup," as I do every year. I have no doubt the committee will be able to bring about such a framing of the provision as will obviate all difficulties.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, if the Senator will excuse me, I do not understand that those Senators who favor this amendment have any objection whatever to its being amended here so that it will exclude falsely branded articles of food. They have no objection of that character; at least, they certainly have not stated it so far.

Mr. LODGE. If it is solely confined to food and drink and does not spread over the whole tariff list, I have no objection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then let us include it right now without going into conference. Let us make this amendment say that.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will insert in the very title "to investigate the adulteration and false branding of foods, drugs, and liquors."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It would have to be in the body of the act. That would not reach it. All that has to be done is to insert the words "falsely labeled."

Mr. ALLISON. "Such adulteration or false labeling."

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that if we adopt this amendment now it will be open to amendment in the Senate, and it can be perfected then.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think if we put in the words "falsely labeled and branded" it will answer. There can not be any objection to that.

Mr. PATTERSON. "Falsely labeled or branded," because other things than cattle are not branded.

Mr. McCOMAS. "In regard to the place of manufacture or the contents of the package." Those words ought to be retained.

Mr. PROCTOR. Insert after "adulteration" the words "false labeling or false branding;" and then after the word "health," where it reads "any goods which the Secretary of Agriculture reports to him have been inspected and analyzed and found to be dangerous to health," insert "or falsely labeled or branded." That puts it into the body of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendment as amended be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. McCOMAS. I presented an amendment which I think will perhaps remove the difficulty about the conflict between the two Departments, simply requiring a report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is all wiped out now.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understood the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to strike out from line 18 and insert. Did it not?

Mr. LODGE. I think before the bill is finally disposed of we all ought to see the amendment of the Senator from Vermont in print. I hope we shall not undertake to dispose of the bill finally to-night, so that we can have the amendment printed, and in the morning look at the bill as amended. I ask that the bill be printed as amended.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator will pardon me. I had not finished my inquiry. I ask the Secretary to state where the amendment of the Senator from Vermont was inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, beginning on line 18, strike out that line and the lines following down to and including the word "package" in line 22, page 34, and insert.

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have the bill printed as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill as amended may be printed, and that its further consideration be delayed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to suggest an amendment, which I think will go without any controversy. Recurring to page 14, the item that we had so much debate about yesterday, lines 3 and 4, for experiments in animal breeding, after the word "breeding" I move to insert the words "and feeding;" so that it will read:

For experiments in animal breeding and feeding.

Those who are interested in it are quite satisfied with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 3, amend the committee amendment as agreed to by adding, after the word "breeding," the words "and feeding."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the bill being reported to the Senate? If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done, I ask that the pending appropriation bill be laid aside informally, that I may call up a brief bill relating to the State of Iowa.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to leave the appropriation bill at that stage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the further consideration of the appropriation bill is postponed until to-morrow morning.

IOWA STATE CLAIM.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6845) for the relief of the State of Iowa.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the State of Iowa $20,545.70, to reimburse the said State for money and supplies furnished Iowa troops after being mustered into the United States service.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator what war it relates to?

Mr. ALLISON. It relates to the war with Spain. It is an adjustment of the accounts of our State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAYS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3204) permitting the Kiowa, Chickasha and Fort Smith Railway Company to sell and convey its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company, and the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company to lease all its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and thereafter to sell its railroad and other property to said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSAGE RIVER, MISSOURI.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a little House bill on the Calendar, Order of Business 492, being the bill (H. R. 7620) defining the limit of navigation of the Osage River, in the State of Missouri, favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce, for which I ask present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides that the Osage River, in the State of Missouri, above the point where the south line of sections 15 and 16, in township 40 north, of range 22 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Benton, Mo., crosses the river, is declared not to be a navigable stream, and shall be so treated by the Secretary of War and by all other authorities.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent ——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to move an adjournment. I will yield to the Senator from South Dakota, but I shall not yield further.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. [illegible]) authorizing the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The amendment was, in section 1, on page 4, line 4, before the word "Railway," to strike out "Southeastern" and insert "Southern," so as to read:

"That a bridge for the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company, a corporation [illegible] across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between the cities of Yankton, S. Dak., and [illegible], Nebr., shall be [illegible] and approved by the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was, on page 4, section 3, line 24, after the word "Act," to strike out

"No bridge shall be erected or constructed under the authority of this act until the plans and specifications thereof shall have been approved by the Secretary of War, and the location of said bridge shall be subject to and approved by the Secretary of War."

And to insert:

"Said bridge shall be built and located in the manner and subject to the conditions and limitations prescribed by the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and commerce at Sioux City, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and shall be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 21, 1902, entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' and the amendments thereto, so far as the same may be applicable to said bridge, and the plans and specifications of said bridge shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War before the same shall be commenced or built."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Yankton, Norfolk and Southern Railway Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak."

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m. the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 25, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 24, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPRINT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the report on the Indian appropriation bill, which is exhausted. I think I make the request in representing in it too much valuable information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the report on the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OSAGE RESERVATION, OKLA.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker ——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8893) to extend the provisions of the act of January 21, 1903, to the Osage Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January [illegible], 1903, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surplus lands in the Osage Indian reservation in the Territory of Oklahoma," be, and the same are hereby, extended to and shall [illegible] the Territory of Oklahoma.

The amendment was read, as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. [illegible] of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Kansas explain the purpose of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. In 1903 a law was passed [illegible] the Osage country. Now they are [illegible], and they want permission to buy timber for use in the construction of railroads which are being built by them.

Mr. [illegible] of Indiana. What is the attitude of the Indians [illegible] this proposition?

Mr. CURTIS. The Indians have no interest in it. It is a matter in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and they have no [illegible].

[illegible] measure, and it has been unanimously reported [illegible].

[illegible] and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12070) the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I discussed somewhat in detail the first report of the board appointed to select a site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes. In commencing my remarks this morning I desire to preface what I have to say with an apology for the length of the statement that I am making. I did not think that I should occupy the attention of the committee for more than ten or possibly fifteen minutes when I asked permission to speak. But I was made to digress from what I had intended to say by interruptions and questions, with a consequent lengthening out of the discussion. This morning I shall endeavor to be as brief as is consistent with a presentation of the facts.

Mr. Chairman, I desire again to call attention to certain expressions in the board's first report. For example:

"[illegible] the board will cover in detail matters which are not [illegible]."

Yet these details promised to appear in the final report are the [illegible] which Congress commanded them to submit in their first report. In other words they were commanded to select a site, having selected a site, to report the necessary details so that Congress might have them and act with intelligence, if it should act at all.

These details are the very things which Congress is entitled to know [illegible] know before being called upon to vote away the public money.

I reiterate that the details thus promised constitute the exact information which the law commanded the board to submit before Congress should be asked to appropriate money to buy a site. Yet they asked for an appropriation of $250,000. Why did they make such a request in their first report? Because, as they say in that report, if an owner of a site knew that his property had been selected, he would be disposed unduly to enhance its cost to the Government. But this is answered by saying that if the Government should not wish to pay the price demanded, it could condemn the land and pay only its actual value.

If the Government should desire a particular site it could take it and not pay one dollar more than its real worth. Moreover, the competition was an open one. Self-interest would induce each owner to offer his best possible site at his best possible price. The law required a report in detail as to site and price, and then Congress could decide for itself whether it wished to make the purchase.

Mr. Chairman, there are some things a little unusual about this final report. It is an official document relating to a subject of great public importance, and made by a specially appointed board, and yet it is not dated. Perhaps, after all, this selection of a site was made more than two or three months ago.

I was informed, as were other Members of the House, at the session of Congress one year ago by a Senator of the United States that the site had been selected and that it was located in the Congressional district in which I say, under the pending paragraph, it is to be located. I was then given that information by a Senator of the United States, as were several gentlemen of the House now here before me.

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask if the gentleman from Wisconsin will yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Senator was from Wisconsin?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That calls for information which the gentleman from Illinois has no right to ask me to make public. I will not say whether it was a Senator from Wisconsin or a Senator from Illinois or a Senator from any other particular State. It was a Senator of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this final report is not only without date, but it is also without the signature of one member of the board. Following the signatures of the other two members is the following statement:

Civil Engineer H. H. Rousseau, a member of the board, concurs in this report, but he is now on duty at Mare Island yard, and therefore not present to sign the report.

Yet he was brought to Washington for the express purpose of acting on this board and uniting in a final report of its proceedings. It may be that the final report was submitted to him, but there is no statement to that effect, only the general assertion that he concurred in it. It could have been sent to him anywhere in the United States and returned with his signature in ten days.

The first report of this board was dated. The Secretary of the Navy, in calling the attention of Congress to it, says, "I have the honor to transmit a copy of the report of the board made November 29, 1902," and that report is signed by the three men appointed to make it, but the second report comes in about three months ago, and the Secretary of the Navy says, "I have the honor now to transmit a copy of the final report of the board," but he does not say when it was made. All this may not be of special importance, and yet, in connection with other facts and circumstances, it is interesting and suggestive.

As I said last evening, the board had a topographical survey of the Lake Bluff site made before they submitted their first report. A topographical survey depicts upon a plane surface the contour and physical features of a portion of the earth's surface.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I will ask the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, if they did not have a topographical survey of all the places along on the map?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When I inquired at the Coast and Geodetic Survey what topographical surveys they had made for the board the reply was, "None except the two at Lake Bluff."

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. DAYTON. Is it not true that the other sites were well-known cities and towns that had harbors that had been surveyed either by the Coast and Geodetic Survey or by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy, so that a survey of them was unnecessary, and that they had those with them at the time?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, these surveys were of the sites at Lake Bluff; they were not harbor surveys.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, let me explain to the gentleman just a moment. Lake Bluff is not a harbor point at all. Is not that true?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, it is about 4 to 4½ miles from the harbor at Waukegan.

Mr. DAYTON. So I understand. Therefore it would have to be surveyed, while the places on the other side have ports or harbors.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman, I think, is in error in his assumption. That lake has been sounded throughout its whole length along its shores, and the soundings are given in official Government charts. The depth of water at these various points is well known. It is known whether there is an opportunity to construct a harbor at any given point.

The board reports that there is no harbor at Lake Bluff, although they say that there can be a harbor dredged there for small boats. They also admit that it is 4 or 4½ miles from Waukegan Harbor, now the only harbor which is available.

Mr. DAYTON. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman for any captious purpose——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAYTON. If what the gentleman has just stated is correct, why was there any necessity for the survey of any of these places?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, there is another statement in this final report which calls for attention:

The board has not yet carried on negotiations with the owners of the above tracts to definitely state the price which it would have to pay, nor has it obtained any options.

During the long time which has elapsed, why have they not asked the owners of sites to say definitely what they would demand for their property? Can any man conceive of a valid reason why they have not? It is one of the identical duties devolved upon them by the law under which they were appointed. The law requires them to "ascertain as nearly as practicable the cost for which it (the site) can be purchased or acquired." It is the information which Congress needs.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to take the liberty of inquiring from him whether there is a harbor at Lake Bluff?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No, sir; nor do we know what it would cost to construct one there.

Mr. HAMILTON. I should like to inquire further whether the board, in their notices issued to the towns making applications for the location of this naval training school, required that the school should be located upon a harbor—a good natural or artificial harbor?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not precisely in that way.

Mr. HAMILTON. Specifying the depth of water? Have they not made that a condition precedent?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In reply to the gentleman from Michigan I will say that I have here the first report of the board. In it are set forth certain requirements of the site to be selected. Among these is "convenience of harbor conditions near the point selected." Lake Bluff is 4 or 4½ miles from the harbor at Waukegan.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. VANDIVER. I just want to find out whether the gentleman from Wisconsin is talking to the point of order or whether he is discussing the merits of the question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I had permission yesterday to speak as I am now speaking. Unanimous consent was given. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. VANDIVER. Is the gentleman ready to inform us at this time whether or not he intends to insist on the point of order?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. VANDIVER. Then why discuss the merits of the question until the point of order be determined?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The first statement which I made yesterday, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, was to this effect: That while the pending paragraph apparently left an option in the Government to select one of five enumerated sites in the zone below parallel of latitude 43° 30', on Lake Michigan, it does not really leave that option, but that if it became a law means the selection of the Lake Bluff site. When I made that assertion I was disputed very earnestly by the distinguished gentleman [Mr. FOSS] who is the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and therefore I am demonstrating that the statement which I made is absolutely true.

Mr. VANDIVER. But why not dispose of the point of order first, and then, if the question is still up for consideration, discuss the merits of the matter itself?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why not permit me, as I have the right, and as I think is my duty under the circumstances, to speak as I am speaking, particularly in view of the fact that I have the unanimous consent of the committee to do so? The gentleman from Missouri may be sure that there is no politics in this.

Mr. Chairman, I now invite attention to another statement in the final report which, in connection with the other evidence, is decisive of the dispute between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] and myself as to what this paragraph means. Before reading it, as some gentlemen are now present who did not hear the discussion yesterday, it will be well at this point to say that according to the first report of the board, dated November 29, 1902, the high price at which land was held at some of the sites on Lake Michigan was set forth as their reason for reporting not a particular site, but a zone on Lake Michigan south of 43° containing a number of sites, from which the Government was to authorize a selection to be made.

Then the price of land was too high. Apparently it was still too high when the final report was submitted. For in his letter transmitting the final report the Secretary says that the board has selected Lake Bluff, 32 miles north of Chicago; but he says:

In view of the large price at which land at that point is held by the owners, the board suggests four other sites as certainly suitable, which in their order—

And so forth. The price was still too high. What was the price for these various sites? Milwaukee, $700; Racine, $250; Michigan City, $125; Muskegon, $100; Lake Bluff, $900.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is the price of the land?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the price of the land per acre. Nine hundred dollars was the highest price, and that was at Lake Bluff.

Nearness to a large city—

Says the board, on page 3 of the final report—increases the cost of any property, and there is undoubtedly a limit beyond which the increased cost will not be accompanied by any substantial benefits. As to the amount of land that is required for the station, while 100 acres has been fixed upon as a minimum—it would be desirable to acquire at least 200 acres in order to adequately provide for all needs. The price of the property offered varies from a nominal sum to several thousand dollars per acre.

Mark this—

But not for any one of these sites. It only varies from $100 to $900 for the five enumerated sites within this particular zone.

The board thinks that the Government ought to acquire not less than 200 acres.

From inspection of these different places on lower Lake Michigan—

The board believes that it is possible to fix at the outset a price per acre which would not be desirable or necessary to exceed—

They say that it is easy to fix a price above which they need not go. What is the limit?

The board believes that it is possible to fix at the outset a price per acre which it would not be desirable or necessary to exceed in order to meet all essential needs, and that this price shall be approximately $1,000.

One thousand dollars per acre! That is $100 per acre more than the reported price of the Lake Bluff site, the highest price asked for any of the six enumerated sites.

A hundred dollars more than the price at Lake Bluff! Reflect on that proposition. They do not think that it would be advisable or necessary to exceed $1,000 an acre!

Of course the man who owns the Lake Bluff site knows that he has heretofore asked but $900. He knows that this board has unanimously reported that they do not think $1,000 an acre would be too high for them to go. And the Secretary of the Navy wants the board to select the site. If the board thinks that $1,000 an acre is not too much for a good site, and if they think that the Lake Bluff site is the best site and would cost only $900 an acre, what site do you suppose they would buy?

Is it not a demonstration that this board is to buy the Lake Bluff site for $900 per acre? If anybody can make an answer to that proposition he has an opportunity right now.

Mr. VREELAND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. VREELAND. I would inquire if the gentleman yet knows whether the Chair is ready to rule? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is facetious, but it is not practical. [Laughter.] The gentleman is on the Naval Affairs Committee, is he not?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the gentleman helped to report this paragraph. I do not wonder at his embarrassment.

Mr. VREELAND. I am with you; be careful. [Great laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. All right. I retract that. The gentleman is not embarrassed at all. [Renewed laughter.] He is one of the most sensible men in the House. I have made a convert, and that is worth all this trouble.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. We have his first promise.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The board, after seventeen months of calm reflection, decide that it is possible—possible—"to fix at the outset" a limit of $1,000 an acre, beyond which it would not be well to go!

It is possible to fix a price per acre which it would not be desirable or necessary to exceed in order to meet all essential needs and that this price would be approximately $1,000.

Well, $900, the Lake Bluff price, is "approximately $1,000."

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I had unlimited time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Unlimited time? Under the rule the Committee of the Whole can not suspend the rule of the House, the one that limits the time to an hour. The gentleman has had an hour.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to present an amendment proposing the appointment of a new board, to be appointed by the President. I ask for fifteen minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am obliged to the committee for its courtesy, and I shall ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] have unlimited opportunity to present his reply. He disputed my statement yesterday with a good deal of ardor when I said that this paragraph in the pending bill meant only the selection of the Lake Bluff site.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman—I beg pardon, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If I can have as much time added to the fifteen minutes as the gentleman consumes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I do not. I will yield.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman from Wisconsin thinks the Secretary would pay $1,000 an acre for land at Lake Bluff, why in the name of common sense did he put in his letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives these words?

In view of the large price at which land at that point [referring to Lake Bluff] is held by the owners, the board suggests four other sites as certainly suitable, which, in the order of their desirability, are as follows: Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, and Michigan City.

[Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have said that they recommended other sites. If I had intended to select the Lake Bluff site and pay $900 an acre, I would have pursued exactly this course; I would have mentioned other sites. But this paragraph asks us to appropriate $250,000 to buy 200 acres of land. The board say that they want 200 acres and that "approximately" $1,000 an acre is not too much to pay. Well, as I said, $900 approximates $1,000.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. The board will say it is not too much to pay, but the Secretary of the Navy says that it is too much to pay, if I read this report aright.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Oh, that is the point the gentleman makes—I did not before understand it—that because the Secretary of the Navy says that the price is "large" it would not be paid. The Secretary does not say that the price is "too high," only that it is "large." Mr. Chairman, after this final report appeared the delegation in Congress from Wisconsin met at the Hotel Dewey and discussed this entire subject.

In view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, had suggested to me that the Secretary of the Navy be permitted to make the selection of a site, the delegation thought that I had better call on the Secretary of the Navy and ascertain whether he personally would visit the Wind Point site—something that one of this board had never done, and the other two never except in the dark after lamps were lighted—and if he would go there we would match Racine against Lake Bluff; and we will gladly match it to-day against Lake Bluff in a fair competition.

I saw the Secretary of the Navy at his office. He is an honorable man, for whom I entertain a high regard. I said to him: "Mr. Secretary, the Wisconsin delegation in Congress have had a meeting, at which it was suggested that possibly this controversy about a site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes might be left to you for decision. The delegation thought that possibly you would consent to inspect the Wind Point site and the other four sites mentioned in the last report of the board. You could not see the Wind Point site nor the other sites satisfactorily in winter, especially during this, the hardest winter known in that country for thirty years; but we thought that possibly you might go next summer and look at the Wind Point site at Racine and the other sites before a final decision is reached." He replied: "I do not want such a responsibility put upon me. I am too busy to go out there. I am not as well informed as is the board, and you could hardly expect me to overrule the board which I myself appointed."

Mr. Chairman, nobody knows that better than the gentleman from Illinois, who has just propounded that question to me. He knows that the Secretary of the Navy could not consistently overrule the findings of his own board. Could he? Everybody understands just what there is in the question of the gentleman from Illinois. It is this board which is to make the selection. Here is what the Secretary of the Navy said when he sent their first report to this House:

Pending that submission—

That is, the submission of the final report—

I have the honor to recommend that Congress authorize the establishment of the naval training station upon Lake Michigan, within the region approved by the board, and that an appropriation of $250,000 for the purchase of land be made, and that the determination of the exact site be left to the discretion of the existing board.

The Secretary of the Navy officially recommended that the selection of the site be left to the existing board, and personally to me said that the responsibility ought not to be devolved upon him. Therefore it is perfectly plain that this paragraph means that the board is simply to name a site for the Secretary to purchase. They have already selected it. Their choice is Lake Bluff. Congress knows that it is held at $900 per acre. Congress knows also that the board is perfectly willing to pay at that rate, because it has expressly reported that its limit is $1,000 an acre. Lake Bluff would be selected, although Congress knows that, according to the testimony of the senior member of the board, Wind Point site is of equal merit and is held at a far less price.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH rose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. I am opposed to this paragraph because, while it pretends to leave an opportunity for a fair contest between sites and also an option to the Government, it practically does nothing of that kind. I am not opposed to the paragraph because the Lake Bluff site is in the district represented by the gentleman from Illinois. I am opposed to it because the splendid site at Wind Point has had nothing like a fair chance. I am opposed to it because this board, which was commanded to submit detailed information to the House, comes here after a [illegible] months without having asked owners to set definite selling prices on their respective sites.

I am opposed to it because we have not the detailed information to which we are entitled before voting away the public money. I am opposed to it because I do not want oftener than is absolutely necessary to vote into the hands of an executive officer a lump sum of public money, to be expended in his discretion. That sort of policy is largely responsible for the present scandals in the Post-Office Department.

Great sums of money, hundreds of thousands of dollars, turned over to men to buy property at any price that they may see fit to pay. Is Congress unnecessarily to sanction that system by enacting this paragraph into law?

Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I shall offer will provide for an entirely new board, to be appointed by the President, none of whose members shall reside in any State bordering upon the Great Lakes. I shall offer it at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I desire to be heard in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be accorded an opportunity to answer the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois have unlimited time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he desires more than an hour?

Mr. FOSS. I think not; perhaps half of it.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I suggest that the time be limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to address the committee for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, before answering the gentleman from Wisconsin specifically upon certain points, I desire to make a brief statement of what has been done with reference to a training station on the Great Lakes.

The father of the idea was Commander Hawley. During the Spanish-American war he was in charge of the recruiting from the Middle West. He came before the committee and recommended that a naval station be established on the Great Lakes.

Now, it is barely possible that some one may not know what a naval training station is. We have two in this country, one at Yerba Buena Island, San Francisco Bay, and the other at Newport. There we train the boys that go into the Navy to become landsmen and seamen and to become officers afterwards.

To-day it is the pride of the American Navy that a boy can go from the lowest grade up to that of Admiral. He does not have to go to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, but it is possible for him to go to the training school and acquire knowledge and information so that he may go up through the ranks until he becomes a commissioned officer in the United States Navy.

Now, the Navy Department recommended the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes, and Commander Hawley sent us a provision providing for a board of naval officers to examine the sites along the Great Lakes and report to Congress, which was incorporated in last year's bill and became law.

That board was appointed, and who was upon that board? Admiral Taylor, the ranking chief of the bureaus in the Navy Department, Commander Winslow, and Mr. Rosseau, one of the brightest men in the civil engineer corps—a splendid board. That board investigated the Lakes, and you will find here, in a very able and exhaustive report, a complete statement of what they did. I trust every gentleman on the floor of this House will send for this document and read it. There has never come from any department of the Government a more thorough and exhaustive statement of a proposition than is submitted by this board.

Now, what did this board say? They said they went over the Great Lakes, and they have put in here their itinerary, every day when they traveled and where they were, all over the Great Lakes, along the shores. What did they recommend? They said, first, we must fix the lake on which to place the naval training station.

The Secretary of the Navy in his instructions told them to leave out Lake Ontario, so they considered Lake Erie, Lake Huron, Lake Superior, and Lake Michigan. They decided upon Lake Michigan, and why? Why, for several reasons that will appeal to any man of sense and intelligence upon this floor. They said, in the first place, that Lake Michigan was the best lake because it was nearer to the center of population, in the great heart of the Middle West, out of which were coming to-day the recruits to man the ships in the Navy. Does not that reason commend itself to intelligent gentlemen? They said in their report that on Lake Erie, at Erie, in 1903 there were recruited only 56 men, whereas at Chicago there were recruited more than 2,800 men.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOSS. Let us take the map of that country and look and see whether it is not better to place the naval training station on Lake Michigan than on any other lake. This naval training station, as I said, is to draw from the recruits of the great Middle West. What States are in the Middle West? Ohio is the most eastern State. Why, we are getting recruits from all over. Even Colorado sent us 280 last year. They come from Wyoming, they come from Missouri, they come from Nebraska and from Kansas, and this board said, "Let us put this station—where?—as near to the heart of that great section of our country as it is possible to get it." Now, here is the map, and you will see for yourselves what the situation is. Here are the Great Lakes—Erie, Huron, Superior, and Michigan—and, as I said, by instructions of the Secretary of the Navy Lake Ontario was not considered. What is the territory which we are trying to map for the American Navy? Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Tennessee, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, and away out here to this line of the Rockies, and beyond that the boys go to the Pacific coast.

Now, that was the first reason why this board decided that Lake Michigan should be the place to locate this naval training station. What was the next reason why this board decided upon Lake Michigan? Look at the strategic situation of Lake Michigan. There is no place on Lake Erie or Lake Huron or Lake Superior for a naval training station along the American shore which is not right in sight or opposite to the so-called the possible enemy. But here is Lake Michigan, ordained, it seems to me, by the Almighty, reaching away down into the heart of the United States, surrounded on the one side by Michigan and on the other by Wisconsin, and there, down at the foot of it, was the best place in the judgment of the naval board for a naval station, because that would make the naval base 400 miles away from the mouth of the lake, opposite the shore of the possible enemy.

Now, there was another reason why this board of naval officers recommended Lake Michigan, and that was this—it is a reason that will appeal to every man of sense and judgment. They found, for instance, that Lake Erie was closed to navigation—for instance, at Cleveland—ninety days of every year on an average, not in one year, but on an average of twenty-five years. They found, also, that the closed season of navigation on Lake Huron was even greater, and still greater on Lake Superior, but at the south end of Lake Michigan was to be found the only body of water which was open to navigation the year round. So, gentlemen, this board reported that the site of the naval training station should be on lower Lake Michigan, and the Secretary of the Navy recommended to Congress an appropriation of $250,000 last year in order to buy a site. He said in that report that it was recommended that no site be fixed, and why? Because the moment you fix the site up goes the price of land. Therefore he said, "Give us the $250,000 for the purchase of land and toward the development of the station, and we can buy the site for less money than we can buy it if you fix the site."

But Congress did not act. I introduced a resolution in the House for a rule on this subject, but it failed to be reported by the Committee on Rules, and when the proposition came up on the floor a point of order was made against it.

Now, the board went on and made its final report, and that report was sent to Congress this year. It states:

The preliminary report—

Referring to the report of last year—recommended that the naval training station on the Great Lakes should be fixed on the shores of Lake Michigan, below latitude 43° 30'. I have the honor—

Says the Secretary of the Navy—

now to transmit a copy of the final report of the board in which Lake Bluff, which is [illegible] north of Chicago, is recommended as the most suitable place for a naval station. It was stated that [illegible] which land at least could be held by the owners, the board stated [illegible] which, in the order of their desirability, are as follows: Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, and Michigan City.

There seems to be a mistaken idea here as to what a naval training station is. The gentleman from Wisconsin has said it will cost a million dollars to build a harbor at Lake Bluff; but the board says that a harbor is not the first thing to be considered. The board says in its report:

[illegible] important and desirable the matter of harbor facilities is, it is [illegible] which is of the first importance [illegible]

We are relying our men to-day largely upon the land, and it is so stated in the report. A few years ago it was my fortune to visit a great naval training station at Portsmouth, England, and there I saw men being trained on the land. I saw a great [illegible] with the floor laid up as though it were the deck of a [illegible] ship, and on it were guns, and the men were being trained [illegible]. It is not necessary to have a great harbor, and in this report [illegible] Why, you know that under our treaty with England we can not have war vessels on the Lakes. But the purpose of this naval training station is to give the men a military training, and it is so stated in this report:

It should be remembered in this connection that the greater part of the [illegible] young men who are [illegible] and on the [illegible] that [illegible] Great Lakes [illegible] view to preparing them for service [illegible] and the young men will not be [illegible] than about six months.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me just one question—the only one I will ask him?

Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the treaty which now exists between this country and England prevents the putting of vessels on the Lakes for the training of our seamen?

Mr. FOSS. I will state in that connection that we made an appropriation of $200,000 for a gunboat on the Great Lakes three or four years ago, and that boat has not been built, by reason of the understanding between the two countries.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman a moment ago used the expression, "a treaty with England would prevent." What would it prevent?

Mr. FOSS. War vessels being placed there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, will the gentleman permit me to read four or five lines of the testimony before his own committee?

Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (reading)—

Mr. BARRY. Would it be practicable, Admiral, if you had the [illegible] on Lake Michigan, [illegible] Great Lakes [illegible] for the purpose of training men on board?

Admiral TAYLOR. That would doubtless be done if we once got the place and got a little wharfage at which to tie them up to.

Mr. DAYTON. Such an act would not be contrary to the terms of our treaty with England?

Admiral TAYLOR. As I understand it, it would not.

Mr. FOSS. I would say to the gentleman that I doubt very much whether we could put battle ships or large war ships upon Lake Michigan.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We do not want battle ships or large war ships. The necessity for the harbor is the point there.

Mr. FOSS. The board says that the training of these men is largely on land. It is military training. If the gentleman would go down to Newport and see boys trained there, or if he would go to Yerba Buena Island in San Francisco and see the boys trained there, he would see that they are given military training largely. They are taught obedience and discipline. Why, they come there fresh and raw recruits, not knowing much about how to take care of themselves, and there they are trained into men, taught to obey, and all of this training is done on the shore, and about all the exercises which they have on the water is in small boats. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to go on.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I desire to ask if there is any natural harbor at Lake Bluff, or any harbor at all?

Mr. FOSS. There is Pettibones Creek, which comes down and enters into Lake Michigan.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is there any harbor there now sufficient to harbor a vessel of twelve hundred tons?

Mr. FOSS. No; unless you go to Waukegan, about three or four miles away.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman allow me to read the thirteenth provision or condition?

There should be a good natural or artificial harbor, convenient for both large and small vessels, having not less than 18 feet of water, and ease of egress and ingress.

Does Lake Bluff meet that condition?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Read the next point.

Mr. ALEXANDER (reading)—

14. The harbor and channel should be self-maintained, and should not require [illegible]

That was the point that Admiral Taylor and his board dwelt on when they visited the eastern end of Lake Erie, and we had to point them out a harbor that gave them 30 feet of water and anchorage in all sorts of weather, when the wind blew from the northwest.

Mr. HAMILTON. Those were the conditions imposed upon every other harbor.

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that at Lake Bluff, Waukegan Harbor is [illegible] north and the harbor of Racine is 3 [illegible] there.

The great point in this report, gentlemen, is this: The board are looking for men. Men are the essential thing. What we need is men—men to enlist in the Navy, men to recruit, men to become trained seamen; and the board say they think the first consideration should be to locate this place where they will get the most men.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOSS. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. FOSS. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that we are getting a great many men from the city right around in the vicinity of southern Lake Michigan [illegible] for instance, my city—the city of Chicago. Last year Chicago furnished 6[illegible] men. Racine, Wis., gave us 7 men. Chicago gave us more than twice as many men as Michigan. Chicago gave us more men than the whole State of Ohio. Chicago gave us considerably more men than the State of Indiana, four or five times as many men as the State of Iowa, five times as many as the State of Kansas.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The gentleman is speaking by unanimous consent, and I hope he will permit me to ask him a question.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Does not the number of recruits at any particular point depend in large measure upon the maintenance of a recruiting station? And is there any permanent recruiting station in Chicago, or in any other [illegible] Illinois and New York?

Mr. FOSS. The policy of the Bureau has been to send recruiting parties around to the different cities.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am not asking for the policy of the Bureau; I am asking for an answer to the question.

Mr. FOSS. The only permanent recruiting stations have been at Chicago, Buffalo, and Detroit, and in St. Louis [illegible] recruiting parties were this last year sent out to the large cities.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Very well; then another question: Does not the number of recruits from Chicago depend entirely upon your recruiting station and the amount of advertising done there for recruits; and is not this true that in Ohio—in the region, we will say, tributary to Lake Erie—more recruits were obtained last year than were obtained from the Chicago locality, notwithstanding your permanent recruiting station; and is it not true that the [illegible] recruits in 1903 over 1902 was largely in favor of the Lake Erie locality?

Mr. MANN. There were more men appointed to Federal office from Ohio; that is sure.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the provision of this bill provides for the purchase of land and the development of a training station, $250,000. I want to say here, for the benefit of this committee, that this provision was not changed in any way by the Naval Committee. It was sent in the regular estimates by the Secretary of the Navy, placed in the bill just where he wanted it, and there it stands. There it stands, backed up by his recommendation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another thing: This proposition has come here two sessions of Congress practically, and it comes with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Then there is another thing which I desire to call to your attention, and that is that in this recommendation Racine, Muskegon, and Michigan City are in no ways excluded. They come within the scope. They are competitors for this training station, the same as Lake Bluff. The Secretary says in his letter that by reason of the high price of land the board has recommended suitable sites at Muskegon, at Racine, and also at Michigan City and Milwaukee.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask you a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Are you willing to put a proviso in this provision that not more than $250 per acre shall be paid for land and leave it stand?

Mr. FOSS. Am I willing to have put in that we shall not pay more than $250 an acre? Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Or even $300.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. [Applause.] If they will agree to that proposition, I stand for it. Now, I am not urging, gentlemen. I have not in any shape, manner, or form, either by word or letter or by look, in any way expressed my wish to this honorable board. They have seen fit to say that the best site is in my district. Because I happen to be chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is no reason why I should be excluded or that the district which I have the honor to represent should be excluded from competition. I might perchance have brought a measure in here and submitted it to you providing for a naval training station at Lake Bluff; and if I had done it, I would only have been following the course of a very illustrious statesman in this country. But, sir, I say let Lake Bluff stand on its merits. If that is not the best site, I do not want it, because my interest in the American Navy is infinitely more than any local or any personal interests which I may have.

Now I want to reply to my honorable friend from Wisconsin. He made a statement here last evening, and before replying to him I wish to ask my friend from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], in whose district is located Michigan City, whether the naval board investigated that place to his satisfaction? Did they make a thorough investigation, in the judgment of the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for half an hour more.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object. The gentleman refused to allow me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks half an hour more time. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. There will be a lot more objections.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Plenty of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. I do not care to——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for half an hour.

Mr. FOSS. I ask the gentleman from Michigan City to state whether or not the board made an investigation of that place.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the board authorized to make this investigation visited the city of Michigan City, Ind., and made a thorough and careful investigation of conditions there. I was with the board during the entire investigation, and it impressed me as a board thoroughly familiar with its business, intelligent, patriotic, and inclined to do the fair thing. I met with the board, and was with the board all the way along until it did not locate the naval station at Michigan City. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSS. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Chairman asked the committee if there was objection to the extension of the gentleman's time, and I loudly objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to object before the question was submitted to the House, and then waited. There was no objection made, and the Chair supposed the gentleman had waived the objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I had not only objected, but had been threatened with punishment by another gentleman on the Lake Bluff side of this question because I had objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Everybody understood. I only wanted to ask the gentleman a single brief question, and in the most insulting manner he refused.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, I did not intend to insult the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And immediately afterwards he yielded to two or three gentlemen, and I only wanted to ask one question.

Mr. FOSS. I could not help yielding very well; they were right on me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I yield for a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is what I want to ask the gentleman: The gentleman stated that population—a place to get men from—is the important question; that water is not important except for rowboat purposes. Now, I want to ask him why limit, therefore, the location of this training station to a point on any lake? Why not put it down in the great centers of population where there are rivers for rowboat purposes, if it be true that it is not water that is really the indispensable consideration?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, I am not saying we do not need water. Now, the gentleman misunderstood me entirely. I am saying it is not so important that you should have a great harbor, because the training of the men is largely on land. They have boat exercises and——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Rowboats you said——

Mr. FOSS. But they are given a military training for about six months to a year before they are sent down on board ship.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand that perfectly. Then why not go where the lines of transportation are and where rowboat water is plenty, where other people can compete in tendering these sites to the Government?

Mr. FOSS. I know; but can the gentleman find any place better than lower Lake Michigan, which will offer better facilities for being reached from different parts of the country——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Most undoubtedly I can.

Mr. FOSS. Where?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, take Pittsburg, the center of a great system of railroads.

Mr. FOSS. I know; but this naval station is for the recruits of the great Middle West, where we are getting our men. You know, I will say to the gentleman, that probably half the men that enlist are not fit for the Navy. They go out. As it is now we have to send them either down to the Atlantic coast or away out to the Pacific coast and pay their way back again; I mean the men who do not stay in the Navy. It is a measure of economy to have the training station in the Middle West.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You have no system of finding out whether a man is able-bodied or not?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes; when we take him he has to go through an examination.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then why not examine him exactly as they do the recruits in the Army—send them for examination to various points?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, we do that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the whole thing falls to the ground.

Mr. FOSS. No, not at all; but a great many men—I think it is only about 60 per cent of the men who enlist that stay in the Navy.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They do not stay in the Navy, but you do not transport them back when they go out of the Navy because of their misfortune, troubles, etc?

Mr. FOSS. Now, gentlemen, the idea of this whole naval training station was for the great Middle West, and the board said you can not find a place where it would be more easily accessible than on lower Lake Michigan. Now, I want to ask my friend from Michigan [Mr. BISHOP] whether the board made an investigation of Muskegon?

Mr. BISHOP. I would say that the board visited Muskegon at two different times.

Mr. FOSS. At two different times. Did you think from what you saw that the investigation was a good one?

Mr. BISHOP. Why, I had no reason to doubt it at that time.

Mr. FOSS. Have you ever had any reason to doubt it since?

Mr. BISHOP. I have not had any reason to doubt the investigation; I have had reason to doubt the judgment.

Mr. FOSS. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words more. It seems that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], in whose district is located or situated Michigan City, is satisfied with the investigation of the board. It seems that the gentleman from Muskegon was satisfied with the investigation which the board made, although he did not agree with the judgment of the board.

And so it remains that the gentleman from Wisconsin is the only man who censures the board, because he believes they did not make a thorough investigation of Racine. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention of the gentleman to this fact. Upon the floor of this House yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] made the statement to the effect that when the board went to Racine the first time they were met by himself and a committee and that the board did not go within a mile and a half of the site which that board recommended as a suitable site for a naval training station. When he made that statement, he knew whether it was true or not. I have nothing to say. I leave it to the judgment of this House as between the gentleman from Wisconsin and the board. Here is a letter written to the Secretary of the Navy by Commander Winslow, of that board, saying that they investigated every single site that was offered. Let me read it to you:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1904.

SIR: In compliance with your request [illegible] in your letter of this date, I have the honor to [illegible] report in reference to the examination of sites for Great Lakes [illegible] Taylor, Lieut. Commander C. McR. Winslow, and Civil Engineer R. H. [illegible] composed the board.

The board was met by a committee and driven in carriages to the hotel in Racine. Afterwards the board was [illegible] of Racine and several citizens of that city [illegible] to express to the board the sole, a short distance north of the city. The board [illegible] sites for the proposed station and met by the request of the board as the board [illegible] a suitable site for the naval training station. The board inspected this site, and afterwards returned to Racine and to the railway station.

The site at North Point was not presented to the board during this visit. [illegible] passed by in a casual way. The board was in the [illegible] time. It was the first outline being and therefore only visited the site which the committee had [illegible]

The site at North Point been so [illegible] to the board the board [illegible] naturally have preferred to visit this site [illegible] is manifestly the best site for a training station in the vicinity of Racine.

After the return of the board to Washington, the subject of the site at North Point, known in the board's final report as "North Point site A," was taken up in correspondence with the representatives [illegible] the board determined on their next trip to the Great Lakes to visit this site.

The board again visited Racine in October. Rear Admiral Taylor, the president of the board, was unable to accompany the board on this visit. The board arrived at Racine late in the afternoon, and was there met by [illegible] a committee [illegible] to North Point. Owing to the time lost by the committee [illegible] to meet the board, a considerable amount of daylight was wasted in the journey from the railway station to the site.

The gentleman charged that the board did not properly investigate the site on the first visit. The site was never presented to the board on the first visit, and on the second visit the carriage horses were so slow that they did not reach the site until late in the day. The letter continues:

Nevertheless the board reached the site in ample time to have sufficient daylight [illegible] and numerous photographs [illegible] the board [illegible]

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I understand there were more photographs and charts and maps in connection with this site at North Point Site A than there is in connection with [illegible] down to the Navy Department and see the Secretary of the Navy, he will see them there. The letter goes on:

[illegible] board has a large number of photographs [illegible] possession of the board.

Very respectfully,

C. McR. WINSLOW,
Commander, United States Navy.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Navy Department.

Now, gentlemen, where do we stand now? The gentleman charged the board [illegible] duty because it refused to [illegible] the Secretary of the Navy [illegible] Now, who was responsible for that? Was it the board? Was it the Secretary of the Navy? Was it the gentleman from Wisconsin? Was it the Civil Engineer of the board? Was it the negligence of some one else within the vicinity of Racine?

Now, Mr. Chairman, who constituted this board? Was it not an able board? I challenge any one to point out a board more able than this board. Upon that board was Mr. [illegible] one of the ablest men in the Civil Engineer Corps. Upon that board was Commander Winslow, in whose veins flows rich military blood. Every one of his ancestors in the last hundred years and more has fought for his country, either in the Army or in the Navy. Commander Winslow to-day bears upon his body the scar from a wound which he received off the coast of Cuba in the Spanish-American war while cutting cables. Commander Winslow to-day is an able officer in the United States Navy. He is the naval aid of the President of the United States. Who was the third member of the board? Admiral Henry C. Taylor, the man who commanded the Indiana in the battle at Santiago, a ship that fired more shots than any other ship. He has been in command of the North Atlantic Squadron, and is at the present time chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department. He has been president of the Naval War College.

There is no man in the American Navy to-day who stands higher than Admiral Henry C. Taylor. He is at present with Admiral Dewey conducting maneuvers down in our West India waters. That was the board which inspected the naval sites along the Great Lakes and made their report. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the trouble with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is that his particular site did not happen to lead the list.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I wish merely to make one brief statement right there, just a word. I submitted to several interruptions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I never knew, Mr. Chairman, until the gentleman read that letter from the board how they came to do as they did. The board has all of the time been laboring under an entire misapprehension of the facts. Those two sites at Racine are contiguous. They never went nearer than a mile to the nearer of the two, and about a mile and a half from Wind Point. We drove right down to a bluff on the lake, a mile from the nearer site.

A street 60 feet wide runs along parallel with the lake shore. On the side opposite the lake, at that point, there are houses and lots—a part of the city in the Fourth Ward. We stopped there and looked up to Wind Point.

Mr. FOSS. Was that the first visit?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That was the first visit. On the second visit we drove out and showed them both sites, but on that occasion we arrived at Wind Point rather dark. They came on the 4.20 train from Chicago in the afternoon on the [illegible] day of October when the days are getting short. If those gentleman thought that on August 4, on the occasion of their first visit, they saw either of the sites from a point nearer than 1 mile they are utterly and absolutely mistaken. That is the fact. The gentleman, who [illegible] appointed by the Business Men's Association of Racine, and the Mayor, and I read yesterday a letter from two of them stating the same facts.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I must object, as my time is limited and I have [illegible] but I leave that [illegible] say, of men of such high character that [illegible] [Applause.]

APPENDIX A.

[illegible] naval service for the [illegible] Lakes.

[illegible] sary, to be immediately [illegible] in the Treasury [illegible]

On December 13, last [illegible] Congress of the purpose at that time made [illegible] of this act. [illegible] ted to Congress the preliminary report of the board appointed [illegible] provisions of the act, and stated that when the final report of the board was made it would be submitted to Congress. The preliminary report recommended that the naval training station on the Great Lakes should be fixed on the shores of Lake Michigan below latitude 43° 30'.

I have the honor now to transmit a copy of the final report of the board, in which Lake Bluff, which is 32 miles north of Chicago, is recommended as the most suitable site for a naval training station. In view of the large price at which land at that point is held by the owners, the board suggests four other sites as suitable, which, in the order of their desirability, are as follows: Racine, Muskegon, Milwaukee, and Michigan City.

At the present time a large number of recruits for the naval service are obtained from the States of which Lake Michigan is the center. These men are of high quality in every respect, and after one term of enlistment become excellent seamen for service either in the Navy or the merchant marine, and in many cases become well fitted for responsible positions in private life.

I respectfully recommend to Congress the earnest consideration of the report of this board and the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes in the vicinity where with its recommendations.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM H. MOODY,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SIR: The board appointed to select a site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes by the Department under No. 22, 28, of July 3, 1903, has the honor to transmit the following final report of its proceedings and opinions:

The preliminary report, submitted to the Department on November 29, 1903, gave the [illegible] to that time, and it was recommended therein that the training station be located on the shores of Lake Michigan below the latitude 43° 30'. Since that time the board's opinion in regard to the [illegible] has not changed, and it now recommends that [illegible] be strongly [illegible]

[illegible] a site for the general [illegible] to be accomplished. The board neither [illegible] a detailed [illegible] of many elements and a thorough consideration of the various conditions met with in this region. In [illegible] the [illegible] of each one, the board has [illegible] each with the [illegible] given to the different [illegible] of standing by each to some degree. The [illegible] report of the board gave the following as the more important [illegible] requirements that should be fulfilled:

LOCAL CONDITIONS.

First. The amount of land available must be sufficient for all purposes and should [illegible]

Second. The population within the immediate vicinity from which a large [illegible] must be drawn should be large, which would enable [illegible] to recruit as well as to train the men.

Third. The land should be [illegible] large enough to afford [illegible]

Fourth. The land should be high and dry, partially wooded, fertile, and healthful, with a good [illegible] and reasonably free from mosquitoes.

Fifth. The water front should not be less than half a mile.

Sixth. The [illegible] should preferably be on an island close to the shore or on a [illegible]

Seventh. The [illegible] should not be prohibitive.

Eighth. Extensive grading should not be required to secure level ground for drill and [illegible] purposes.

Ninth. Water of good quality should be available in large quantity.

Tenth. The [illegible] should be a bathing beach.

Eleventh. The [illegible] should be served by railroads or public highways.

Twelfth. There should be convenient railroad facilities for both freight and passengers.

Thirteenth. There should be a good natural or artificial harbor convenient for [illegible] large or small vessels, having not less than 18 feet of water and [illegible] of egress and ingress.

Fourteenth. The harbor or channel should be self-maintained and should [illegible] dredging.

Fifteenth. There should be facilities for target practice.

Sixteenth. The station should not be in a manufacturing district.

[illegible] of the above conditions are indispensable, while some, if need be, [illegible] dispensed with.

[illegible] comparing the different sites the relative importance of the local [illegible] to be given. It should be borne in mind that the station will [illegible] and training establishment, and that it should be located so as to afford the greatest number of young men an opportunity to visit it and to enter the service. A site not convenient of access to a large population would be [illegible] for recruiting purposes, and dependence would have to be placed upon recruiting offices that would have to be opened where a sufficient number of young men could be reached. In requiring a constant supply of recruits the training station differs materially from a permanent self-maintained military post. It must therefore be located near a large population, so that it can recruit the largest number of men and boys directly at the station without requiring the opening of recruiting offices in the neighboring cities or the sending of recruiting parties through the country.

In such a location, also, the station will be visited by a large number of people who will thus become interested in its work, and this will not only make it better known, but will tend to increase the number of recruits received. As vitally affecting, therefore, its success, which depends upon a large and constant supply of recruits, and from the consequent lessened cost of maintenance resulting from dispensing in part with branch recruiting offices, as well as from the greater opportunity for making the work of the Navy better known, the board is unanimous in giving precedence to the matter of nearness to a large center of population in determining the location of the station. This is indeed a sine qua non.

4. Nearness to a large city increases the cost of any property, and there is no doubt a limit beyond which the increased cost will not be accompanied by any substantial benefits. As to the amount of land that is required for the station, while 160 acres has been fixed as a minimum, it would be desirable to acquire at least 320 acres in order to adequately provide for all needs. The price of the property offered varies from a nominal sum to several thousand dollars per acre. From its inspection of different tracts in the general area of lower Lake Michigan, the board believes that it is possible to fix at the outset a price per acre which it would not be desirable or necessary to exceed in order to meet all essential needs, and that this price would be approximately $1,000. While this means the elimination of several sites that possess more or less attraction, and which are held to be worth much more than $1,000, the greater part of their value is in a general derived from their possibilities for manufacturing purposes, which is another reason for excluding them for aside from the more or less unpleasant consequences due to smoke and pollution of water resulting from proximity to manufactories, it has been the experience of the past that Government reservations should be established where they will not interfere with or check the growth of manufacturing interests of the commerce of a locality, for as soon as commercial needs become of sufficient urgency the removal of the reservation to some less desirable situation will be required and expected on the grounds of public expediency.

5. Healthful conditions in the vicinity of the station, good water, some reasonably level ground for drilling, water frontage of about half a mile, and convenient railroad facilities are indispensable. A location easily isolated and facilities for target practice are desirable. It would be also preferable that the land should not be crossed by railroads or public highways. The matter of harbor accommodations is an important one as affording opportunity for small-boat exercises and a haven of refuge from storm and ice for larger practice vessels, if any should ever be assigned the training station. However important and desirable this matter of harbor facilities is, it is completely overshadowed by the element of population, which is of the first importance as was shown heretofore. For while natural harbors in stations will add to the attractiveness and usefulness of the station and to the value of the instruction given and to the enjoyment of those undergoing training, this is a secondary matter as compared with the controlling conditions, viz, that the site should be so fixed as to secure the greatest possible number of young men for the country service.

It should be remembered in this connection that the greater part of the lives of these young men will be spent afloat and in national waters, and that the schooling given them at the station is merely preliminary and with a view to preparing them for sea life; that it will be impossible to keep any given ashore, and that a young man will not be stationed there longer than about six months. It naturally follows from this that the important need of actual contact with life aboard ship will still lead to the training station is of a minor nature. The principal functions of the enlisting and training station are these:

First. To get the young men and to enlist as many of them as possible at the station itself.

Second. To give them a preliminary training ashore, so that they may be better prepared to take up their actual duties afterwards in seagoing vessels.

6. With these conditions in mind, the board considers that good harbor facilities are very desirable, this is but the controlling element that should affect to an appreciable degree the selection of a site to the detriment of the important elements.

7. As regards centers of population, the general area of lower Lake Michigan can be divided into three districts, as follows:

First. Muskegon, located on the east shore, extending from latitude 43° 30' to about 42° 30', with Muskegon as a center.

Second. Chicago district, including the shore line of the lake on both sides below latitude 42° 30', with Chicago as a center.

Third. Milwaukee district, on the west shore, extending from latitude 42° 30' to 43° 30', with Milwaukee as a center.

8. It has been stated that the relative importance to a large center of population of the different representations. In regard to the above three districts, therefore, the value of the sites will depend largely upon the distance from the largest center of population in that district, which are respectively, the three cities of Muskegon, Chicago, and Milwaukee. Corresponding with the distance of sites at equal distances from the center of population in each district will pass in proportion with the population of those cities. Thus in the Chicago district will be first, then in the Milwaukee district, and then in the Muskegon district third. Considering all three districts together, the map of the region clearly indicates that the shore line between Milwaukee and Chicago, which is within the sphere of the influence of the great population of each of these two cities, possesses much the greater value as regards nearness to centers of population than any other portion of the shore line of lower Lake Michigan.

9. The preliminary report of the board selected southern Lake Michigan as possessing more favorable characteristics for a naval training station than any other on the Great Lakes. It is densely populated. It possesses great strategic value. The conditions as regards temperature and the period when navigation is closed by ice are most favorable. It is nearest the center of population of the Great Lakes region, and is also in the geographical center of that district. Its shores were therefore examined with great care.

10. As regards physical characteristics the shore line of southern Lake Michigan may likewise be divided into three districts, viz, the west shore, the south end, and the east shore. For a large portion of the distance between Chicago and Milwaukee the west shore of the lake back of the beach is a bluff that reaches in some places a height of 100 feet.

The country stretches inland as a plateau for a distance varying from 1 to 3 miles, broken slightly by occasional narrow ravines running back from a few hundred feet to a half mile or more from the lake. The plateau is wooded for the most part and forms a very attractive country. The Chicago area of such a character that with a moderate amount of dredging this could be converted into inland harbors of sufficient size to afford protection for small vessels. All conditions as regards health and drainage are most favorable. The shore line at the south end of Lake Michigan is in general low and formerly was a portion of the bed of the lake. Toward the east side of the lake sand dunes occupy the shore line and the water is comparatively shoal. In general the sites offered in this district at the south end of the lake, while possessing sufficient height above the lake to insure freedom from sewage, cannot be expected to be as healthful as the bluffs north of Chicago. The whole district at the south end of the lake is traversed by numerous railroads. The most unfavorable feature of the district, however, is the magnitude of the manufacturing interests located therein and the practical certainty that sooner or later the unoccupied land will be very much encroached upon by their rapid growth.

11. The east shore of lower Lake Michigan is lined with high sand dunes, in most cases with little or no vegetation to prevent the constant drifting of sand. This district has the advantage of possessing inland harbors at the mouths of rivers emptying into the lake, which afford ample facilities for harboring vessels in winter and in storms. All the harbors on the east shore of Lake Michigan are, however, subject to deterioration due to the general shoaling in the vicinity of piers at the entrance, caused by the deposit of sand carried by littoral currents. This action is greatest near the south end of the lake. On the west shore it is very slight. In some cases a bar tends to form, due to the deposit of material brought down from inner waters. The only remedy is constant dredging, which the commerce of the ports justifies and which without doubt will be continued indefinitely.

12. In general, the east shore is inferior to the west shore as regards the character of the country and on account of the drifting sand, which would render the occupancy of the lake front on the east shore practically impossible. The south end of the lake at its head is less suitable than either the east or west shores. It is thus seen that, considering the region of lower Lake Michigan as a whole, the west shore between Chicago and Milwaukee possesses the greatest advantages both as regards population and physical characteristics.

13. The following is a list of the principal sites offered for naval training station purposes in lower Lake Michigan, numbering twenty-one in all:

MILWAUKEE DISTRICT (7 SITES).

No. 1. Betula Shore Company site.—Fourteen miles north of Milwaukee. This site is so inferior as regards proximity to center of population to others in this district that it may be eliminated at once.

No. 2. Fox Point site.—Eight miles north of Milwaukee. Possesses very favorable physical characteristics and well situated as regards population in the vicinity. Will be reserved for further consideration.

No. 3. South Milwaukee, site A.—Eight miles south of Milwaukee. Somewhat similar as regards population and physical character to site No. 2, but is inferior to that site on account of being in a manufacturing district, and therefore will not be further considered.

No. 1. South Milwaukee, Site B.—Eight miles north of Racine, 10 miles south of M[illegible] Pleasant and very attractive, but is not so favorably located. Inferior to Site No. 1 [illegible] ile north of K[illegible]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 44.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made and estimates to be submitted of the cost of improving the Pawtuxet River, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, so as to give a channel 40 feet in depth from the head of the cove, 100 feet in width, and with a mean depth of water at low water.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1330) granting a pension to Jerry S. Fish.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 486) granting a pension to Green B. Yawn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7287. An act to authorize the Mobile and West Alabama Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Tombigbee River between the counties of Clarke and Choctaw, Ala., in section 7, township 9, range 1 west of St. Stephens meridian.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement.

The CHAIRMAN. What time does the gentleman ask?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will try to get through in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to address the committee for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, the report of this committee seems to have created great commotion, especially upon that end of Lake Michigan or upon the southwest end of Lake Michigan south of 43° 30′. The contention seems to be between those who are running a neck-and-neck race for a favorable report from this committee. Now, there are others who are interested. A good deal has been said about this report, but a good deal remains still to be said. In my judgment, this board was working all the way through entirely under a misapprehension of what they were bound to do. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs also seems to have imbibed the same idea, the same spirit that controlled the board in preparing and writing this report. For instance, he says that it became the duty of this board to locate this naval station in the great heart of the Middle West. Can the gentleman find anything like that in the statute authorizing the appointment of this board?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I stated that was one of the principal reasons why.

Mr. SOUTHARD. That was one of the principal reasons why, the gentleman says. The statute authorizing the appointment of this committee directs the committee to select a site in the region of the Great Lakes, not in the great heart of the Middle West, not in the East, but in the region of the Great Lakes; and why? My colleague from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a few moments ago asked a very pertinent question. He said, Why locate this great naval training station, if harbors are not needed, upon the Lakes at all? Why not locate it at Columbus, or at Louisville, or at Indianapolis or elsewhere?

The reason is obvious. It is desired in the location of a naval training station to reach a large number of men who have acquired, in as great a degree as possible, what is known in naval parlance as "the sea habit." In this view one who has acquired the "sea habit" on Lake Ontario becomes as valuable a recruit as though he had obtained the "sea habit" upon Lake Superior; the locality where the "sea habit" has been acquired makes no difference. And, Mr. Chairman, the effort of this committee should have been to locate this naval training station where the largest possible number of that kind of men can be recruited.

It is very evident that the board appointed for this purpose did not proceed along these lines. Toledo was, as I have already said, a competitor for this naval training station. The board proceeded in the first instance to determine what it was pleased to call an "area of maximum desirability." It is very plain from the reading of the report what that phrase "area of maximum desirability" means. The commission proceeds to at once eliminate, because of reasons given in the report, which it seems to me are not good reasons at all—it proceeds to eliminate at once Lake Erie and Lake Ontario from all consideration.

A MEMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Not perhaps from all consideration literally, but practically, as I shall show a little later on, from all consideration in reference to this naval training school.

A MEMBER. They eliminate only Lake Ontario.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I know that in terms they eliminate only Lake Ontario; but really and practically they eliminate both Lake Ontario and Lake Erie because of this proposition which was mentioned by the chairman of the committee, the desire of the board to locate this naval training station "in the great heart of the Middle West." That was a new idea—an idea which originated with the board and nobody else.

And how does the board proceed to determine what this "area of maximum desirability" is? I will undertake to show you.

In the first place, they decide that the greatest consideration should be given to population. Harbor facilities, strategy, and everything else must be subordinated to this question of population. And they select several centers—one for the mere sake of form, as is very evident from the reading of the report. One center is located at Erie, Pa.; another at the west end of Lake Erie; another, I think, in the Straits of Mackinaw; another at Chicago; another at the city of Duluth; and they proceed then to describe circles—one circle surrounding each one of these centers, with a radius of 100 miles, and another circle with a radius of 200 miles. And then they undertake to compute the population within those circles so described.

What is the result? And this is a very important point to be considered in connection with this report, bearing in mind, Mr. Chairman, the fact that they subordinate all other questions to the great question of population. And why? Because it is not proposed, as they say in this report, to train these men upon the sea or upon the lakes while they remain at the station. They propose to give these young men a "preliminary" training—a training such as will habituate them as much as possible to the life afterwards to be followed by a naval apprentice or a naval recruit.

Now, they compute the population within these circles having a radius, respectively, of 100 miles and of 200 miles. They find that the circle having Chicago as a center has more population, taking either the radius of 100 miles or the radius of 200 miles, than any other circle they have described.

But, Mr. Chairman, observe now upon how slender a thread this conclusion hangs. In describing the circle with Toledo as a center, or the western end of Lake Erie as a center, they compute the population and make it less than that of the circle having Chicago as a center, with a radius of 200 miles. But in so describing that circle they come within about 10 miles of Pittsburg, but they leave that out; they come within a few miles of Cincinnati, but they leave that out; they come within a few miles of Chicago, but they leave that out.

If they had described their circle with a radius 10 miles greater, then, in their determination as to population—the great consideration in this whole discussion—they would have reversed their conclusions and located this naval training station at the western end of Lake Erie, so far as population is concerned; and that is the controlling feature of the whole subject as set forth in the report of this board. If they had increased that radius 50 miles—it has been figured out by the Census Bureau (I had intended to have the map here)—the circle having the western end of Lake Erie as its center would have a million population more than the circle having Chicago as its center; so that the conclusions of the board would have been reversed. Not only that; they have undertaken to determine this matter by States; they have undertaken to determine the population of "the great Middle West" referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The gentleman would not yield to me, but I will yield to him.

Mr. FOSS. I was going to ask the gentleman whether in the case he has supposed they would have had the population at the periphery of the circle instead of the center?

Mr. SOUTHARD. No; they would not have had the population at the periphery instead of the center. Cleveland is, I think, the fifth city in size; and that would have been within about 100 miles, less than 100 miles, of the center.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] has expired.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I should like about two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

Several MEMBERS. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the population would not have been at the periphery or anywhere near the periphery of this circle. The population would have been distributed all over the circle; and I want to say right here something with reference to the remark made by the gentleman who just preceded me in regard to the obtaining of recruits. He mentioned Chicago as a great recruiting station. I was not aware until he mentioned it that no permanent recruiting station was located at Buffalo. But in proportion to the population last year and the year before, Buffalo, without a recruiting station, furnished more recruits than did the city of Chicago.

The number of recruits obtained, Mr. Chairman, I think depends upon the amount of advertising done and the length of time the recruiting station is continued at any special point and not upon the fact that you have a good deal of population gathered together at any particular place. Those who have acquired the sea habit are willing to travel some distance in order to enlist if they have a desire to do so.

And I want to call your attention to another matter which does not seem to have been considered at all by this board. The Great Lakes form one of the greatest shipping thoroughfares in the world. This great thoroughfare has its termini, as does any other thoroughfare. Its great eastern terminus is the city of Buffalo. Its western termini are at the city of Duluth, at the extreme northwest end, and at Chicago, Detroit, and Toledo, as the case may be. This great thoroughfare may be said to have several western termini, but only one great eastern terminus.

Those men who have the sea habit travel the Lakes from one end to the other. They are engaged in shipping, they are engaged in yachting, they are doing things connected with the water, and they are the kind of men who are desirable as a source of supply for this naval training station which we are about to establish. These men follow the Lakes, and go from one end of this great thoroughfare to the other. So far as that is concerned, they will be recruited upon any portion of the Great Lakes and on one portion about as well as upon the other.

There is another matter which the board has considered and about which I wish to speak for a moment. It is the same thing about which our friend here spoke when he made his tragic rush down to the map that was exhibited in the arena. He says, "Look at the strategy of Lake Michigan." Well, now, my friend, the board itself says this is not a very important matter, and I want to call your attention to one or two things in relation to it. I know of nobody who would not say at the outset that war with Great Britain is a thing that is extremely remote.

If we were to have war with our neighbors on the north, the great predominance of our shipping on the Great Lakes is at once sufficient to render it certain that she would have no business with us so far as the attacking of a naval training station is concerned. The remoteness of any necessity for the protecting of any training station upon Lake Erie renders the subject one of very little importance. A naval training station is not intended for an arsenal; it is not intended for a fort. We are not building a fort; we are not constructing an arsenal. We are establishing a naval training station where men can be given a few months' training upon land, as this report says, preparatory to shipping them to the coast, where they will be placed upon vessels and trained in the sea service. It is for the purpose of getting them habituated to the manner of living in the Navy, and that seems to be necessary.

The board refer to one or two other matters. They speak of a harbor. There are many harbors. There is one locality in my district that I think is an excellent place for a naval training station. It has a harbor on which a dollar has never been spent. The largest boats in the lakes have been going in and out of there ever since I can remember. It would not be necessary for the Government to spend a single dollar upon that harbor if it should select that point for its naval training station. Every local condition and requirement mentioned in this report is fully met by the conditions which exist at that station. Population is in its favor. The only thing that can be said against it, so far as I know, is that it does not possess the strategic points that have been referred to by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee as so necessary for an institution of this kind.

No, my friends, there is a good deal that may be said about this report that has not been said. I have passed over some of the points in my haste to finish my remarks. There is a good deal that may be said about the methods which the board took in arriving at their conclusion that there was an area of maximum desirability somewhere to be found around the Lakes, leading one to believe that a man who had acquired the sea habit on Lake Ontario was not as desirable for a recruit as a man who had acquired the sea habit—the naval habit—somewhere else.

There is a good deal in this report to be considered. It is very technical. It reminds me of the scientific farmer who could not plow except he had a blue print, and that is about the impression gained by one as he reads this report.

When this matter comes to be discussed upon its merits, I desire to have something to say. We are not satisfied with the report. We are among those who were left out when the preliminary report was filed. We were not satisfied with it then, but said nothing. We thought our time would come. It seems so far as the second report is concerned, some of those who have rival localities are not any better satisfied than we were with the preliminary report. We think we know we have got the very best location for a naval training station on the Great Lakes, and when the proper time arrives we propose to prove it to you. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am one who has a special interest in this matter, and I rise to ask unanimous consent that I may address the committee for five minutes, and I will agree not to ask for an extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that he may address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the location and establishment of a naval training school upon the Great Lakes, and I am interested doubly in the establishment of that training station at the right place.

I have read with a great deal of care and thought the respective reports of the commission appointed to investigate the subject, and I agree with the commission in everything it has said and done, excepting the giving of Lake Bluff the preference for the location of the training school. Seriously I do not believe that a sensible person can read the original report thoughtfully and carefully and not agree with the conclusion of the commission about the establishment of a naval training school and that it ought to be located on the south half of Lake Michigan.

There is one objection to the very beautiful site advocated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD], Put in Bay, and that is the climate. The record shows that during the last twenty-five years, and I suppose if it is the case during the last twenty-five years it must have been the same for a few hundred years before, navigation is closed during the winter at Put in Bay for an average of three months each year. The records show that navigation is not closed between points on the east and west shores of Lake Michigan for a single day during the year.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Now, does not this report itself state that the people of Put in Bay guaranteed to keep that port open every day of the year?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The difficulty is the commissioners seem to doubt the ability of the people of Put in Bay to regulate the weather. That is a situation they never have mastered.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It is a situation they control now.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It can be controlled, and has been in Lake Michigan.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe this Commission to be composed of able, honest, well-meaning gentlemen. I have no doubt about it at all. I believe its work to have been painstaking, conscientious, and careful. I believe everything it did is justified by the facts it reports, excepting the location of the training station at Lake Bluff; and I would agree even with the Commission in that respect if there had been a harbor at that place.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If I had the time I would be glad to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only want to ask you what is the difference in latitude of Put in Bay and Lake Bluff?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why, there is not much, if any difference in latitude, but there is a great deal of difference in climate and in navigation. Boats run the year round between Milwaukee and Grand Haven and Ludington and down Lake Michigan on the south.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not running every day.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are running now every day in the year. Ferryboats are carrying trains of cars over the lake. I do not believe the training station ought to be located at any point where the Government will have to incur the expense of creating a harbor, because I have no doubt that a commodious harbor is indispensable to a naval training station. If this station should be located at Lake Bluff, the Government would be called upon to expend hundreds of thousands of dollars in the next few years to construct a harbor. There are a great many eligible points on Lake Michigan, conspicuous among which is the beautiful city of Michigan City, having suitable harbors already constructed, having all the facilities that may be required, and I insist that it would be poor policy to locate this institution at a point where there is no harbor at all, and thereby involve the country in the large expense necessary to create this convenience.

I have no doubt the board did its work honestly. The matter of expense was only a secondary consideration with the board. Lake Bluff is only 32 miles from Chicago. It is a beautiful place in which to live—high above the water level, and an elegant residence locality, within an hour or two's ride of the churches and theaters of the great city of Chicago. It would be a delightful place for naval officers to locate and live. But the question of expense is an important one to the country. Splendid surroundings for naval officers in charge of the school may be a desirable, but should not be a controlling consideration. The institution should be established upon one of the many commodious harbors that now adorn the shore of Lake Michigan. Michigan City has a population of 20,000, and its standard of morals, intelligence, and refinement is second to that of no other city in the country. It offers a splendid site at a low price. It has an excellent harbor and is well located as respects the elements of population, geography, and accessibility. If the board had located the institution at that beautiful place, its work would have been beyond criticism.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent of the committee for a few minutes, in which to address the committee on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. STAFFORD. Ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to address the committee for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to object to the time the gentleman wants, but a good deal of time has been already spent on this subject and I would be glad if he would get through in five minutes. I will not object to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will try to get through in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, coming from the city which has been often mentioned in this discussion and which has been favorably indorsed by the board that has had this matter under consideration, I deem it no more than proper to present at this time some of the merits of the proposed Milwaukee site and, if possible, to make clear in the minds of the Members of this House certain facts which appear to have been overlooked. The gentleman from Ohio has just questioned the desirability of the zone of territory on lower Lake Michigan, which this board has selected because the lake ports there are not open to navigation during the entire winter season. Permit me to say that this board, in their preliminary report, pointed out that only two cities on the Great Lakes—Milwaukee and Chicago—had for the past twenty-five years, during the entire winter season, remained open for lake traffic. Never before in the history of the country has there been such a severe winter as that which we have just witnessed, and yet during all this severe weather the port of Milwaukee has been open to lake carriers.

Continued temperature below the freezing point does not necessarily close the lake ports, but the difficulty that lake traffic has to contend with during the winter season is the large fields of flotsam ice, which drift with the prevailing winds. By all who are acquainted with the maritime conditions on the Great Lakes during this season it is recognized that the prevailing winds are from the northwest, which drive the collecting ice to the eastern and southern shores of Lake Erie as well as Lake Michigan, keeping free from ice and open to navigation the lake ports on the western shore of Lake Michigan.

The report of the board, based upon the records of more than twenty years, shows that the ports on the southern shore of Lake Erie are closed from ninety to one hundred and twelve days in each year during the winter season. Means of access to the station is necessary at all times of the year to afford recruits ease of travel in going to and coming from the designated station, and further to enable the training ships connected with the station the opportunity to cruise and to give needed ship instruction during the entire year. To show that these conditions prevail at Milwaukee and to supplement the reasons advanced by the board is my present purpose in addressing the House.

A cursory reading of the preliminary report submitted by the board will convince any disinterested Member that the reasons advanced for selecting the zone of territory on lower Lake Michigan south of latitude 43° 30' are cogent and unanswerable. No argument advanced here to-day by any gentleman against restricting a selection to this region has in any manner detracted from the wisdom of its finding. If anything, the argument advanced by the gentleman from Ohio who preceded me tends to strengthen its conclusion. The advantage of locating this station on Lake Michigan can not, from a strategic point of view, be minimized. No one can foretell the development of this station and its ultimate value as a base for military operations, should the occasion arise.

Coming to the proposition propounded by the gentleman representing the Toledo district, that the territory tributary to Lake Erie is the best recruiting field for ordinary seamen, I wish to call the attention of the House to the exceptional conditions, unequaled by any other lake port, in the number of lake freighters, which, during the winter seasons are quartered along the many miles of river dockage at Milwaukee. The wintering of these boats there necessarily induces a large number of seamen to remain at Milwaukee and be in readiness when the lake season opens to man the boats for lake service. The seafaring men who have acquired what has been termed in this debate the "sea habit" will necessarily furnish many recruits to our Navy in addition to those who will naturally be attracted here for enlistment from that great supply country, the Middle West and the Northwest.

Not only the opportunity for visitation afforded to lake mariners to visit such a prospective naval station at Milwaukee during the winter season will cause large numbers of these most desirable recruits to enter the service, but the leading position that Milwaukee has achieved in excelling all other cities in amount of tonnage entering and leaving this port will necessarily bring to this station, during the open-lake season, many of this type of recruits which the location of the station distant from a large city as at Lake Bluff, Michigan City, Muskegon, Put in Bay, and other places suggested, would exclude.

Though not certain whether this matter will be settled to-day in the House on its merits or whether the clause making provision for the necessary appropriation will be stricken out on the point of order raised against it from the prominence given by the previous speakers in support of other sites, it is eminently proper that the House at this time, while the question is immediately before it, should have its attention called to the advantages and superior claims of Milwaukee for the location of this proposed naval training station. It is no wonder, Mr. Chairman, in view of the natural advantages that this site at Fox Point, Milwaukee, affords and its close proximity to the Milwaukee Harbor, the peer of any on the Great Lakes, that it should have been designated as one eminently adapted for the purposes of this proposed station.

Following closely the essentials laid down for a site by the board, the location at Fox Point in every particular will be found to fully conform with them. At no place on the Lakes is it difficult to obtain adequate land, but the particular kind as defined by the board is not easily secured.

Having an elegant shore line with a projecting point to shelter the harbor from the usual prevailing winds, and with a low tableland more than a half mile in length paralleling and adjacent to the shore and one-quarter of a mile in width and 8 feet above the lake level, which offers a particularly favorable place for drilling purposes, the site at Fox Point is here backed by a gradual slope 50 feet in height, continuing then as a level meadow land, and bounded by a ravine, thus isolating the station from outside communication, as sought for by the board. This makes the site in its present condition immediately available for training-station purposes, needing only the buildings to quarter the recruits.

At a distance of 7 miles from Milwaukee, connected by railway and electric lines, this site makes it convenient of access for the recruits to visit the city, where they may seek healthful amusement, which is a desideratum, as expressed by the board, and still sufficiently remote from all city life as not to interfere with the pursuit of their training or studies.

Whatever the ultimate action taken upon this matter may be,

Milwaukee seeks not to retard for selfish interests the speedy establishment of this necessary naval adjunct, but is content, in full confidence of the merits of the Fox Point site, to permit it to rest upon the decision of any tribunal.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he may have one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, this morning the thermometer stood at Milwaukee 4 degrees above zero, at Chicago 12 degrees above, at Detroit 14 degrees above, and at Cleveland 22 degrees above zero. [Applause.]

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the committee for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that he may address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, as the expense, perhaps, of fatiguing the patience of the House, I think it my duty to say a few words regarding another location for a naval training school situated in my district. I had thought, if this provision was to remain in the bill, of offering a proviso as an amendment to the appropriation, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, Such naval training station shall be located in the immediate vicinity of an existing harbor having not less than 18 feet of water and easy of ingress and egress: And provided further, That not more than $250 per acre shall be paid for the land for such site."

Mr. BISHOP. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to question the honor or integrity of any member of this board, or of the board itself, who was appointed to make investigation regarding the location of the naval training school, but considering the appropriation that was made and the purposes for which it was made, I had conceived the idea that it would be necessary to locate this training school at some point where there was an available harbor. When I go to the preliminary report which they made, I find they set down as the essential facts necessary for the location of a training station the following conditions:

First. The amount of land available must be sufficient for all purposes and should not be less than 100 acres.

Second. The population within the immediate vicinity from which a large percentage of the recruits will be drawn should be large, which would enable the station to recruit as well as to train the men.

Third. There should be a city in the neighborhood large enough to afford amusements to the boys and men when given leave of absence.

Fourth. The land should be high and dry, partially wooded, fertile, and healthful, with absence of swamp, and reasonably free from mosquitoes.

Fifth. The water front should not be less than half a mile.

Sixth. The site should preferably be on an island close to the shore or on a peninsula easily isolated.

Seventh. The cost should not be prohibitive.

Eighth. Extensive grading should not be required to secure level ground for drill and recreation purposes.

Ninth. Water of good quality should be available in large quantity.

Tenth. There should be a bathing beach.

Eleventh. The land should not be crossed by railroads or public highways.

Twelfth. There should be convenient railroad facilities for both freight and passengers.

Thirteenth. There should be a good natural or artificial harbor convenient for both large and small vessels, having not less than 18 feet of water and easy of egress and ingress.

Fourteenth. The harbor or channel should be self-maintained and should not require continual dredging.

Fifteenth. There should be facilities for target practice.

Sixteenth. The site should not be in a manufacturing district.

Mr. Chairman, considering the purposes for which this board was appointed, they have well set forth the requirements of a naval training school. Now, then, the board examined the various locations and has made the report. They have placed one feature as predominant, and that is the center of population. Then, in order to get the center of population, they have drawn a circle of 100 miles, taking Chicago as the center.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BISHOP. Now, then, as I was saying, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me from the outset that the dominant feature in selecting a site was a good harbor. I must say that I was surprised when I came to read the last report made by this board, when they reported that a good harbor was not an essential feature. Why, I supposed this was to be a naval training station. I was reminded of a little couplet that I heard in my boyhood days, which ran something like this:

"Mother, may I go out to swim?"
"Yes, my darling daughter;
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,
But don't go near the water."

[Laughter.]

They have sought in this instance to locate a naval training station at Lake Bluff, and despite the able argument made by the chairman of the Naval Committee the board have in four different places expressed its preference for Lake Bluff. I have no doubt, and neither can any Member of this House have a doubt, that unless some provision is placed in this bill—if it should pass—the naval training station will be located at Lake Bluff.

Had the circle been drawn 10 miles greater in diameter, Muskegon would have taken the site and would have had a larger population than that inscribed in the circle with Chicago as the center. Muskegon Harbor is open the year through. It would never cost a dollar to dig it out or for dredging, and they can have 200 acres of land at a cost of $50,000.

The water mains are already laid on the land; no grading is necessary; a vessel of the largest size that sails Lake Michigan can come right to the harbor and unload her freight to-day. It is isolated by Muskegon Lake, a mile from the city of Muskegon, a town of twenty-five or thirty thousand people. It is accessible at all seasons of the year, both by rail and by water. Had nature started out to make an ideal place whereon to build a naval station she could not have made a better one than Muskegon. Here is a splendid harbor, an interior lake a mile and a half wide by 6 miles long; the land which they offer is located on a tongue, or peninsula, backed by another interior lake entering into the other; is high and dry, covered with a second growth of young oak in beautiful groves, with open spaces large enough to train a brigade of infantry, and for $50 an acre. The training station at Lake Bluff would cost, for the land alone, $250,000. Here we offer the land, the finest location in the world, on a splendid harbor, for $50,000. Now then, gentlemen, these were the instructions that were before that committee, and I am at a loss to-day to understand how it is and where the influence is that induced the board to select Lake Bluff rather than Muskegon Harbor. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOSS. To ask for a ruling upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to reserve his point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President is hereby authorized and directed to select a site on the Great Lakes and establish thereon a naval training station, and the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of land and toward the development of said station.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made against the amendment. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which contains no appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station: The President is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a board of not less than three members, none of whom shall reside in a State adjoining the Great Lakes, whose duty it shall be to report on one of the Great Lakes a suitable site for a naval training station, and having selected such site, if it be upon private lands, to estimate its value and ascertain as nearly as possible the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and to make a full and detailed report of their actions and proceedings to the President, who shall transmit such report, with his recommendations thereon, to Congress for its action; and to defray the expenses of said board the sum of $[illegible], or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, Such naval training station shall be located in the immediate vicinity of an existing harbor having not less than 18 feet of water and easy of ingress and egress: And provided further, That not more than $250 per acre shall be paid for the land for such site.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. My inquiry is as to what specific proposition the amendment last offered applies.

The CHAIRMAN. To the one that went out, the Chair thinks. [Laughter.] The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval magazine, New England: For the purchase of land for a site for a naval magazine on or near the New England coast, north of Cape Cod, and toward the erection thereon of the necessary buildings, of inclosing said grounds of grading and filling in of building roads and walks of the improvement of the water front, of the necessary wharves and cranes, of railroad [illegible] stock for fuel, service, of fire and water services, and of the purchase of [illegible] $20,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, and the Secretary of the Navy may employ, and pay out of the appropriation herein [illegible] such additional expert aids, surveyors, [illegible] for the purpose aforesaid, not to exceed [illegible] dollars. That the total cost of the improvement, including the purchase of the property, shall not exceed the sum of $[illegible], and provided further, that the Secretary of the Navy may, at a fair [illegible] and proceed to institute proceedings for the condemnation of such part or parts thereof as may be necessary, and [illegible] that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to institute proceedings for the condemnation of such part or parts thereof as may be necessary, and [illegible] that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to [illegible] the practicability of [illegible] the new buildings for the New England coast is ready to be occupied, and to sell at public auction or private sale, as may appear to be advantageous to the Government, the present magazine and the land, or a portion thereof, the proceeds thereof to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on this section, to find out whether there is any law authorizing it or not. It reads as though it were a new enterprise entirely. Therefore I make the point of order to that part of the section—at any rate from line 11 on page 38 down to line 8 on page 39—as being new legislation. It is a provision for the purchase of land for a site for a naval magazine.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Georgia will reserve his point of order until an explanation can be made.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if it is desired by the gentleman from Massachusetts that the point of order be reserved that he may be heard, I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I trust, after the explanation which I shall give, the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his point of order entirely. The facts in this case are as follows: There is a small naval magazine in the city of Chelsea. It is in a very thickly settled territory. Within perhaps a square mile of this magazine there are from forty to fifty thousand people residing. In addition a large coking plant—an establishment costing $2,000,000, running day and night, manufacturing coke and gas—has been located within twelve hundred feet of the magazine; so that to-day the magazine, as present existing, and the only one which the Navy Department has on the New England coast north of Cape Cod, is a source of imminent and grave danger to a great many people. Not only that, the magazine is small, it is obsolete, and it is entirely inadequate to the needs of the Navy Department.

By previous legislation this Congress has authorized an examination of and a report upon a new and suitable site; and in pursuance of that report this provision has been inserted in the bill. The gentleman from Georgia will note a provision here that the land inclosing the present obsolete magazine shall be sold as soon as a new magazine has been provided. I am not an expert on land values, but, in my opinion—and I have some familiarity with the location of the old magazine—that land will bring almost, if not fully, enough to pay for the entire cost of the new magazine.

The board that has looked into this proposition has done its work with great thoroughness; has made a report to the Secretary of the Navy and to Congress that the site selected is inclosed by a range of hills, isolating it from the surrounding country so that in case of explosion the safety of the people and property in the neighborhood will not be endangered. The location is secure from attack by armed vessels, and is far enough from sea to render bombardment futile. Its area and boundaries forbid the proximity of dangerous or objectionable neighbors.

But more than that, Mr. Chairman, it is a grave question whether the Navy Department can secure anywhere else on the New England coast a suitable site that will combine all the elements of safety and desirability that this site presents for the amount of money with which this site can be purchased at the present time. And it is a matter of business economy for the Government to take steps at once to secure the site that this board has reported upon. That site can be secured at not exceeding $70,000 at the present time. If time is allowed to run on there is no telling what speculators may do in the way of enhancing the value of the land. I trust the gentleman from Georgia, after this explanation, will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion that I withdraw the point of order virtually admits that the point is good and that this proposition has no place properly in this bill. So long as we have a rule forbidding legislation upon appropriation bills, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, public works, Bureau of Ordnance, $318,900.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to call attention to the fact that as the provision for the New England naval magazine has been struck out, this total ought to be corrected. I ask that the Clerk, after ascertaining the proper sum, may make the necessary correction.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAYTON. I call attention also to the fact that the total named in the first paragraph on page 38, $291,125, should be corrected because of the item providing for a naval training station on the Great Lakes.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the Clerk will make the necessary correction.

Mr. DAYTON. It is suggested to me that by unanimous consent the Clerk be directed to correct the totals in all cases of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GROSVENOR). The gentleman from West Virginia asks that all totals in this bill, where changes have been made in the aggregate amounts, be corrected without formal motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of commuted rations: For the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to engage in the transportation of officers' commutation of rations and commuted rations of the Navy and Marines, upon written orders issued in advance by the Secretary of the Navy, or under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, or upon the expiration of leave of absence, or when ordered to sea, or upon the expiration of the term of service of commissioned officers, $[illegible].

Mr. RIXEY. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That the sum [illegible] for payment for a supply of fuel for the Naval Academy and Marine Barracks at Annapolis, Md., and Lake Bluff, Ill., and shall be available until used, and appropriations to pass as soon as practicable.

Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DAYTON. I think there is no objection to that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to officers of marines, in lieu of rations, upon orders issued by the Secretary of the Navy, or under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, for officers on sea duty, under their commanding officers, or when ordered to sea, or upon the expiration of leave of absence from vessels to which attached, under orders issued prior to the expiration of such leave, or when ordered to duty on shore, and for commuted rations for enlisted men detached or absent from vessels to general stations and permanent stations on land, including travel allowances and per diem in lieu of subsistence, incurred in travel performed under the control of the United States, and expenses in handling stores purchased under the naval supply fund, one hundred, at $2.00 per ration, and two thousand, at $2.[illegible] per ration, $[illegible].

Mr. BURTON. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] temporarily in charge of this bill just what is included in this item of $4,850,000—whether this sum is for subsistence for the whole Navy? Does it cover merely food, or what does it include?

Mr. DAYTON. It covers provisions and commuted rations for seamen, marines, and midshipmen, and stores and commuted rations for the Navy generally.

Mr. BURTON. Then it simply includes the item of food?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. Does it include the transportation of food to remote places?

Mr. DAYTON. I will say to the gentleman that this is for food and for expenses in handling stores under the naval supply fund for these purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman please state whether it includes transportation as well?

Mr. DAYTON. No; I think not.

Mr. BURTON. That is all.

Mr. DAYTON. There was last year a deficiency of half a million dollars in this fund.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.: In general storehouse: One bookkeeper at $[illegible]; one receiving and shipping clerk, at $1,000; in all, $2,0[illegible].

Mr. BURTON. I move to strike out the last two words in order to make an inquiry concerning the Naval Academy, an inquiry that would have come in more naturally on page 36. What is the total amount already appropriated for the Annapolis Academy, and will the amount already appropriated come out of this?

Mr. DAYTON. The amount fixed by the acts of Congress approved June 7, 1902, and March 3, 1903, for the completion of the Naval Academy at Annapolis is $10,000,000. Of that amount I think only about $7,000,000 will have been appropriated, including this appropriation of $3,000,000. We have the absolute promise of those in charge of the academy that this ten-million limit will not be exceeded, and that the academy will be completed under that authorization by Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Does not the gentleman know that on page 36 the language of the paragraph is: "Toward the completion of buildings and for other necessary improvements at the Naval Academy."

Mr. DAYTON. The reason of that is simply this, that we are not appropriating any more money out of the $10,000,000 than is necessary to carry on work for this present year. The total expenditure out of the $10,000,000 up to this date is about $4,000,000. We have authorized $3,000,000 more by this bill, as I understand, making the total, including the appropriation in this bill, about $7,000,000.

Mr. MUDD. About $8,000,000.

Mr. DAYTON. Possibly those figures are too small. It may be that with this bill about $8,000,000 will have been appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. Are the committee to understand that $8,000,000 has already been appropriated and that this is an addition of $3,000,000, making eleven million in all?

Mr. DAYTON. No.

Mr. BURTON. Or that with this $3,000,000——

Mr. DAYTON. With this $3,000,000, $8,000,000 will have been appropriated out of the $10,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. Ten million dollars is the limit?

Mr. DAYTON. The limit fixed by Congress in its last act, as I remember, the act of March 3, 1903, is $10,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. So there are $2,000,000 more to be appropriated after this bill?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The formal amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One professor as head of department of modern languages, to be appointed with the rank and pay of a professor of mathematics of the rank of commander, and to be carried as an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 25, on page 56, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, on page 57, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President be authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a professor of mathematics of the rank of commander, to rank after Aaron Nichols Skinner, and to be an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order.

Mr. DAYTON. I will simply explain to the gentleman that it has been found impracticable to fill the position of head of the department of modern languages except with a naval officer, and it is thought, in order that there may be any permanency in the position, that this head of department ought to be a member of the corps of mathematics. We had a civilian appointed last year and he has resigned. The Secretary of the Navy has sent this to us as a special recommendation. The committee, after hearing had, were unanimous in making the original provision, and it is found that the original provision does not verbally conform to the law. This is simply a change so as to make it conform to the law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not understand the effect of it. Is this appointment made to-day by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes; and he will be, in fact, one of the corps of mathematics, and detailed as the head of this department.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It creates a new office, does it not?

Mr. DAYTON. No; it does not create a new office. It transfers a line officer to the corps of mathematics.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will he be advanced and go onto the retired list?

Mr. DAYTON. No. As a member of the corps of mathematics, when he has performed full service he will be regularly retired, but not until then; but in any event we would have to provide for the head of this department, because there is now such a position.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Have you the letter of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. DAYTON. We had a hearing on it before the Naval Committee. You will find it in the hearings. It has come up since the estimates were submitted.

Mr. BARTLETT. We on this side would like to hear what is going on over there.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the gentleman that it seems to me strange that a professor of mathematics at the Annapolis Academy should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Why should he not be appointed as any other professor at one of the academies of the country, either the Naval or the Military Academy, is appointed? I do not know how they are appointed, but I did not suppose they were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. DAYTON. Any member of the corps of the Navy is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. He is advanced also. Here is a letter from the Department. After a long explanation, the Secretary closes in these words:

The necessity for this legislation is very clear to the Navy Department, and the suggestion of Captain Brownson is indorsed and recommended.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Who is he?

Mr. DAYTON. The Superintendent of the Academy.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is this appointee to be a civilian?

Mr. DAYTON. No; he is to be a naval officer.

Mr. MANN. Is he a civilian now?

Mr. DAYTON. No; he is not now.

Mr. MANN. How much advance in rank does this give him?

Mr. DAYTON. It simply transfers him to this corps, so that he can fill this position.

Mr. MANN. Why, this makes him a commander. It puts him in a different place from what he is in the list.

Mr. DAYTON. The understanding is simply that at this time he is on the eve of being promoted to the position of commander. This does not, as I understand, give him any additional salary, but simply puts him in the corps in the same position that he would have at the present, or within a short time, possibly by the time this bill becomes effective, but because of his peculiar fitness to take charge of this department at the academy, it is asked that he should be carried as an extra number, and put at the head of this department.

Mr. MANN. This is an officer who will never see sea duty, and this proposes to advance his rank.

Mr. DAYTON. No; I think not.

Mr. MANN. Well, the amendment provides for putting him in a different place on the list.

Mr. DAYTON. It transfers him from one corps to another. That is what it does, as I understand the amendment. I will ask the Clerk, in order that there may be no doubt, to read the recommendation of the Secretary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to hear what the situation of the committee is.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GROSVENOR). The situation is that an amendment is offered by the gentleman from West Virginia, striking out line 25 on page 56 and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on the next page and inserting an amendment, which the Clerk will report again for the information of the committee.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And to that I reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Indiana has reserved the point of order.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and one of Captain Brownson be read. They give a full explanation.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 1, 1904.

SIR: I inclose herewith a copy of a letter from Capt. W. H. Brownson, United States Navy, superintendent of the Naval Academy, recommending that a position for the department of modern languages be established, with the rank and pay of a professor of mathematics of the rank of commander, to be carried as an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

The person mentioned in connection with the position is Lieut. Commander Harry P. Huse, United States Navy, now in charge of the department of languages at Annapolis.

It is recommended a permanent head of this department was recognized in the appropriation act which provided for such a position, and here [illegible] the department of modern languages, with a salary of $[illegible] a year, which [illegible] has been now for some vacant period, the position of Prof. [illegible] Mead and is as a matter of some concern to the Superintendent how to fill it.

It is considered in a military institution like the Naval Academy that the head of the department of modern languages not only should be a thoroughly [illegible] and Spanish and be a teacher of experience, but that he also have the prerogative and ability to administer the large academic department of which he is the head. The officer mentioned in this recommendation of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy has had eight years' experience as an instructor at Annapolis, during three of which he has been in charge of the department of languages. He is now a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, which rank he has held and was advanced five numbers for conspicuous bravery at the battle of Santiago, in which he took part as executive officer of the Gloucester.

By the proposed legislation an officer would practically be transferred from the line of the Navy to a position in the same line in the staff, and the appropriation of $[illegible] a year for a civil professor would be saved. As it is proposed to transfer the officer there is preferred an extra rank but in the list of professors to have no effect upon rank in the professors of mathematics who would come immediately before Mr. Huse.

The necessity for this legislation is very clear to the Navy Department, and the suggestion of Captain Brownson is indorsed and recommended.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Chairman Naval Committee, House of Representatives.

NAVAL ACADEMY,
Annapolis, Md., January 27, 1904.

SIR: A question of importance to the Naval Academy is caused by the resignation of Professor Nichols, who has held the position of modern languages.

2. This position has for a number of years been filled by a line officer, the choice of necessity being limited to officers properly equipped. Of late years a knowledge of Spanish, as well as of French, has been deemed essential, and it has been hard to find an officer with the necessary qualifications who was available for shore duty. This difficulty finally led to the insertion of a clause in the appropriation bill for the current year providing for a civilian head of department at a salary of $3,000 a year.

3. Mr. Randolph H. Miner, who graduated at the head of his class in 1879, resigned in 1883 and returned to the service upon accepting the Spanish war, was offered the newly created position and accepted it. Mr. Miner has all the qualities necessary to make a success of his department, combined with the great importance to watch and direct his large financial interests in various parts of a distant a point, and he has proved his capacity in my service. It is with much regret that I forward it.

4. Mr. Miner was so preoccupied for the time that his appointment presented no problems. It would be otherwise with a new man, and there is a great deal of nonsense and mistake. The service is being sadly injured by the belief that a civilian appointee, who is a good man, with strong influential backing, might be appointed, and it is now my duty to get rid of him. Lieut. Commander H. P. Rose, at present in charge of the department of modern languages, has suggested to me a good solution of the interests of the Naval Academy. He has my cordial approval and support. It is that the following clause be inserted in the appropriation bill, such a place of the clause under which Mr. Miner was appointed:

"That a lieutenant-commander may be appointed with the rank and pay of a professor of mathematics, with the rank of commander, and carried as an extra number in the list of professors of mathematics in the Navy."

5. If this were enacted Lieutenant-Commander Rose informs me that he would be an applicant for the position. He is now senior, as an extra number on the list of lieutenant-commanders, and the proposed legislation would merely transfer him to a position in the line of promotion, which, as shown below, Professors Alger and Brooks were transferred to the line at the Naval Academy. He would be the senior of the two, and would accept this position and his appointment would be the best one if it could be brought about.

Very respectfully,

W. H. EMORY,
Captain, United States Navy, Superintendent.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D. C.

(Endorsement.)

Mr. HEMENWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that provision makes a promotion of this officer?

Mr. DAYTON. As I understand it, it simply transfers him from one corps to another.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Would it increase the salary paid to that officer?

Mr. MANN. He is a lieutenant-commander now, and this makes him a commander.

Mr. DAYTON. But in a very short time he will by promotion be a commander. It would save the salary of $3,000 paid to a civilian professor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this amendment, it provides for the appointment of this gentleman as a commander?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And that he is now a lieutenant-commander. Now the question will not be the same.

Mr. DAYTON. He will likely be a commander before this bill becomes law.

Mr. MANN. What is the object of providing for it, if he would be the commander before this bill becomes law?

Mr. DAYTON. Simply to transfer him from the other corps. He would not be a commander. He would be a lieutenant-commander of the other corps, and he would not be promoted to the position he would have had had he remained in the line.

Mr. MANN. Could he not be promoted if he were transferred?

Mr. DAYTON. His promotion then would be according to the commissions existing in the corps of mathematics.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that I am not familiar with that matter, as he is.

Mr. DAYTON. Promotions in the different services depend upon death, resignations, and such things; so that they are not equal. For instance, when there is a promotion of the next in line of the line, there is not one in the staff.

Mr. MANN. This officer is now a teacher at the Naval Academy.

Mr. DAYTON. He is not in a sense a teacher. He is the head of this department, as a lieutenant-commander.

Mr. MANN. What do you mean? Does he teach?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes; to some extent.

Mr. MANN. He is on duty at the Naval Academy.

Mr. DAYTON. He is on duty now at the Naval Academy.

Mr. MANN. Is one class of teachers at the Naval Academy promoted in one line and another class promoted in another line?

Mr. DAYTON. The members of the corps of mathematics are promoted according to the vacancies in that corps.

Mr. MANN. In the corps of mathematics?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes; and men in the line are promoted according to vacancies in the line.

Mr. MANN. This man is not in the line?

Mr. DAYTON. This man is in the line; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Assigned to duty——

Mr. DAYTON. Assigned to duty, because of his peculiar fitness, to this department of modern languages.

Mr. MANN. Would he be promoted as an officer of the line or promoted as one of the professors of the academy?

Mr. DAYTON. He is about to be promoted now as an officer of the line to the rank of commander. If he is transferred to the corps of mathematics, he will then thereafter be promoted according to the vacancies in the corps of mathematics.

Mr. MANN. Then, according to the gentleman's explanation, this amendment will not promote him; it will not prevent his promotion if he accepts the position?

Mr. DAYTON. Substantially you are right.

Mr. MANN. Then, if that is the case, I can see no objection.

Mr. MAHON. It provides in the original section of the bill that he shall have the rank of commander. Why not leave the original section standing so when he gets promotion and confirmation by the Senate he can be appointed?

Mr. DAYTON. The objection is, after the Navy Department had examined it thoroughly they did not think the language complied with the requirements of law, and this amendment is simply in form and verbal changes necessary to comply with the law and means the same thing precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Indiana withdraws the point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I reserve it. I do not care to make the point of order, however, I just rose for a question on the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman withdraws the point of order, I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order, if it is that the proposition is not germane to the text. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

"One battle ship, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful [illegible] the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,400,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of paragraph on page 70, beginning at line 6 and ending with line 11.

Mr. FOSS. I suggest to the gentleman that he wait until the whole paragraph shall have been completed.

Mr. BURTON. I think there are grounds for separate consideration. I am unable, Mr. Chairman, to vote for a proposition which would look to [illegible] and in the Philippines [illegible] accomplished facts, but [illegible] least to the extent of doing away with [illegible] of battle ships at present. I desire no better argument in support of that position than the figures to be derived from a table [illegible] report made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I wish to ask the careful consideration of those gentlemen of this committee, for it will require [illegible] stand their import. It is [illegible] to make three comparisons.

The table to which I refer is the one entitled "The strength of the principal naval powers, number and displacement of battle ships, built and building, of 10,000 or more tons displacement."

The first comparison in the table [illegible] tonnage building as compared with that already built in each [illegible]. The tonnage building in the United States as compared with that of other nations [illegible] a specific comparison of the tonnage of battle ships building. It appears that the United States is building a tonnage of them on [illegible] of that already in existence; the quantity building is 351,210 tons—less than one-fourth of that already constructed. In France the quantity building is 179,649 tons; the quantity already constructed is 576,178 tons, so that under construction is less than one-third. Russia goes slightly above [illegible] tons now under construction, as against 416,178 tons constructed; Germany, 117,745 tons under construction, as against [illegible] tons already constructed, [illegible] less than one-third.

Now we come to the United States. We will take it the other way and give first that which is constructed—[illegible] tons constructed; under construction, 421,870 tons, and we are informed in a footnote that two battle ships, already authorized, of a tonnage, I suppose, of about 15,000 tons each, have not been contracted for. If we were to add these two, the total tonnage under construction would be 447,000, as against [illegible], which includes all war ships of every nature now in existence, and this is true while not another nation on the globe is constructing more than one-half of that which it now has, and the usual average is one-quarter to one-third.

The position taken by me on Monday was criticised. It was said that I was out of line with the Republican party, as indicated especially by the platform of 1896. Is there anything in the Republican platform of 1896 in advocacy of an enlarged navy that requires us in this year 1904 not only to have under construction more of tonnage than we already have but to add to that another battle ship and armored cruisers besides? The gentlemen who take that view are already far too modest in their estimate of the work that they have already done, and it is a very dangerous mode to go when it has to do with the National Treasury. Again, in the year 1896, when this platform was written, the total expenditure for the Navy was $27,147,000; that contemplated in this bill is $57,000,000. Is not that an unreasonable increase?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention in this connection to the fact that there is something in the Republican national platform of 1900 that points toward peace. In that platform there is this statement:

We commend the part taken by our Government in the peace conference at the Hague. * * * [illegible] regarded when President M[illegible] was [illegible] of peace between Great Britain and the South African Republics.

To show that the platform did not contemplate that we should become involved in European politics, I quote the following:

[illegible] we [illegible] the Hague tribunal to adjudge and determine questions which may threaten the peace of the world, we believe the American people unanimously hope that a way may be found, consistent with the honor and interests of both contending parties, to terminate the struggle in South Africa.

That is, between Great Britain and the republics in South Africa. I now take up the second comparison, that between the tonnage building in this country and that in other countries. The tonnage building is, of course, the largest in Great Britain—351,210 tons—but our country is a very close second, if we include the battle ships already authorized, for as against the 351,000 tons there would be 347,000 tons. The tonnage building in France is 179,000 tons. I think it is fair to count in that which is under construction here the ships already authorized, so as to make our tonnage 347,000 tons, an enlargement in this country almost exactly twice as great as that in France.

Russia has [illegible] tons, as against our 347,000 tons, ours being about two and one-half times as much. Germany, which seems to be [illegible] consideration of some gentlemen, has [illegible] our 347,000 tons under construction only 117,000 tons, just a little more than one-third. Italy has 70,000 tons, or about one-fifth. Japan, at the time [illegible] statement was made, only had 10,000 tons, or about one-fifth.

I carefully looked over, last evening, the budget accounts of the leading nations of Europe to find how their expenses for the navy compared with ours. This bill contemplates the expenditure of not less than $[illegible] during the ensuing year, including the amount now under construction. Great Britain expends $[illegible] with about $[illegible]. France, however, expends only about [illegible] millions per year. Germany, according to the last budget available, that for 1903, expends twenty-one and a half millions, and ours is four and a half times as much. Russia expends about sixty millions. There has been a marked increase since the year 1900. Italy expends about twenty-five millions, so that, with the exception of Great Britain, we are at least 50 per cent in excess in our naval expenses of any nation in Europe.

I wish, now, in a word, to compare the tonnage of battle ships building, for that is the subject especially applicable to this paragraph. It is shown in this statement that we now have eleven battle ships under construction, and two of 13,000 tons each are authorized [illegible]. The total tonnage of battle ships under construction in Great Britain is 143,000 tons. These already under construction in this country amount to 168,700 tons, and if we add the 26,000 tons it would be 192,000 tons, 50,000 tons more of battle ships under construction in the United States or contracted for than in Great Britain, and yet we are asked to approve of an appropriation for another battle ship. I am told that it will take at least four years to complete those already under way.

Naval warfare is now on, in which it may appear that these mighty engines of destruction are useless as against torpedo boats or the modern methods of attack and defense.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention at this time, right in this connection, to a press dispatch which says that in the House of Commons yesterday it was stated that the programme for Great Britain for the coming year has been reduced one battle ship, from three to two, and under certain contingencies it would be reduced to one, and that that would be laid down in the coming autumn instead of by the 1st of April, as contemplated?

Mr. BURTON. Showing that there, where the naval interests are greater, they are waiting to see the results of this war. In 1897, in a speech I heard down here in Hampton Roads, naval architecture was revolutionized and the wooden ship, you may say, driven out of existence as a force on the sea—at any rate, in close action. Mr. Chairman, under all these circumstances it seems to me that it comes very near to absurdity to claim that one is lacking in his fealty to the Republican party or to any party in giving a word of caution and crying halt upon this very amortious programme. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in whose judgment on most matters I have great confidence, I would like to read to this committee a few extracts from an editorial in the New York Sun, which appeared the very day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was making his attack upon the further increase of the American Navy. That editorial is headed: "It is best for Congress to follow Mr. Roosevelt's advice."

I am not going to read all of it, because there is over a column in the article. I want to read a few extracts.

It says:

"This Administration has been much praised for that part of the appropriation bill which provides for naval expenditures. The bill now reported [illegible] for nearly [illegible] years. The [illegible] amounts to $[illegible], or more than 12 per cent of the Department's estimates.

"Moderation, or rather economy, in naval preparedness is misplaced. It is like [illegible] economy by cutting down the premiums paid for insurance on the house itself.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. Roosevelt [illegible] with remarkable clearness and vigor when he said in his speech at Necessity Near Lake Cosme, Haverhill, Massachusetts, [illegible] outbreak of war to improvise either the ships or the men of a navy.

"A navy's efficiency in a war depends mainly upon its preparedness at the outset of a war.

"[illegible] to be excused as a nation if there is not such preparedness of our navy.

"[illegible] undertakes big task unless it is prepared to do it [illegible] must be treated with no ordinary degree of thoroughness. Every effort must be made to bring it ever nearer to perfection.

"Every effort, and at any cost in money or labor. Since the foregoing words were spoken [illegible] a philosophy of naval increases [illegible] illustration in [illegible] of her war with Japan.

* * * * * * *

"Among the more specially technical and professional questions to which the [illegible] was [illegible] the construction of the torpedo boat in actual warfare [illegible] Mr. Roosevelt became convinced of the tremendous value of the torpedo boat.

* * * * * * *

"You know that [illegible] Congress and to a large measure [illegible] Mr. Roosevelt [illegible] Congress [illegible] Mr. Roosevelt's [illegible] Mr. Roosevelt's [illegible] that emergency was coming.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, which statement does the gentleman think most accurate, the statement of that newspaper or a report filed by the chairman of his committee?

Mr. ROBERTS. I am reading a newspaper editorial, and not comparing the statements contained therein with the statement of committees.

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman vouch for its accuracy, or is it filled with statements carelessly made?

Mr. ROBERTS. I have not examined these figures. If the gentleman has, and these figures are wrong, I will not stand by them. I am only reading this editorial for the sake of what is in it. To continue:

"What an impressive demonstration of the soundness of his conclusions in this respect and of the accuracy of his prevision has been furnished to the world by [illegible] the Russo-Japanese war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to continue for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this committee to one other statement that has been attributed to President Roosevelt. It seems to me [illegible] the American people should tread softly, but carry a big club. And a big club for the American people, in my judgment, is an adequate navy

I believe the American people are prepared to-day, notwithstanding the statements of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], to continue to tread softly, but to increase the size of the club they are to carry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party is in line with an increase in the Navy. As has been stated on this floor by various Representatives of the minority, the Democratic party believes in an increase in the Navy, but along such lines as the needs of the service and country demand. What the necessity for the present increase is and what the needs of the service and the country demand must be determined by each individual for himself.

I believe that we should have the increase in the Navy that is provided in this bill. I believe in making this increase that we should build ships of such a size that they will be able to cope with battle ships of any other nation on the globe. I am in favor of torpedo boats and submarine boats, but if we can not have all, let us have the best and heaviest we can get. The constituency which I represent on this floor believes in the Navy. They have a great pride in the Navy. When the Oregon took that wonderful trip around the Horn and arrived at Santiago, the cheers that the southern and Yankee tars raised when she took her place in the line of battle rang around the world and found an echo in the hearts of all our people.

I believe the people of this country want ships of that type—ships which, when called to undergo a long voyage or to do efficient service in time of need, will be capable of meeting the emergency.

Mr. Chairman, the trouble with this country is that the Representatives upon this floor come here not knowing what the people of the country want in regard to the Navy. They each represent here their individual ideas. This country has seen fit to have at different times expositions which have been great universities to educate the people along the lines of the advance in science, industry, arts, and learning. But, Mr. Chairman, there has been no occasion when our people could be informed in regard to the needs of the Navy or the class of vessels in course of construction to make our Navy efficient. There should be given to the people some opportunity to be educated upon this line. Let us do something to bring the navies not only of this country but of all the countries together so that the people may see for themselves and compare the wooden ships, the first ironclads, and the ironclads of to-day, the great war ships, with vessels of the same class from every country on earth.

Under those circumstances the people who are as anxious as we are to be informed on these questions will see for themselves what is needed. They will determine this question for themselves. They will go home and will impress upon their Representatives their views on this question; and then, coming here, we shall all come nearer to voting what is the true idea of the people about the increase of the Navy, and will not so largely determine such questions as we now do upon our own individual ideas.

There is in this bill a provision for a naval training station. There has been long and varied debate here to-day about the advisability of establishing this training station and about its location. Mr. Chairman, what we need for our Navy is not so much a school for training boys to naval service; they can be sufficiently trained in the performance of their duties; what we need is a school established somewhere on the coast of this country where we may educate a naval reserve. Nearly all the other countries have a large naval reserve by reason of the fact that in those countries there must be compulsory service rendered by the citizen or subject in the army and the navy. This insures a reserve of trained men that can be used at any time. In this country we have no compulsory military or naval service. There should be a school established somewhere in which we might educate men for the merchant marine, give them a technical education, with the understanding that in time of need they shall be used as a naval reserve. In this way, Mr. Chairman, we shall build up in this country a large class of men suitable for that naval reserve, so that if we shall have ships in time of need we may easily man them.

As I said before, I believe the people of this country take a peculiar pride in the Navy of the country. I believe they want to see our Navy equal to any navy of the world. I do not believe they want our Navy increased with the idea of going to war with any foreign power; but they want our Navy so large that in case of necessity there will be no danger to our largely extended coast. The people I represent live in a coast country. They are very much interested in this question; and I feel I should be recreant to my duty if I did not stand here and urge not only the need of ships, as provided for in this programme, but declare that they are in favor not only of the Navy, but an increase of ships of the very largest kind. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. On this question debate is exhausted.

[Mr. VREELAND addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the proposition, it is not to abandon the American Navy, and it seems to me a little strange that the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] should intimate that the Democratic party is less patriotic than the Republican party. I will remind him that it was a Democrat who first laid down the doctrine that no foreign power would be permitted to enlarge its territorial holdings in the Western Hemisphere. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will say to the gentleman that the Democratic party will now and in the future enforce that doctrine.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. VREELAND. I am very sorry if any language which I used could be construed as conveying to the gentleman the idea which he suggests. It was entirely contrary to my purpose.

Mr. RIXEY. I am very glad I misunderstood the gentleman. The question here is simply as to what shall be done on this appropriation bill for this one year.

The Secretary of the Navy recommends to Congress the adoption of the report of the general board, which provided for three protected cruisers, one armored cruiser, and one battle ship, and stated that their relative importance at this time was in the order named. That is, the three protected cruisers as the most important, with the one armored cruiser next, and, as the least important of the three, the battle ship. So that the proposition is now up to this House. If we intend to curtail expenses and keep down the appropriations to the limit now reached, we ought to commence right here and eliminate the provision for this battle ship.

I submit that the Secretary of the Navy and the general board have good reason for regarding the battle ship as not essential at this time, for I find that we are now building thirteen battle ships, while Great Britain is only building nine. We are building more battle ships in number and in tonnage than Great Britain. Russia comes next, with eight battle ships, and Germany and France with six each. We have under construction twice as many battle ships now as Germany or France, and a third more than Great Britain. In view of the great increase in appropriations for the naval establishment is there any reason to charge anyone with being unfriendly to the naval establishment because he favors omitting the provision for the three great ships for this year?

But a few years ago I remember that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois who is now Speaker of this House supported a motion to omit the provision for an increase in the battle ships for that year. And my recollection is that he stated, in substance, that it was his opinion that when the ships under construction were completed we would furnish a navy that would practically be sufficient for this country.

Mr. Chairman, we have a pretty good-sized navy as it is. Under date of March 28, 1903, the Post published an interview with Admiral Dewey in regard to the naval maneuvers in the Caribbean Sea last year. He said:

> They were the greatest object lesson of that kind, probably, that the world has ever seen. It was an object lesson to the Kaiser more than to any other person. Think of it, fifty-four war ships, including colliers and all. Germany could not possibly get a fleet over here that could fight such an aggregation of war ships as that.

The Post then adds:

> Admiral Dewey admitted yesterday that the interview as published is substantially correct, and saw no reason to deny or correct any portion of it, but remarked that he had not spoken in any feeling of hostility toward Germany.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to have about two minutes more.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIXEY. The Admiral said in regard to these maneuvers last year that they furnished the greatest object lesson the world had ever seen, and that one of the greatest powers in the world—Germany—could not possibly get such a fleet to this country. No sane man believes that Germany wants to attack the United States, but the Admiral's assurance may satisfy those who are not sane. We are now doubling our naval power. We are adding to the officers and men every year. We have under construction enough ships to double the Navy, and with expenses for the naval establishment quadrupled within the past twenty years surely the most rabid and insistent advocate of the greatest world navy should be satisfied with the progress made. I support with pleasure the proposition to strike out the provision for the battle ships.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out as many words as are necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Perhaps the most pleasing incident ever seen in this House occurred yesterday, when my friend from Ohio made his heart junction with the peace loving people of the United States. Did my friend vote for the $[illegible] appropriation that makes the increase of this navy a necessity? Did he consider the acquisition of the Philippines with the assumption of responsibilities accompanying them, in the interest of peace? He stands now, by his recent speech, clothed in the garb of George Fox smearing himself with the blood of his countrymen, because he has said in that speech, which we all liked to listen to, as we do to everything that he says, in order that we may be improved by the listening, that those people who would talk in favor of war he would place upon the firing line for the length of time they consumed in the discussion. Allow me to quote him correctly:

> I have always thought there was a rule in this House that when a man talked in favor of war he should be put on the firing line for at least the length of time he consumed in his speech. [Applause.]

[Laughter.]

To stand conspicuously on the firing line means to stand where danger is greatest and where the risk to life is [illegible]. I [illegible] the kindly desire of the gentleman expressed in warmth before the whole country, tend to soothe the passions of men and recommend him as a well-suited ally of the peace-loving people who would settle their differences with arguments rather than with swords?

If my friend had been consistent in his expressed wish to be with those who strive for peace alone, and to them we should all belong, if he had been absolutely consistent he would have found himself on his knees praying for those who opposed the declaration which he supports. He could not have wished that their blood run as [illegible] he would not have wished those opposed to his opinion put in places of danger that their lives might be offered up in place of any [illegible] that they opposed. [illegible] had at that time. I [illegible] of people who have been consistent since the time [illegible] Friends, [illegible] a Christian church known as the "Society of Friends" [illegible] to strife for consciences [illegible] with [illegible] Ohio indulged in his love [illegible], in which he said "our arts and our library [illegible] and if we stand for the principles of [illegible] by cannons and guns we will gain the [illegible]," that he was in a state of mind to join [illegible] war part of which I have spoken I [illegible] heretofore and up to this time within my recollection, without one word of [illegible] because of its willingness to [illegible] increase in [illegible] of our country and to increase [illegible] by arming [illegible] navies armed with modern [illegible]. When I [illegible] seven years ago and was assigned to a place on the Committee on Naval Affairs I [illegible] Government [illegible] by a [illegible] Congress had provided for the construction of [illegible] war, and many of them were necessarily unpaid for at the time I spoke of. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now you applaud your own efforts, but many of you decry ours. I [illegible] work. [illegible] has grown big and [illegible] and is now opposed by a majority on that side of the [illegible] because our continuance in the East depends altogether [illegible] and the effectiveness as well as the size of our naval forces.

The Democratic party would force us from our outlying possessions by depriving the authorities of the necessary means to enable them to stay there. The cause here should be a common one. Why play politics to confuse it?

In 1898 the Spanish-American war was forced upon us. Every method known to man was employed to avoid it. Can any gentleman tell me wherein we could have done more to postpone the issue with credit to our country? After we had fully exhausted our art and our glory we found they were not only justice, and the dramatist had not considered the Spanish temper when he wrote the beautiful lines quoted with such eloquent effect.

Did my friend vote for the resolution that precipitated war? Those of us who did need not hold our heads in shame. While we regretted the necessity, we may commend the result. Did we have too many boats in our fleets the day they set sail to do battle for a cause approved by our whole country? Have we yet forgotten the painful days of waiting and suspense while the Oregon made her way to our assistance? Not an American soul during that period of anxiety found fault with expenditures made for naval increases. The Spanish fleet was not a formidable foe, and we were not ungrateful that she fought aimlessly and without purpose except to escape.

While we are justly influenced by the opinions of our forefathers, we must not forget that they went into the future before the Republic which they made and blessed had fully matured.

As a result of our victory at arms, we have been able to demonstrate to humanity our complete ability to make other republics almost perfect images of our own.

We are not seeking lands in which we can force our institutions, and the proposition to increase our naval forces can carry with it no such implication. I do believe had we had a sufficient fleet of great war ships in 1898 we would have had no war with Spain. Who is there among us who would rather pay for honor than for ships? Wouldn't the people prefer to spend a proper sum each year to honorably prevent conflict rather than engage in it? Do the people believe that our efforts if successful here will have that effect? Can there be any doubt about the opinion of the country upon this proposition to increase the Navy? Does any gentleman in this House have an opinion that the country does not favor it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. How can we get the sentiment of the country? You are not voting away your money nor mine, but we are voting away the money of the people of the United States. How can we learn what they wish? There are but two ways I know of, one through the ballot and the other through the opinions expressed by the leading periodicals. And if there is any satisfaction to my friends to know it, it is a pleasure to state here that I have had within the last five days the opinions of more than 100 great editorial writers of the United States through their papers. How many do you suppose are opposed to the programme as proposed from this Committee on Naval Affairs? It may be interesting to you, as it was to me, to hear some of these editorials read. The Boston Courier, the Cincinnati Telegraph, of Pittsburg, the Star, of Washington, the Pittsburg Gazette, the Buffalo Express, the Brooklyn Times, all advocate the proposed increase with strong and plausible argument. The New York Herald, referring to Senator GORMAN's declaration, says:

> In the same breath in which he [GORMAN] denounced the Navy as top-heavy and expensive he has always favored wise and liberal appropriations for the Navy, and was responsible for Senator GORMAN's vote, for an increase in the cruising and fighting [illegible] of the Navy.

The Times, of Cumberland, Md.; the Boston Globe; the Philadelphia Inquirer; the Chronicle, Portsmouth, N. H.; the Evening Post, Chicago, Ill.; the Republic, St. Louis, Mo., stand upon the same plane of the Herald and [illegible]. We ought not to make a partisan [illegible] here. My friends do not let us come to this; one of us loves his country as much as the other.

Each of us is as patriotic as the other, and none of us wants to fight any more than the other. It has only been a few years since we as citizens welcomed our soldiers and sailors home from an awful war with their hands stained with the blood of their brothers. What would they have done to have prevented it? All persuasion had ceased to be effective and no method remained but the one to which they resorted.

My first impression was that preparing in a proper spirit would prevent strife among brothers and kindred nations. After learning from history of the efforts made upon that great occasion, and after witnessing the results, I have been turned to change my mind, and this is not the only historical occurrence that might be cited to justify my conclusion.

All feeling aroused by that conflict has nearly disappeared, and we have now a common country and are all for everything that will make the country stronger and greater, and let us not get into a feeling of partisanship or spend our time quoting party platforms and party declarations.

But to go further. I have here editorials from the Mail and Express, of New York; one from the Louisville Post, which says:

> While it is true that the Army and Navy have taken some important large sums of money, these appropriations have not been and least the expense of works of internal improvement.

The Chicago Tribune says:

> The American people will not indorse the policy of sacrificing the American Navy for internal improvements, nor is there any such necessity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hands on that clock are tearing along. I can not stop to read all these editorials or even extracts from them, because the time consumed would cover a week. I have here further editorials from the Evening Mail, Galesburg, Ill. Also another editorial from the New York Herald of February 18, 1904, in which it is said:

> The possibility of also Congressmen being called on to protect the now peaceful possessions in the Philippines, or even going to war, into the unknown past, if not on to the threat by reason of these possessions, has frightened the Navy Department a very little. If so remote that an event may happen at the time, the Navy would have to expend a great energy on the Navy for the protection of its interests and for the maintenance of the place attained. Representatives in Congress, who have heretofore been somewhat apathetic in regard to naval affairs, are now taking an active interest in the discussion.

There is a paper in the United States that is as old in its democracy as the party itself, and is known as the New Orleans Picayune. To show you that this is not an issue between your side and this side, it is a pleasure to read for a minute a small extract from a strong editorial appearing in that paper on February 15, 1904. The writer in his conclusions says:

> Money spent on the Navy is money well invested. Should we ever become engaged in another war we are going to have use for a large navy, hence the sooner we proceed to get large navy and accustom the personnel to handling it effectively the better it will be.

Another paper I would like to read from is the Journal, published in Sioux City, in which the writer says:

> When that time comes we want to be in shape to fight to win, and the very best guaranty in that direction is the possession of a navy large enough to cover the commercial points and ready to do business at the shortest time. With this object in view we ought to be absolutely certain that the navy both for increasing the strength of our Navy authorized in preparation on other improvements being, and in keeping the vessels now in commission in effective fighting form.

The motion here is to take from this bill the provision for a battle ship. If any part of this bill must go out, do not let us take the ship from the bill that offers the best protection to our own people that we care so much for, the sailors of the United States. Do not send them out to be needlessly exposed to the guns of the enemy, but put them on the best ships that can be provided. Upon this question there is no difference among naval experts. They are for the battle ship. If they must go, send them armed with the best weapon science approves.

The Republican, published at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has a long comment, in which the writer says:

> Our Navy is our national insurance against war. We ought to continue to build up and increase its strength, and it shall be our policy. The American nation can have no safer guaranty of continuing any honorable peace than the possession of a navy the most well equipped. That is carrying forward the present programme, which we have expected to do, but not saying. But what of that? The answer is, the American people approve it. Every dollar of the money will be expended at home. It will give employment to thousands of American artisans of one type or another.

A similar expression of opinion comes from the Journal of Commerce, of the city of New York:

> A great navy will be costly to construct and to maintain, but it will be an insurance policy of peace and a guaranty against war, and commercial growth and development, gain, wealth and civilization, and not an engine of destruction. War has always been a costly business, and as it has never led to peace, and would be the last approach to objective in protecting commerce as it would have part of the general view in protectorate of the nations, enabling it to preserve a number of peace and commercial growth among the nations of the earth, enhance the resources and its advantages and the power of the face of the globe outside of it. It needs to be prepared and equipped to be respected, but as present we are not and we are not yet at such a point to be our requirements. We need a powerful navy not for war and destruction, but as an insurance of peace and protection.

My friend from Ohio can see with a prophetic eye and can guarantee to this House that we will have no use for ships of war; if he knows better than all the rest of us know, then he may be justified in his position. But wherein is the strength of his warranty? He can not call the advocates of this item jingoes, because, if I remember rightly, George Washington, whose principles he would invoke, while he expressed his great faith in the Divine Power, at the same time told his men to keep their powder dry.

Mr. WATSON. That was Cromwell.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well, it was good advice, anyhow. [Laughter.] Here are further editorials from the Call, Woonsocket, R. I.; the Telegraph, Harrisburg, Pa.; the Boston Daily Advertiser, Boston; the Burlington, Vt., Free Press and Times; the Portland, Me., Advertiser; the Philadelphia Press, with advice well worth the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen, I have in ten minutes given you very briefly the editorial comment found in some of our great newspapers. But if any gentleman doubts that I have nearly a hundred more, let him come to my desk and assure himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss the general proposition in this bill, and I should not have done so had it not been that I have some fear that the very able talk that has been made by the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague [Mr. BURTON], might have a misleading effect upon the House as to the attitude of the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. I am not greatly surprised that my friend has taken the course that he has in opposition to the increase of the Navy. He is abundantly able to explain his own position, to defend himself anywhere, and always gives a reason for any faith that he may have.

Sometime when he has nothing else to do I would like him to explain to me what seems to me to be an incongruity in his career as a statesman. He long ago gave notice that he was opposed to legislation in the interests of the merchant marine of the country. Now he is opposed to the increase of the Navy, and apparently, if he should vote against this bill, it would be a declaration that he is in favor of laying up out of commission a large portion of the Navy. But, at the same time, my distinguished colleague is very earnestly in favor of deep-water harbors all around the possessions of the United States, presumably for the accommodation of other people, so that the active navies of the world can come in and go out, and the active merchant marine of the world can come in and go out, furnishing these great facilities, I suppose, to be emblazoned upon that flag which he so eloquently described as the flag that ought to be put to the front by our nation, the flag of peace to all the world.

I would hardly dig the water deeper, however, to let the enemy's ships in unless I had provided a means of protection for my own country after they came in. Now, I do not know of a single public man in the State of Ohio on either side, Democratic or Republican, who stands with my friend. I do not remember whether I saw him in the convention at Columbus last year or not. I think I did. I think he was there. Whether he was there or not, when the party lined itself for the battle of 1903, one of the most significant that we have ever had in the State, my friend was foremost in the fight, everywhere defending the Republican position, everywhere proclaiming the utterance of the Republican party, and no doubt he carried as his credentials authorizing him to speak for the great party to which he belonged the platform of the convention then just freshly announced at the city of Columbus, and which I have no recollection that he voted against, if he was present. I never heard that he denounced it after it had been agreed to.

Therefore, I assume that among other propositions he was at least consistently in favor of this proposition—a very brief statement of the plank of the platform on which Governor Herrick was a candidate and on which the lamented Senator Hanna was so triumphantly victorious, and here, I may say, as an argument against the very philosophy of my friend:

> As America's part in possessing the parts of the world, we indorse the Republican policy of developing the United States Navy to the highest efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio may be extended fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Ohio has read the Republican platform of 1900, I believe?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Of 1903.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Oh, the platform of the Republican party in the State of Ohio. I thought the gentleman was reading from the national platform.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I am now appealing to my brother——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will state, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to get into a family quarrel in Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, we are entirely too fond of each other in Ohio to quarrel. Sometimes we have to caution our brother against his wayward actions and invite him to come back. [Laughter.] I belong to a church that believes in the full liberty of backsliding and then coming back in. [Prolonged laughter.] Therefore, it is that I am jealous of the position of my colleague, and I know that he is too good a Republican to wage war against the party declarations of the Republican party and against the policy of the Administration of that party.

I have no confidence, Mr. Chairman, no belief, in the gentleman's doctrine that a great navy is an invitation to war. That is the argument of my colleague, that it is a sort of invitation, stating to the world, "Here is our great Navy, and, therefore, we invite you to come and test the question." Now, I think you may start at the smallest boy who gets into a fight with his small neighbor and carry your investigation clear up through the growth to manhood, the aggregation into States, and the aggregation into an administration with a great navy, and from the smallest boy up to the great navy the question involved in a dispute, nine times out of ten, is whether the other fellow can lick you or not. That is human nature, and human nature controls the action of men and the action of nations.

Now, we are told that if we build a great navy and go on to perpetuate the naval question, the foundation of which was laid by the approval of the Administration in which Mr. Chandler was Secretary of the Navy, and which was taken up and enlarged with great intelligence and great patriotism by the first Cleveland Administration, with the lamented Whitney at the head of the Navy Department—that if we do all this we are doing it with a danger threatening us that somebody will want to go to war with us. Does anybody suppose that when President Cleveland figuratively shook his fist at Great Britain when he believed they were imposing upon Venezuela that if we had been a small nation with small power Great Britain would have settled the matter in the manner that she did? Great Britain is no better nor no worse than other nations, but she is particularly careful to see to it that the estimate of guns and men and material shall enter largely into her national diplomacy.

I want to call the attention of the House, for this is a very important question that we are debating, to the condition that we were in six years ago. Some of us wanted to go to war very badly; some of us were not so anxious to go to war. What was the condition of our country then? We are told that for every cannon mounted or in use, every effective gun that we had in all the world at that time, we had four loads of ammunition, and no more. We had just about small arms enough to arm 25,000 men, and no more, and ammunition enough for forty rounds for each one of those men, and no more.

Now, it happened that we went to war with an inferior nation; yet we learned enough to know that if that demonstration of power and belligerency that we put forth to that inferior nation had been made to one of the great nations of Europe—well, I think there would have been several States that would have called out its militia to protect its seacoast.

Very soon after that declaration of war there would have been a condition that none of us would have liked. As it happened, we prepared ourselves at a rate of progress never heard of before. But what did it cost us? I should like to have the gentleman from Ohio, when he admits the possibility of a war with a naval power, take the figures of our purchases in ships in 1898—bought at the best price at which we could buy them—indispensably necessary to the outfit of our small naval force, and then take the figures at which those vessels were sold, and see what it cost this Government to supply itself with an indispensable naval equipment. Take also our furnishing of our soldiers—the accoutrements, the equipments, the camp and garrison equipage, and everything that went to fit out the soldiers in the field. The purchases, upon a basis of the true standard of value, turned out to have cost us five times more than the property was worth; and all of this because we were carrying that flag of peace that my colleague has spoken about to the front.

Who ever heard of one nation in dispute with another nation that ever cared for the "spirit of peace" in which that other nation conducted itself? Russia almost demanded of all the world that we should have an international arbitration arranged for, yet Russia is the very first nation to provoke or to accept the provocation of a war that bids fair to shake the very continent of Europe and reorganize and change its map.

So that it will be seen that after all the argument that disarmament tends to peace is met and overthrown by the learning, the wisdom, the experience, and the human nature of mankind, which recognizes that if you want to have "peace on earth and good will to men" you must have the biggest guns, the finest ships, and the most of them. They are the heralds of peace; they are the missionaries of good will; they are the harbingers of equal rights and fair dealing between the nations of the earth. It does not follow that because the United States becomes a great naval power—because she goes "world-powering"—that she shall abuse anybody; provoke anybody.

The distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], yesterday or the day before, talked about the tendency of the Republican party to go "world-powering," and he said it was sufficient to have a few ships in the harbors of our country, and we could not go "world-powering" if we had those ships. The trouble would be that the "other fellow" that was disposed to go "world-powering" would very quickly destroy those ships. There is nothing in philosophy that justifies the appeal of my colleague from Ohio that disarmament or nonarmament is a proposition of peace to mankind. In taking such a position he flies in the face of history; he flies in the face of the judgment of mankind.

I did not intend to make a party question of this matter; in fact, I was trying to inspire my own party friends with enthusiastic patriotism on this occasion. But I will call the attention of the House very briefly to the ships that were projected and builded by several Administrations.

Mr. Chandler began the work of the new Navy in 1881. He laid the foundation and builded the Atlanta, the Boston, the Charleston, the Chicago, the Newark, the Dolphin, the Petrel, the Yorktown. Then came the type of Democracy—a gentleman of whom I speak always with the highest esteem and regard—William C. Whitney. During the administration of Mr. Whitney we began with the Maine (No. 1). Then came the Texas, the New York, the Katahdin, the Monterey, the Baltimore, the Cincinnati, the Olympia, the Philadelphia, the Raleigh, the San Francisco, the Detroit, the Marblehead, the Montgomery, the Bancroft, the Bennington, the Castine, the Concord, the Machias, the Vesuvius, the Cushing.

There is the longest list almost, all but one, that has been projected under any Administration.

Then comes Tracy, with the Indiana, the Iowa, the Massachusetts, the Oregon, the Brooklyn, the Columbia, the Minneapolis, the Helena, the Nashville, the Wilmington, and the Ericsson.

Then comes the next Democratic Administration, with Herbert, formerly a colleague of ours in this House, who projected these mighty battle ships: The Alabama, the Illinois, the Kearsarge, the Kentucky, the Wisconsin, the Annapolis, the Marietta, the Newport, the Princeton, the Vicksburg, the Wheeling, and the Bailey and 18 other torpedo boats.

Then came Long, with a fewer number even than Herbert's administration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many vessels were there projected under the two Democratic Administrations?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Fifty-three under the two Administrations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where are they all now?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I can not say.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will tell you one thing about them. None of them ever struck its flag to an enemy, and none of them ever failed to accomplish any mission on which it was sent. [Applause.] So our Democratic friends are committed to the new Navy. Do not, my friends, now—I have sufficiently appealed to my colleague, let me appeal for a moment to you—do not forsake the only good thing there is in your record. [Laughter.] Do not go off after a new idol. You started pretty vigorously on the Panama Canal question, but most of you are back on the reservation. [Laughter.] And the dead and wounded will not materially affect the result in the coming election. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FOSS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12220, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

TELEGRAPH OPERATORS IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire a change of reference of the bill (H. R. 2895) amending the act of January 26, 1897, entitled "An act for the relief of telegraph operators who served in the war of the rebellion," from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reference of this bill will be changed from Invalid Pensions to Military Affairs. The Chair hears no objection.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER, LONGWOOD, MISS.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. To ask for a change of reference of the bill (H. R. 12304) to appropriate money to revet the bank of the Mississippi River at Longwood, Miss., from the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for a change of reference of the bill from the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 44.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made and estimates to be submitted for a channel of suitable depth and width from the head of the cove, 100 feet in width, and with a mean depth of 5 feet at low water—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. To ask unanimous consent of the House that those who spoke upon the naval appropriation bill to-day may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And those who spoke yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Accepting the suggestion made by my friend from Mississippi, I will include those who spoke yesterday.

Mr. BARTLETT. All those who have spoken on the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. They were provided for yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that those who have spoken upon the naval appropriation bill may extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. FOSS (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for the enforcement of the law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. COUSINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H.
